FARM BILL VETO TO ROCK G. O. P. IN CONVENTION

But East Believes Coolidge Can Win.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, May 26.—[Special.]—The veto of the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill by President Coolidge in terms which many of his supporters deem unnecessarily severe has upset the calculations affecting the nomination of the Republican candidate for President.

It has joined the issue between the industrial east and the agricultural middle west, and precipitated a conflict over the party platform and the ticket that will rock the convention at Kansas City little more than a fortnight from now.

Credited with 400 Votes.

It has wrought a crisis in the candidacy of Herbert Hoover, the leading aspirant for the nomination, who is conservatively credited with not less than 400 out of the 545 delegates constituting a majority of the convention. But with the farmers accusing Hoover of inspiring two vetoes of the corn belt farm relief plan and of restricting their war time wheat profits, it is evident that if he is nominated it will be in defiance of the corn belt, and at the risk of Republican defeat. The veto and its consequences have produced a situation rendering improbable the nomination of Frank Lowden, protagonist of the McNary-Haugen farm relief movement, although he will go into the convention with upward of 250 delegates.

Can't Repudiate President.

Lowden has served notice that he will withdraw as a candidate for the nomination unless the platform satisfies the corn belt's farm relief demands. But the party could not indorse the corn belt farm relief plan without repudiating the President and thereby jumping from the frying pan into the fire. One of the cardinal rules of politics is that the party in power cannot repudiate its President. Finally to cap the climax, the veto has galvanized into new life the movement to draft President Coolidge for renomination. There are signs aplenty that by the time the convention assembles there will be a deafening chorus of appeals to Mr. Coolidge to sacrifice his own predilections and rescue the party from impending disaster.

The veto has furnished the Coolidge drafters with new arguments. It is contended that, inasmuch as his veto has projected the farm relief question into the election as what may prove to be the paramount issue and has made it necessary for the party to choose between him and the corn belt, the least the President can do is to assume the leadership and carry through what he has begun.

Wet G. O. P. in Revolt.

With Republican revolt brewing in the corn belt and the wet Republicans of New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and other eastern states betraying a weakness for the cause of Al Smith, the President now looms up to the anxious vision of the eastern Republican leaders like a lighthouse in a storm. In every word and action Charles N. Hilles, national committeeman for New York, Secretary Mellon, Republican overlord of Pennsylvania, and National Chairman Butler, who holds Massachusetts fief, express the relief with which they would view the renomination of the President.

Like Mellon in Pennsylvania and Butler in Massachusetts Mr. Hilles has exerted his influence to keep the New York delegation uninstructed and uncommitted without prejudice to any candidate until the balloting begins at Kansas City. He has succeeded to an eminent degree, for, despite the Hoover drive, a poll has disclosed fewer than 30 of New York's 90 delegates committed to the commerce secretary. Mr. Hilles denies that he is against Hoover and insists that he is maintaining an open mind as to Hoover, Lowden, Dawes, Curtis and other presidential possibilities with a view to the selection of the strongest candidate to pit against Al Smith.

Gambling with Fate.

But it is all too patent that Hilles, Mellon and Butler consider the President the only Republican who can assure the defeat of Al Smith. With Hoover or any of the other candidates now being considered the party, from the viewpoint of these eastern leaders would be gambling with fate. Some would carry the west but not the east; others could hold the east but would be likely to lose the west. Coolidge, it is calculated, not only would be

GUNMEN TAKEN INTO BUSINESS FOR TRADE WAR

Law Fails; Cleaner Turns to Capone.

Alphonse Capone, the same Scarface Al not long ago the king-pin of the city's bootleggers and vice lords, has been adopted by the cleaners and dyers business, according to information from the Employers Association of Chicago yesterday. Capone is now the invited partner of a leading business man who for years fought the threats and violence and extortions of racketeers, and who, it is revealed, has decided to hire a devil to fight a devil.

And as a result there is a possibility of a civil war among the factions of the cleaners' and dyers' trade which, according to G. L. Hostetter, secretary of the Employer's association, may outdo in violence the somewhat recent beer wars. Gangsters are in all the forces now drawn up for combat, competition for services of the best gunmen is keen, while the law, it is claimed, stands idle.

Fears Change Is Surrender.

Still more alarming, to Mr. Hostetter's view, is this new tendency of big business, dismayed at the impotency of the prosecutive forces in Chicago against racketeers.

There is much to tell anent the disclosures by the Employers' association, and perhaps the first to be heralded should be the advent of Scarface Al.

Capone now appears as a principal partner in the Sanitary Cleaning Shops, Inc., with a plant nearing completion at Prairie avenue and East 63d street.

The patron of big business introducing Scarface Al is Morris Becker, for 42 years a leading dyer and cleaner in Chicago, who coined the advertising phrase, "Becker—He Knocks the Spots."

Acquires Men at Arms.

Mr. Becker explains, according to Mr. Hostetter, that for some ten years his places have been bombed and burned, his employers slugged and robbed and threatened by lawless competitors. And no one has been punished. Now, says Mr. Becker, that's all over. He has gone into business with Scarface Al Capone. Capone has enlisted his Mafian tribe, including Jack Guzik, exkeeper of the brothels, into the firm.

And since that new partnership became known in the trade nary a threat has come to him, Mr. Becker says, and not even a whisper of a bombing, a beating, or a shakedown. He refers all comers to Capone.

When it was first learned that Becker was opening a new shop, and that Scarface Al was a new kind of "angel" for it, one Max Krauss, legal advisor for the Master Cleaners and Dyers' association, which had been the nemesis of Becker, went to Capone and asked what it was all about, according to Mr. Hostetter's information.

And Capone wasn't cordial, it is told.

Capone Offers a Suggestion.

"Get the hell outa here!" he yelled at Krauss, according to Mr. Hostetter. "You try to monkey with my business and I'll toss you out of the window."

This talk was in Capone's headquarters in the Hotel Metropole, on the fourth floor. Mr. Krauss withdraw, at least so it is related.

Attorney Walter G. Walker, counsel for the employers' association, who was a special assistant state's attorney until State's Attorney Crowe recently discharged him with an excuse of lack of funds to pay him, reported to the association that papers of incorporation were taken out on April 25, 1928, showing as the incoporators of the company Alphonse Capone, 7244 Prairie avenue; John Guzik, 7244 Luella avenue, and Maurice Cowen, 2633 Ainslie street. Louis Cowen, publisher of the Cicero Tribune and professional bondsman for the Capone tribe, and Joseph Lustfield, town attorney of Cicero, appear as directors.

D'Andrea Also Interested.

Capone, according to Mr. Walker, invested $35,000 in the corporation. In addition to Capone and Guzik the "protectors" of the firm's prosperity include Philip D'Andrea of the notorious family of feudists, and Frank Rio.

In a statement made to Attorney Walker and give out by the Employers' association Mr. Becker avowed that:

"I now have no need of the state's attorney, police department, or the Employers' association. I have the best protection in the world."

Mr. Becker told the association that he intended to slash prices, which, he

SYNOPSIS.

Paul Rayburn, a scientist employed by the Grannett company, discovers a method by which he thinks he can talk to Mars. He loses his job, but continues his experiments, and, after financial difficulties, in which he is aided by Theodora Downs, the rather plain cousin of his former employer's daughter, Eleanor Grannett, he gets into communication with Mars, learning, among other things, how to change gold into platinum and how to make women beautiful.

He tries the latter experiment on homely Theodora and she blossoms forth into a beautiful girl. When public announcement is made that he can change gold into platinum it causes a sensation and he is besieged with callers and messages from all over the world. The announcement causes Grannett and his daughter to postpone a trip to Europe and Grannett takes up with his lawyers the question of getting control of Rayburn's inventions.

Later Rayburn astounds the world by conquering the secret of utilizing atomic power, but when a delegation of citizens called on him to use his new power cautiously he told them to reserve some of their surprise, as he had greater discoveries to reveal.

While two million people waited to witness the demonstration which Rayburn had promised, he appeared over their heads in an airplane, which he stopped in midair. While the crowd gazed in horror he released the landing gear and wings and then caused the plane to rise and descend, apparently without any power.

Rayburn is waited upon by a group of eminent financiers who have agreed to offer him $1,000,000 for his inventions, while admitting among themselves that they are worth five billions, but, reading their minds, he laughs at them and leaves them astounded. For his next experiment Rayburn selects Fay Thornton, known on the stage as the world's homeliest woman, and announces that he will make her beautiful. For several weeks she takes the treatments, hiding her face behind a veil. Then, at a crowded theater, she appears unveiled on the stage, revealing a face of unearthly loveliness.

The success achieved by Rayburn in making Miss Thornton beautiful created more of a sensation than any of his other discoveries. He was swamped with requests from promoters who offered him millions, while women, rich and poor, socially prominent and unknown, began arriving in droves. Rayburn, however, announced that he would conduct no more beautifying experiments, but one dowager, frustrated in her attempts to get in touch with him, called up his old employer, Grannett, who, with misgivings, agreed to arrange it so that she could meet the young inventor.

Grannett's daughter Eleanor appeals to Fay Thornton, who arranges the dinner, promising Rayburn not more than a dozen would be present. When he arrives, however, he finds himself besieged by elderly women, the most persistent of whom is the eminent dowager, Consuelo Van Guilder.

CHAPTER XXX.

After an intense scrutiny of the glowing countenance of James G. Grannett seated at the farther end of the long table, Rayburn turned and was about to speak to Miss Thornton, when he felt the compelling hand of Mrs. Van Guilder touch his elbow. Was there no way to escape her persistence! Reluctantly he met her half closed eyes.

"Mr. Rayburn," she said softly, "may I visit your laboratory sometime when you are not too busy?"

"I am always busy," he smiled, "that is one of the penalties of being—momentarily, at least—in the public eye."

"I think we could be very good friends, Mr. Rayburn," she insinuatingly murmured. "I can help you in so many ways, open so many doors for you—social, financial——"

"I am most grateful, Mrs. Van Guilder, but——"

"And you," she interrupted, "if you are the generous, courteous gentleman I think you, you might—Mr. Rayburn, is it possible that you could perform your famous miracle for any woman?"

"Most certainly," he answered. "It is very simple."

"Even I?" she asked breathlessly.

"Certainly. Within a month I could make you beautiful beyond your utmost dreams." Her face was flaming with eagerness, and even had he no power of mind reading, the thoughts that were surging behind that hard, painted mask would have been transparent. He had taken her to the top of the mountain, and shown her the promised land where he alone could guide her.

"But I have no intention of continuing this class of experiment," he added, and turned abruptly to Miss Thornton.

"Do you suppose your guests would mind if I made a little speech?" he asked.

"O, how perfectly wonderful! They'll be overwhelmed." She stood up and signaled for attention. "I have wonderful news! Mr. Rayburn has consented to say a few words."

Rayburn arose. He seemed very good natured. His eyes ranged quizzically along the faces before him, pausing momentarily upon each woman's face, and fanning into flame a hungry hope. When he finally looked down into the upturned face of Mrs. Van Guilder on his right, he flushed with embarrassment. What he read in that mind fortified him in the decision he had come to.

His first words were sensational.

"It may interest you to know that, among other things, I have acquired the science of mind reading." There was sudden panic among the women. "I see some are apprehensive, some doubtful. The lady on my right is frankly skeptical. Yet I can tell her exactly what has been going through her head since we have been sitting here."

Mrs. Van Guilder smiled defiantly. The man was more sophisticated than he seemed. Possibly she had better alter her tactics. All she said was: "Most extraordinary, Mr. Rayburn, also most absurd!"

"Not at all. Have I permission to demonstrate?"

She paused a long second, weighing the chances. "Go ahead," she finally said.

"You have been wondering when would be the auspicious moment to give me the note at present in your hand bag."

Wide eyed consternation, apparent to everybody, blanched her face. Not a soul in the world but herself knew of the note that was designed to lure Rayburn to her apartment. She put her hand to her head. "I feel faint," she said, "some brandy, quick." While she was collecting herself, Rayburn looked down the table to Mr. Grannett.

"Does Mr. Grannett doubt my ability to read his mind?"

Thus pointedly addressed, that gentleman became purple with rage. All his hatred of Rayburn, who had mussed up his life so greatly in the last few months, flamed up afresh.

"This is damned nonsense," he exploded. "I didn't come here to be made a fool of!"

"But you arranged and are paying for the party," said Rayburn.

Mr. Grannett ground his teeth. How the devil did the fellow find that out? Fay must have talked!

"No. Miss Thornton has not been talking," Rayburn answered the unspoken thought. "She is most discreet and trustworthy, and will make you a charming wife."

"My God!" gasped Grannett, stunned to find his inmost thoughts laid bare. The other guests, equally startled, turned to see how Fay was taking it. She was laughing rather hysterically.

"Don't be concerned," Rayburn addressed the company. "The same idea has already occurred to Miss Thornton. In fact, I rather think she has been practicing writing her name Fay Thornton Grannett on a piece of paper in her vanity case."

"Are there any others who wish to have their minds read?" he asked, looking around. There was a nervous shuffling, and a murmur of "No, no!"

"I selected the three I have demonstrated on as fair game, inasmuch as it was their idea to make a tool of me this evening. I must now ask to be excused. I shall probably work the rest of the night in my laboratory on a new experiment, which may be ready for demonstration shortly. And, by the way, I shall positively conduct no more beauty experiments. I merely did it once to prove it could be done. Hereafter I shall confine myself to more serious work. Forgive me if I have been somewhat unconventional this evening. I have had little experience of the social graces."

He bowed and departed, leaving a staring, paralyzed group at the table.

Funeral Rites Are Held for the Late Charles Foss

The immediate relatives and friends of Charles Foss of 1756 Maypole avenue, gathered in the mortuary chapel of Walter M. Pomierski at 1059 West 32nd street yesterday, to attend the funeral of Mr. Foss.

Mr. Foss was 45 years old. He had lived with his wife and children in the Maypole avenue house until May 17 last when he left without mentioning his destination. It was said at the time that there had been a slight disturbance in the uniformly pleasant relations existing between Mr. Foss and his wife but this was never particularly emphasized as it was supposed he would shortly return to his family.

Mrs. Foss Reads an Item.

However, on the night of May 17 the police recovered the body of a man from the south branch of the Chicago river at 35th street. For the purposes of the immediate police records the body was consigned to the county morgue and set down as unidentified. In this situation the incident remained until Mrs. Foss, one day, was attracted by a small item in a newspaper.

This item reported, with extreme poverty of detail, the police incident mentioned above. But it was sufficient to arouse the most discouraging of speculations in the bosom of Mrs. Foss. She made a hasty toilet and swiftly sought out the morgue. One glance at the figure of the dead was sufficient to remove her doubts and dash her last hope.

The Sad Truth Verified.

It was her husband. She summoned her four children. They stood dumbly about the mortician's plain slab and while themselves burdened with a poignant grief sought to lift the burden of woe from their mother. While they stood there the morgue attendant mumbled the official routine of identification. He verified the two stiff fingers on the left hand, a cut on the left leg, a scar on the left heel and the pits of smallpox on the face. Through this dreary ceremony Mrs. Foss could only nod and await the end of the ritual.

Mr. Pomierski, the undertaker, took charge of the funeral for the mourners. And so yesterday the family and a few friends gathered about the bier to pay their last respects.

The minister had spoken some sympathetic words relative to the uncertainty of life and the goal beyond the grave. The undertaker prefaced his sad duty of closing the casket by requesting those who desired to file past and view the remains.

Enter a Disturbance.

Muffled sobs now furnished a requiem subcurrent to the plaint of the organ's soft notes. A shaft of light lent the mellow of eventide through the stained glass window over the casket. The door opened and a man whose eyebrows were lifted in little pyramids of interrogation moved toward the bier and coughed questioningly. Mrs. Foss slowly, then inquiringly, then suspiciously and then astoundingly raised her eyes and stood transfixed.

"Charlie!" she screamed

It was Charles Foss. Like Tom Sawyer he had come back to see his own funeral.

The unknown victim of the Chicago river has gone back to the county morgue.

223 Million Tax Cut Sent to President

With the passage of the tax bill yesterday, congress completed action on major questions with the exception of Boulder dam and the naval cruiser bill, both of which await a senate vote.

Adjournment next Tuesday faces the stumbling block of Senator Hiram Johnson's insistence on a Boulder dam vote and the threat of a filibuster made by opponents of the project.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., May 26.—[Special.]—The house approved the conference report on the 223 million dollar tax reduction bill without a record vote after an hour's discussion of its provisions. The bill is now ready for the signature of President Coolidge, as approval was given yesterday by the senate.

Possibility that the tax cut may cause a deficit was suggested by Representative Ramseyer [Rep., Ia.], who said that H. M. Lord, director of the budget, had informed him this morning that there likely will be a surplus for the fiscal year 1929 of only 142 million dollars.

The budget figures, Mr. Ramseyer said, are based on anticipated revenues under the present law and make allowance for all appropriations of the present session of congress. They do not, however, include anything for Muscle shoals, Boulder dam, or the corn borer bill.

Fear Cut Is Too Large.

Representative Hawley [Rep., Ore.], chairman of the ways and means committee, said in response to questions by Mr. Ramseyer that inasmuch as the reduction in the corporation tax is not made retroactive, the actual loss in revenue during the fiscal year 1929 will be only 145 million dollars. While this total is slightly more than the prospective surplus, Mr. Hawley said that on the basis of the experience of past years, he was confident that revenues would exceed estimates and that there would be no deficit in the fiscal year 1929. The only question, he said, is as to the fiscal years 1930 and thereafter, when the full effect of the 223 million dollar tax cut would be felt.

Coolidge Expected to Sign It.

Representative Hawley and Representative Chindblom [Rep., Ill.], another administration supporter on the ways and means committee, both assured the house that in their opinion the bill would meet with the approval of President Coolidge.

Representative Garner [Dem., Tex.], ranking minority member of the committee, not only asserted that there would be no deficit under the bill but expressed the opinion that a greater reduction could have been safely made. He estimated the prospective loss in revenue after the bill is fully effective at $225,500,000, instead of $222,495,000 as stated by Mr. Hawley.

The Hawley figure, Mr. Garner said, was based only on tax reductions and took no account of administrative changes which have the effect of reducing revenues.

Actuaries of the treasury placed the reduction at $155,000,000 for the fiscal year 1929. The reason for the small slash during the next fiscal year was attributed to the fact that the reductions do not become effective until next Jan. 1.

What Bill Provides.

The bill as it goes to the President reduces the tax on corporation earnings from 13½ to 12 per cent; increases the exemption on corporations with earnings below $25,000 from $2,000 to $3,000; increases the maximum individual income to which the earned income deduction applies from $20,000 to $30,000; repeals the tax on automobiles; increases the exemption on the admissions tax from 75 cents to $3; increases the annual exemption under the club dues tax from $10 to $25; repeals the tax on cereal beverages, and restores the tax on grape wines to the pre-war level.

BULLETIN.

BERLIN, May 27.—Sunday.—(AP)—A report to the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung from Oslo, Norway, said that the meteorological station there had received a message from the Italia at 11 p. m. Saturday night via the North Norwegian Radio station. The message was badly garbled, but seemed to disclose the Italia had landed and Nobile was asking for help. The place or time of the landing could not be deciphered.

BULLETIN.

OSLO, Norway, May 27.—Sunday.—(AP)—At 2 a. m. today the Oslo Aftenposten reported receipt of a dispatch from Vadsoe saying the Italia had called the Citta di Milano, using an improvised radio transmitter. The call was said to have come at 10:05 Saturday night, Spitzbergen time.

[Copyright: 1928: By the New York Times.]

COPENHAGEN, Sunday, May 27.—At 3 o'clock Sunday morning it was reported from Oslo that the Italian expedition ship Citta di Milano and also the Vadsoe radio station had heard faint SOS signals from the Italia at 4:05 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The signals stated the airship was in great danger, but gave no position.

It is now learned that the trawler, supposedly Norwegian, which heard signals from the Italia at 5 o'clock Saturday morning, was an English trawler, the Sea King. It heard Nobile vainly calling Citta di Milano at Green Harbor on a 900 meter wave length.

Amundsen to Head Rescuers.

OSLO, Norway, May 26.—(AP)—Roald Amundsen, veteran explorer who discovered the south pole and companion of Gen. Umberto Nobile on the 1926 flight of the Norge over the north pole, volunteered tonight to lead an expedition being prepared by the Norwegian government to search for the dirigible Italia, which has been missing, with her crew of 16 men, in the arctic regions for nearly two days.

Capt. George H. Wilkins, who recently with Carl B. Eielson, completed a flight from Alaska to Spitzbergen, tonight anonunced his willingness to go in search of the airship. He said his plane was at Bergen and it would take ten days to get it to Spitzbergen and ready to start.

Lieut. Eielson also declared he was ready to join the expedition. Recalling his three years' experience as a flyer over polar regions, Eielson said that if the Italia has been forced down hundreds of miles from home he could hope for members of the crew only quick and merciful death.

Plans Relief by Planes.

Capt. Hjalmar Riiser-Larsen, Norwegian aviator, who was with Gen. Nobile in the dirigible Norge, announced tonight that he will immediately study the possibilities of carrying a relief expedition in airplanes.

Capt. Otto Sverdrup, another noted arctic explorer and head of several rescue expeditions during the last twenty years, will help Capt. Amundsen arrange the search.

The Norwegian government tonight ordered the ice ship Hobby, renowned for many years in polar voyaging, to sail northward tomorrow from Tromso and help search for the dirigible Italia.

Decision of the government to ask the aid of Amundsen and Sverdrup followed the receipt of a request by the Italian minister in Oslo to the Norwegian government for assistance.

Amundsen and Nobile Foes.

It was in dramatic circumstances that Amundsen announced his determination to lead an expedition in relief of the Italian airman, with whom he has been at odds ever since the famous flight of the Norge to the north pole in 1926.

After the flight, the published memoirs of the two men showed that all had not been smooth between them, Nobile as the builder and captain of the Norge referring to Amundsen as merely a passenger, while Amundsen accused the Italian flier with "attempting to appropriate for Italy the last great undertaking" of his life, the flight of the dirigible over the north pole.

Amundsen's announcement came at a luncheon given in honor of Capt. Wilkins and Lieut. Eielson. The affair began in a mood appropriate to rejoicing over the feat for the guest aviators. But early in the proceedings a telegram from Spitzbergen reported the ominous silence which enshrouds the Italia.

To the luncheon company this silence spoke in loud tones of the menace of gripping winds against the ice laden dirigible. The meeting quickly became grave. There were scores present whose own daring experiences made it easy for them to comprehend the seriousness of Gen. Nobile's situation.

Before this company Amundsen promptly grasped the responsibility of searching for the Italian expedition. The significance of this was not lost upon the other guests, who readily recalled the coolness which characterized Amundsen's relations with Gen. Nobile after the flight of the Norge.

The message from the north informed the luncheon company that the crew of the supply ship, Citta di Milano, was working at full pressure in preparation for starting a search. It added, however, that they had no information to guide them in choosing the direction in which their ship should proceed.

Ready to Start Right Away.

Later the lunchers heard that the Norwegian government had promptly heeded the request of the Italian minister that it give all possible aid to the search for the aerial explorers.

The Norwegian authorities at once named Amundsen and Sverdrup as eminently qualified to lead a rescue expedition. All eyes turned upon these bronzed travelers of the northern seas. There was a moment of silence. Then Amundsen, who scarcely seemed to hesitate, called out in his deep vibrant voice:

"I am ready to start right away."

Cheer Explorer's Offer.

This revelation that his personal feelings had been dismissed in the hour of need brought cheers. Capt. Sverdrup also accepted the mission at once.

(Lincoln Ellsworth of New York, who had financed, at least in part, the two air expeditions of Capt. Amundsen, was the first to denounce Nobile after the Norge flight by saying that others had been responsible for the safe navigation of the dirigible from Spitzbergen to Alaska. For a year Amundsen had refused to be drawn into the controversy. In that year Nobile had been promoted from colonel to general and was decorated by the Italian government.

Then Amundsen published his autobiography and dwelt at great length on Nobile's conduct while in the air over the pole. He said that while he and Ellsworth had limited themselves to two tiny Norwegian and American flags to save weight and space, Nobile took armfuls of small Italian flags to cast into the air over the pole and finally let loose a huge flag which, Amundsen said, threatened to tie up a propeller.)

Urges Speed in Rescue.

Discussing the great difficulties of the task, Amundsen emphasized the need for speed, saying that any delay would be costly.

"It is impossible," he said, "to shut our eyes to the extreme difficulty of the search. We lack all details as to the position of the missing airship. It will be like looking for a needle in a haystack.

"Besides, the ice conditions at this season are such that a relief ship going north from Spitzbergen would be able to search only a very limited territory."

Points Danger of Forced Landing.

Capt. Wilkins was not very sanguine regarding the chances of saving the dirigible's crew in the event of a forced landing.

"Gen. Nobile," he said, "chose the most difficult time of the year for his polar flight. The ice is beginning to break up and fog is much more prevalent than a short time ago.

"Present conditions give rescue efforts little chance of succeeding. A hydroplane flight would have the best chance, but unless some report is received from the Italia, even this would be extremely hazardous and almost surely in vain."

Others here, well acquainted with the arctic, pointed out that while the Italia's crew was well equipped for the polar flight, they were equipped neither by experience nor training to make the long march aross the ice necessary to save themselves in the event of a forced landing.

The counter winds set in a few hours after the Italia was headed for the pole. They caused her course to be laid toward Greenland, thereby making the route longer than had been anticipated. On the way back from the pole a southwest wind brought the ship far toward the east, but later the winds shifted to the northwest.

During all of last night an icy cold wind blew from that quarter in Kings Bay. All the mountains here are hidden by mist and fog.

If the crew of the Italia must take to the ice, they will be equipped with skis, sledges, Canadian snow shoes and sleeping bags of reindeer skin. All of this equipment was aboard the dirigible when she left this haven.

The Italians were asked just before starting whether they would desire a map showing all places where Norwegian hunting huts have been built in the Archipelago. They said, however, that such a chart would not be of use to them.

Base Ship Plans for Rescue.

[Copyright: 1928: By the Associated Press.]

KINGS BAY, Spitzbergen, May 26.—(AP)—Gen. Umberto Nobile's polar dirigible, the Italia, was still lost in the fog over an ice jammed sea somewhere north of Spitzbergen at 9:45 o'clock tonight.

Lack of any word from the airship's radio has left the crew of the mothership, the Citta Di Milano, deeply perplexed as to the fate of their leader and his 15 companions.

Praying for weather conditions that would permit the Citta Di Milano, a former icebreaker, to go in search of the air explorers, the crew hurried preparations for the rescue expedition. Soldiers from an Italian land regiment, trained in Alpine maneuvers, went aboard the steamer this afternoon with skis and other equipment fitting them for arctic travel on land or over ice and snow.

The ship's commander asked the local coal company here to assist the crew in filling the vessel's bunkers rapidly.

When the Citta Di Milano goes north to search for the missing dirigible, she will take with her a Norwegian fishing boat for use in navigating among the ice floes.

Discussion of the fate of the Italia included talk of the possibility that she may have gotten her ice anchor fast somewhere in the lee of the northern or northeast coast of Archipelago so as to ride out the violent gale which is believed to have been the chief cause of her failure to return to Kings Bay.

Try to Guess Where Italia Is.

Observers who advanced this as a possibility acknowledged that the chances of its being true were extremely slender. They hazarded the opinion that if the Italia has made a descent she probably is at North East Land or on the east coast of West Spitzbergen.

At 10 p. m. Thursday the airship's course was 15½ degrees east. This headed her toward Hintopen strait, the passage between the main island of Spitzbergen and North East Land. That strait, however, probably would not be navigable for the Citta di Milano since it undoubtedly is at least partly filled with ice.

There was some talk here, too, of the possibility of getting Capt. George H. Wilkins and Lieut. Carl B. Eielson to Kings bay with the airplane in which they flew recently from Alaska across the top of the world. It was said that observers in an airplane would be able to distinguish the gray body of the dirigible against the white snow and ice fields.

Another suggestion advanced today was that the Italia may have collided with a mountain hidden in the mist. It was headed toward Newton mountain, 5,400 feet high, near Hintopen strait.

Had Three Radio Sets.

Most of the discussion on the Citta de Milano centered, however, about the incomprehensible lack of radio communication. Grave astonishment was expressed on this point.

The wireless station on the Italia has three sending sets, tuned for long waves, short waves, and ordinary waves. There were two antennæ for sending, one attached to the underpart of the batton and the other to its side. A third antenna was available for navigation purposes.

The short wave aerial was placed immediately under the batton cover. During the crossing from Vadsoe to King's Bay, when the Italia was en route north, communication with Rome was maintained by this short wave set until Bear island had been passed.

Temperature Very Low.

There was very small space in the radio gondola and the utterly low temperature experienced on the flight probably would freeze all liquids. The only place for the operator to sleep was in a gangway inside the batton.

Just before the start to the pole the batton had to be repaired astern, as a small rupture was detected there.

The weather since the flight started has been of the worst possible character. Some experienced Arctic men considered at the time that conditions were too unfavorable to warrant the start.

Polar Ship Engaged.

[Copyright: 1928: By the United Press.]

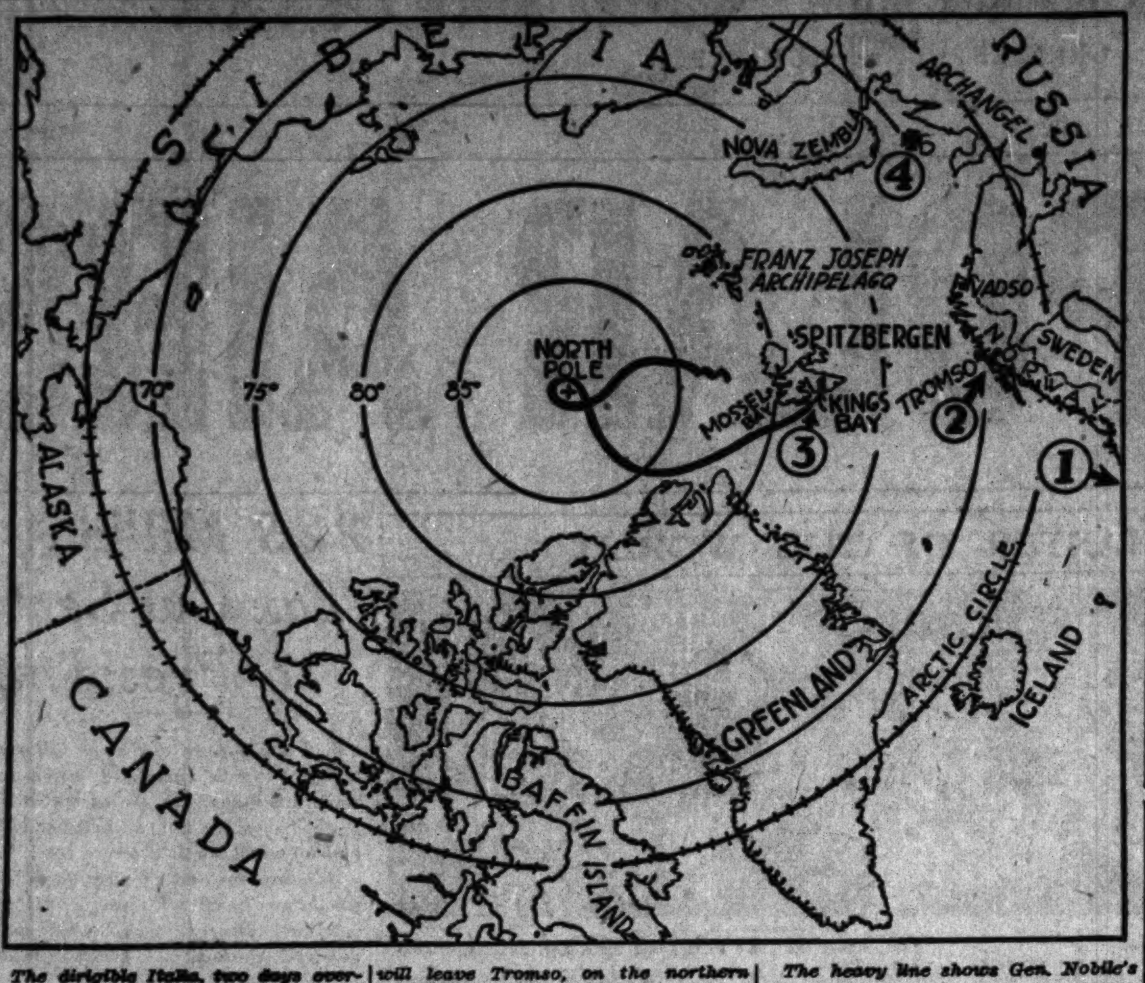
TROMSO, Norway, May 26.—The Norwegian arctic steamship Hobby was engaged today to proceed to the relief of the stricken polar dirigible Italia, and will leave here tomorrow morning on her search.

It was the little Hobby, made to withstand arctic ice, that brought Capt. George H. Wilkins and Lieut. Carl B. Eielson to Norway from Spitzbergen a few days ago after their successful flight across the top of the world.

The Hobby will proceed at once to the north coast of Spitzbergen, off which the Italia last was reported, as soon as it is fueled and supplied with food.

Besides the Hobby the strong sealing steamship Heimland is ready to search the Nova Zembla vicinity, up north of Siberia if necessary. The Heimland, in radio communication with Tromso, is at 68 degrees north latitude, 43 degrees east longitude, west of the southern tip of Nova Zembla.

FOUR EXPEDITIONS PREPARE TO HUNT NOBILE



The dirigible Italia, two days overdue at Kings bay, Spitzbergen, and which was reported late last night to be calling by radio for help, will be which are being hurriedly organized:

(1) Roald Amundsen, veteran of the Arctic, and discoverer of the South pole, was due to head an expedition being organized by the Norwegian government at Oslo.

(2) The Arctic steamship Hobby will leave Tromso, on the northern Norwegian coast, this morning.

(3) The Italia's base ship, Citta di Milano, at Kings bay, had steam up and was ready momentarily to proceed to the vicinity from which the stricken ship last was reported—over Hintopen strait, between the main island of Spitzbergen and northeast land.

(4) The sealing steamship Heimland, up off the Siberian coast, was ready to search the Nova Zembla area.

The heavy line shows Gen. Nobile's course, approximately, to the North pole, over which he circled for two hours, and the line he followed, supposedly, on his way back to Kings bay, up to the point where radio contact with the airship was lost.

With fuel exhausted, it is possible the dirigible may have landed on the ice far north of Spitzbergen or as a free balloon it may drift to Greenland, Siberia, or some other land bordering on the Arctic.

SEVEN OF MISSING ITALIA'S CREW WERE ON NORGE POLAR TRIP

ROME, May 26.—(AP)—Seven of the sixteen men on the dirigible Italia were in the crew of the Norge during the Amundsen polar flight in 1926. These seven are: Gen. Umberto Nobile, builder of both craft and commander of the Italia.

Natale Cecioni, head mechanician, the senior mechanician of the Italian air force. He first flew with the Wright brothers and distinguished himself in the Tripoli campaign. When the Norge broke loose in 1924, he brought it back to safety.

Sergt. A. Caratti, 32, mechanic; excellent record in the war and with the Norge.

Vincenzo Pomella, 30, mechanic; has specialized on motor work on dirigibles.

Fenn Malmgren, meteorologist, a Swede; was with the Maud.

Alessandri, mechanic.

The other nine on the Italia are Mariano, Zappi, Triani, Viglieri, Pontremoli, Dehounek, Ciocca, Biagi, and the newspaperman Lago.

BYRD, WHO FLEW OVER POLE, SEES HOPE FOR ITALIA

Tells Arctic Problems Faced by Nobile.

New York, May 26.—[Special.]—Commander Richard E. Byrd, who flew over the north pole in an airplane, today said that until the Italia had been away from its base 100 hours it was not time to entertain grave concern for the safety of the dirigible and its crew.

"The airship would be able to cruise for that length of time at an economical cruising speed," the commander continued. "It has the Maybach motors, similar to those on the Los Angeles, which are economical of fuel.

"There would seem to be nothing about the severity of the storm that would stop the Italia. It is barely possible that ice might have forced it down, in which case, due to the great skill of Nobile and his party, a safe landing could probably be made on the ice.

May Have Landed on Ice.

"It may be that the Italia is cruising around out of wireless communication. It is true that it has an auxiliary set run with batteries, which would, I think, soon run down. If the Italia runs out of gasoline it is probable that Nobile would attempt to make a landing on the ice, in which case he should not be very far from Spitzbergen.

"If he still is cruising in the air, and has a radio direction finder on board, he will know his approximate position even though his sending apparatus is out of commission, because he will be able to receive his direction from Kings Bay, Spitzbergen."

Ellsworth Volunteers Help.

Lincoln Ellsworth, who has had extensive experience in arctic travel and who was with Roald Amundsen and Gen. Nobile on the flight across the pole in 1926 in the dirigible Norge, cabled Amundsen offering to accompany him on the Nobile relief expedition or give any other possible assistance.

"Out of that spirit of comradeship for men who have gone through peril together my interest in the safety of Gen. Nobile and his brave comrades, many of whom were members of the Norge expedition in 1926, is indeed personal, and I anxiously await news of the return of the Italia to her base at Spitzbergen," he said.

Gen. Nobile had provided before leaving Rome for emergencies which might keep him from returning to his base at Kings Bay for two weeks at least.

If, as has been suggested, the Italia is out of fuel, it is possible that she is being blown across the frozen Arctic ocean either toward Franz Josef land, which lies 300 miles to the east of Spitzbergen, or onward to the lonely Leninland nearly 600 miles from Spitzbergen and more than 200 off the northern coast of Siberia.

Explorers have often discussed the possibility of making voyages of discovery in free balloons in the Arctic trusting to steady winds to blow them either across the pole and near it from America or Greenland to Asia.

Swedish Balloonists Met Death.

Salomon August Andree, the Swedish scientist, started to plan such an expedition in 1882. It was sixteen years later when with two companions he made the attempt in which all three explorers lost their lives.

Andree's balloon was a frail thing compared to the Italia. It was made of Chinese pongee silk, and "protected" against the weather by a coat of varnish and a network of hempen cords. It had a gas capacity of 150,000 cubic feet. These aeronauts sat in a timber and basket work car, about six feet in diameter and equipped with two glazed windows between which a tiny bridge was built for the man on watch.

Beyond one carrier pigeon's mute messages nothing has been learned of the expedition's fate, although Greenland, Franz Josef land and other Arctic lands have been searched and the tales of Eskimos have all been investigated.

HERE IS SOME DATA ON GREAT DIRIGIBLE MISSING IN ARCTIC

The dirigible Italia, which was built by Gen. Nobile, who is an expert in dirigible construction, is a sister ship of the Norge in which Nobile flew over the north pole in 1926 with Roald Amundsen, the Norwegian explorer, and Lincoln Ellsworth, the American explorer.

In some ways the Italia is an even more efficient ship, as some changes were made in the design suggested by the experience gained in the Norge flight aiming specially at the avoidance of incrustation due to ice.

The main dimensions of the Norge were:

Capacity, 672,000 cubic feet.
Length, 348 feet.
Maximum height, 85 feet 4 inches.
Maximum width, 64 feet.
Miximum speed, 62 miles an hour.
Useful cargo capacity approximately eight tons.

The dirigible was built of steel tubing about three-quarters of an inch in diameter fastened firmly by rivets and welds into the steel keel above. The wheel for steering is just like any other ship. The Italia has three motors, two side by side amidships, and one below the keel aft.

PANIC AS TWO INTERURBAN TRAINS COLLIDE

One man was injured, possibly fatally, and fifty passengers were shaken and thrown into a panic early last evening when a Chicago, Aurora and Elgin suburban train crashed into the rear coach of a Westchester elevated train at the Austin station of the Garfield Park line.

J. W. Dryden, motorman of the suburban train, was in a critical condition last night. The force of the impact smashed the cab in which he rode, crushed him in a mass of twisted iron and splintered wood and hurled him to the ground. He was taken to the Oak Park hospital.

The crash caused a short circuit in the wire of the rear coach of the elevated train, and a fire followed. The passengers, after the first few seconds of fright, were reassured by the guards of both trains and passed out in an orderly manner.

Reported Cornered in the Kansas Bad Lands.

Scott City, Kas., May 26.—(Special.)—A mysterious message received here early tonight from Dighton sent six heavily armed deputies on a hurried dash into the country north of here. Authorities refused to make the message public but it was reported that the Lamar bank robbers' hideout had been located.

By air, automobile and foot the quest went on for the robbers, their number now believed to be reduced to three. Officers felt certain that one of the gang who was wounded in a gun fight with officers of the Lamar bank was dead.

While the search centered in sparsely settled western Kansas, roads were being guarded in eastern Colorado, Wyoming, western Nebraska, northwest Oklahoma, and New Mexico.

Meanwhile hope faded that A. E. Kessinger, kidnaped assistant cashier of the bank, would be found alive. His fate has been a mystery since he was carried away by the robbers.

JESSE JAMES' DAY RECALLED

La Junta, Colo., May 26.—[Special.]—This story is being written in the heart of a historic bandit country as the chase for the Lamar bank robbers narrows.

Spurred by $9,000 in rewards, posses from six states, probably more than 2,000 in all, are on the trail of the outlaw killers in the hills.

The man hunt tonight had narrowed down to the immediate vicinity of Scott City, Kas. Posse leaders are convinced that the bandits are hiding in one of the many caves or deserted cabins within a score of miles of that town.

Airplanes and motor cars have been used in the chase and the radio is keeping the whole country informed of the progress. Not one of these things existed when the James boys were terrorizing the west.

Fashions in banditry have changed, too, as well as in bandit hunting. Jesse James and his outfit were a gang of picturesque outlaws. These men who are hiding in the smoky hills today are wolf men, killers to whom human life means nothing.

Kill With a Curse.

Their first murder, the killing of the elder Parrish in the bank office, where they stole $20,000, is typical of their methods. Parrish had unlimbered a gun presented to him by one of the James gang when the bandits entered his bank.

"Did you get the old —— ——?" asked the bandit leader of the man who had beaten Parrish to the draw by a fraction of a second.

"I sure did," was the reply.

"Give the old fool another to make sure," was the bandit chief's instructions, and the killer did.

There can be little doubt that he and the bandit fired almost together. The jolt of the blow which killed Parrish spoiled his aim, and instead of a dead bandit on the floor of the Lamar bank a wounded one fled through the western Kansas hills, a badly wounded one, for the bandits found it necessary to kidnap a doctor to care for him.

Young Parrish wasn't the shot his father had been in his youth, and he never had a chance. When the elder Parrish opened fire, the bandit leader shot down the younger man in cold blood at his desk. According to eyewitnesses, he wasn't even reaching for his gun.

Man Hunt Starts.

The murder of the two Parrishes and the kidnaping of A. E. Kessinger, the bank teller, enraged the whole valley. The elder Parrish was known, loved and respected in the cow country. Within a few hours, hastily armed posses were on the trail of the killer outlaws.

The bandits headed north from Lamar to the main Kansas-Colorado boulevard, and then turned east. They shot their way past a sheriff in the vicinity of Sheridan lake, and headed east in their big blue Buick sedan.

The killers took to the back trails across the open plains and headed into the hill country. At Dighton they kidnaped Dr. Wineinger and in the early hours of the next morning two tourists passed the blue sedan, halted in the brush, and saw the doctor treating a wounded man.

The James gang would have protected that doctor's life with their own. But these modern wolf men killed him a few hours later, as they were forced to back track toward the Colorado line. Then they ran his car over a cliff between the Kansas towns of Leati and Oakley, and hurled the body after it with a message pinned to the clothing.

Friday morning the car was found and beside it, the body of the doctor, still warm and bleeding, from bullet wounds. His overcoat and medical kit were found a few yards off the road.

These finds convinced the deputies they were hot on the trail of the killers. A little farther north, they found a farmer who had been forced to supply the bandits with gasoline.

Throughout the day and night the chase continued, and other posses guarded every road leading into and out of the bandit country. The men are believed trapped in the smoky hills with no chance to escape.

All travelers who had no business on the road were warned by highway patrols to stop on signal, but that didn't prevent several mistakes.

The deputy in charge of a bridge guard at Hadley, Colo., told of a Dodge sedan which drove up toward the bridge and at the signal to stop turned around in the narrow road and fled, with lights out.

Deputies pursued the car, firing at it, and the shots were returned. A quarter of an hour later the deputies stumbled on to the car in a farmyard. In it were five badly frightened women. They thought they had encountered the bandits and the driver was near hysterics.

FIND MRS. KNAPP GUILTY OF THEFT OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Ex-Official of New York Faces Prison Term.

Albany, N. Y., May 26.—[Special.]—Mrs. Florence E. S. Knapp, former secretary of state, was convicted at 8:45 o'clock tonight of grand larceny in the first degree.

After deliberating for less than five hours the jury in this (the second) trial of Mrs. Knapp found her guilty of the charge that she caused to be issued and diverted to her own use an unearned census pay check for $2,875. It was issued in the name of her stepdaughter, Miss Clara Blanche Knapp, teacher at Middlebury college. It was largely on Miss Knapp's testimony that the former secretary of state was convicted.

Calm as She Hears Verdict.

Mrs. Knapp received the verdict with a tense calmness, as if she had steeled herself for a physical blow. A tremor passed over her pale face, but her head was held high and she gazed straight ahead.

She gave her life history, in answer to the clerk's questions, in a clear voice which did not falter. When she replied, in answer to one query, that she was single she quickly corrected herself to explain that she is a widow.

With the same forced impassiveness she heard two physicians testify that she is near a nervous collapse, and with similar fortitude she heard Supreme Court Justice Stephen Callaghan say that, although he would not sentence her until Sept. 4, she would not escape imprisonment of some kind. The maximum penalty for the crime is ten years in prison.

Mrs. Knapp was tried May 8 on the same indictment. The jury, after deliberating for eight hours, reported its inability to reach an agreement. Justice Callaghan at once set the date for a new trial.

Tapped Census Funds.

Mrs. Knapp was convicted of the larceny of $2,875 of the state's census funds. She was at the head of the compilation of the New York state census while secretary of state. It was alleged that she unlawfully took this money by issuing a check for that amount in the name of her stepdaughter, Miss Clara Blanche Knapp.

At both trials Miss Knapp testified that she never had done any work on the census and that she knew nothing about the issuance of the check.

Charlie Chaplin Faces Subpoena in Murder Trial

Manti, Utah, May 26.—[Special.]—Defense Attorney Lewis Larson announced here tonight that on Monday he will subpoena Charlie Chaplin to testify in the murder trial of Sheldon Reid Clark, charged with the slaying of Don Solovich, former butler for Lita Grey Chaplin. GEORGE RECTOR HERE FOR SCHOOL CLUB'S REUNION

George Rector, formerly the proprietor of Rector's, the famous New York restaurant and more recently the author of his experiences as restaurateur and cook, last night was one of the speakers at the annual dinner of the Chicago Shattuck Military School club at the Chicago Athletic association. Other speakers were Henry A. Scandrett, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific railroad; Col. Frank A. Robbins, former vice president of the Erie railroad; Charles Newhall, headmaster at the school, and Maj. C. W. Walker, the commandant. Shattuck is at Faribault, Minn.

Giving an exhibition of his memory, Mr. Rector arose and called off 55 names, the roster of his company there 38 years ago, several of whom, including Col. Robbins, were present.

After the dinner the annual election of officers was held. C. H. Williams was chosen president; Herbert Foster, vice president; J. W. Stevens, secretary, and Martin B. Orde Jr., treasurer.

Mrs. Virginia Zitzis, 36, was shot and killed; her brother, Wilbur Leffew, 27, was shot in the left arm, and John Patti, 30, of 1405 Washburne avenue, was shot in the right side last night by Charles Zitzis, the woman's husband. The shooting took place in an apartment occupied by Mrs. Zitzis on the fourth floor at [illegible]

According to Leffew, Zitzis came to plead with his wife, from whom he had been separated, for a reconciliation, and when she refused to return to him he started shooting and then fled. Zitzis is a Greek cook.

DECOYS POLICE ON LONG CHASE TO SHIELD RELATIVE

Wrong Man Taken; $500,000 Missing.

The story of how Guy Tresslar acted as a decoy to deceive those hunting his brother-in-law, Robert C. Watkins, a Hartford, Conn., broker sought by police for alleged $500,000 swindles in bucketshop operations, was revealed yesterday by Chicago police through the arrest of Tresslar.

Tresslar, who police declare resembles his brother-in-law, was trailed through a long distance call and arrested yesterday afternoon at the Sherman hotel. For a month police in the larger cities have trailed him in the belief that he was Watkins.

Since the disappearance of Watkins, who is alleged to be carrying $500,000 in bonds which he embezzled after the collapse of his Hartford brokerage concern, Tresslar has been traveling from city to city, acting as a decoy, he confessed to Deputy Commissioner William E. O'Connor and Lieut. Thomas Gary of the pawn shop detail, who arrested him. He registered at exclusive hotels.

Called Watkins' Dupe.

Tresslar would await orders from Watkins for his next move. He is obviously the dupe of Watkins, detectives said.

Though Tresslar denies that he knows where Watkins is, the police believe Watkins is in Chicago. An attempt is being made by them to trace a R. W. Watkins, who registered at the Blackstone several days ago.

A telephone call to his family in Albequerque, N. M., yesterday led to Tresslar's arrest. His suave manner and fashionable dress which tallied in detail with the description of Watkins at first led the police to believe they had caught the man they really sought. It was not until the detective bureau had communicated with District Attorney John Hickey at Hartford that they learned of their mistake. Through a speech impediment they identified the prisoner as Tresslar.

Tresslar Facing No Charges.

Tresslar and his family disappeared about the same time that Watkins left and was sought as an embezzler, according to the information supplied to the police. Several days ago the Tresslar family was located in Albequerque. It also was learned that no charge is lodged against Tresslar in Hartford, as police were unable to link Tresslar with the alleged embezzlement.

Despite the knowledge that a man named R. W. Watkins recently applied for a passport in Canada which would permit an European sailing, detectives believe that if Tresslar's statement is true, Watkins either is in Chicago or some nearby city.

INJURED AS TANK EXPLODES.

John Stone, 47, 1260 Astor street, an attendant in a Standard Oil filling station at West Division and Orleans streets, suffered the fracture of his jaw last night, when a five gallon gas spray tank into which he was forcing air from a hose, exploded.

WIFE NO LONGER, BUT SHE STAYS AS MAID TO HUSBAND

Mother's Plan to Escape Cruelty Approved.

Superior Judge Joseph Sabath yesterday approved an arrangement whereby a wife became a housekeeper. He agreed to the proposal that Mrs. Lillian Speyer do the housework for John A. Speyer and take care of their four children, pursuing all the duties of a wife about their home at 5415 North Lotus street, without longer being obligated to love, cherish, and obey him.

The Speyers were married Jan. 4, 1911. Theirs was a happy marriage at first, the judge was told by the couple. They had four children—Leonard, 15 years old; Francis, 10; John, 8, and Evelyn, 3.

Hesitates to Ask Divorce.

But of late, Mrs. Speyer declared, her husband has been cruel and displayed a quick temper. She hesitated to seek a divorce for fear of losing her children and her home. So she proposed a unique arrangement to the judge.

"I want to stay in the home I love and with the children I have raised," she said. "But that will be impossible if my husband feels he has the right to be cruel to me. I haven't the money to support the children.

Remains as Servant.

"The children need a mother and home and my husband needs a housekeeper. He has agreed to pay me $10 a week if I stay and be his servant. Thus, the best interests of the entire family will be served and yet I will be independent of my husband's possible cruelty with the right to quit his service at any time I please."

The judge considered this proposal for a time, then said:

"I will allow you to try out this arrangement for two months. It seems to me that if you two are able to reach such an agreement, you will later be able to reconcile your differences and again be man and wife. The divorce decree will be withheld for two months. Then, you must report to me and tell me how the system has worked out."

LOWDENITES SEE FARM UPRISING AT CONVENTION

Midwest Candidate to Be Demanded, They Say.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

With nearly all the national delegates now chosen, Frank O. Lowden headquarters issued a tabulation of delegate strength last night and declared it is more evident than ever that no candidate will enter the Republican national convention with the nomination nailed down and it will be an open fight at Kansas City.

Lowden supporters from outside states report that the veto of the McNary-Haugen bill by President Coolidge has weakened Secretary Hoover. They declare that throughout the agricultural middle west, it has put a fighting spirit into the Lowden movement, and that when the Kansas City convention opens a tremendous shout will be raised that to win the west this time the ticket must be one close to agriculture.

Scouts from Nebraska to Ohio report that the corn, wheat, and hog belt will put on a real uprising in the convention in behalf of nominating a candidate from the middle west, where the votes come from, who has what they term "sympathetic understanding" of the problems of the farm.

Show Present Strength.

While Lowden shouters in general were declaring that the outstanding phase of the week has been the development of a greater regional solidarity in the corn and wheat zone, the Lowden managers contended themselves with putting out a table showing the present delegate strength of the leading candidates as follows:

Hoover	346½
Lowden	273½
Necessary to a choice	545

Their delegate tabulation follows:

Call Farm Issue Paramount.

The Lowden camp declares the Republican party was founded on an alliance between business and agriculture, and that at Kansas City the farm issue will be paramount. Wide circulation is being given to a recent utterance of ex-Gov. Lowden:

"Political historians agree that the Republican party was born of an alliance between business and agriculture. In 1860 they got together in the "wigwam" in Chicago.

"President Buchanan had opposed a homestead act because it was in his opinion socialistic, paternalistic, anarchistic, and unconstitutional. It was in the 1860 Republican platform, and it was passed, and President Lincoln signed the homestead act.

"These two elements, agriculture and business, have been united in the Republican party ever since the civil war. Now there is a crisis. The Republican party must keep faith with the farmers."

Chicagoan Again Heads Disabled War Veterans

JOHN COOLIDGE TO SEEK PLACE IN BUSINESS WORLD

Amherst, Mass., May 26.—[Special.]—In a few more weeks John Coolidge, son of the President of the United States, will have finished his college career and will strike out for a place in the business world.

Rumors that he would enter Harvard law school were denied. He said he was not expecting to continue study at any other university. When he went to the White House for the Easter recess John expected to talk over his future with his father, but the illness of his grandmother brought John and his mother back to Northampton and he hasn't had an opportunity to talk at length with the President. He will be 22 Sept. 7.

John said he thought the President might attend commencement exercises at Amherst next month.

Jumps in Parachute and Lands on Busy Boulevard

Hollywood, Cal., May 26.—(AP)—When the propeller fell off his airplane, Al Wilson, stunt flyer and former Canadian army aviator, leaped with his parachute from a height of 4,200 feet and descended in the midst of traffic on Hollywood boulevard today. His disabled plane crashed in a garden and was wrecked. Wilson dislocated his right arm and wrenched his back.

FARM BILL VETO WILL ROCK G. O. P. CONVENTION SHIP

But East Is Confident Coolidge Can Win.

sure to carry the east but, by virtue of his prestige, would run better in the middle west than Hoover or any other candidate, with the exception of Lowden and Dawes, none of whom could be relied upon to hold the east.

Hilles, Mellon and Butler, who with more than 150 votes at their command will be the big three in the convention and will be able to determine the nomination, are intently assaying the Republican disaffection in the corn whether it is real or whether it is unlikely to be any more of a menace than was populism.

Third Party Ranger.

It is already apparent to these searchers of the western skies that the disaffection involves a larger territory than did populism and that if the revolt is genuine it might easily result in a disastrous loss of electoral votes to the Republicans. Among the disquieting possibilities are a third party in the corn belt making special appeal to the farmers and a direct bid by the Democratic platform for the farmer vote. And a third party in the corn belt would be fraught with the danger of a deadlock in the electoral college and a projection of the election into congress.

With a storm of such proportions threatening in the middle west it would be foolhardy in the opinion of the eastern leaders to entrust the wheel of the G. O. P. ship to Hoover, who to the extent that the farmers visualize him as their pet abomination, would only make the mad waves madder.

Coolidge seems to these anti-Hooverites as far more likely to weather the gale in the corn belt, despite his two vetoes of the corn belt prescription for farm relief, and as the only candidate who could lose the middle west, if worse comes to worse, and still win the election.

Sees Veto Imperil G. O. P. Victory.

Hence, it falls out that since the veto the Coolidge drafters have worked themselves into a frame of mind in which they conceive the veto as imperiling Republican victory and Coolidge as guilty of desertion of the party in a crisis he himself has created, unless he consents to accept renomination.

Hope that the President will view the situation in this light is founded on what appears to the Coolidge drafters as the studied failure of Mr. Coolidge in each of his four utterances on the subject to close the door to his conscription. He never has said he would refuse renomination.

If, however, the President does remove himself unequivocally from consideration before the balloting begins or in the midst of it there is no telling what will happen. The withdrawal of the President and the release thereby of upward of 100 delegates who are for Coolidge first and Hoover second, might be sufficient to carry the commerce secretary to victory.

Might Try to Name Hughes.

Mellon and Hilles might attempt to put over Charles E. Hughes whom both prefer next to the President and who, since the veto, is being boomed anew in these parts as a candidate, who, theoretically, would not be unacceptable to the farmers, for the reason that he has not been involved in the farm relief fight, though it is known that he stands with the administration on the question. Mr. Hughes will be sailing for Europe on the day that the convention is likely to nominate the candidate.

If the anti-Hooverites should be successful in stopping Hoover and the Hughes movement should come to naught, the eastern leaders might try to arrange a compromise on Dawes. It is apparent, however, that the veto has injured Dawes' chances only to a less degree than Lowden's. In quarters that once looked hopefully upon the Vice President, doubts now are expressed that a ticket headed by Dawes could be hitched up with a platform vindicating the veto.

As a result of the veto there will be a spectacular battle in the convention over the platform. Prohibition will be overshadowed by farm relief. The corn belt organizations have perfected plans to make a desperate fight for a platform plank indorsing a farm relief scheme along the lines of the McNary-Haugen bill. Representing many of the corn belt states on the resolutions committee will be delegates prominent in the fight for the legislation to boost the prices of farm products. The Minnesota delegation already has selected for its member of the resolutions committee Frank Murphy, one of the principal McNary-Haugen bill lobbyists in Washington.

Showdown in Committee.

The first showdown between the administration and the corn belt will occur in the resolutions committee.

But the chances will be against the corn belt leaders putting over a platform plank by force of number. It does not follow that because the corn belt put the McNary-Haugen bill through congress it will command as much strength in the convention, which is based on the representation in congress. The McNary-Haugen bill was put through congress with Democratic votes from the south, but in the Republican convention and its resolutions committee the votes of the southern delegates, most of whom are federal office holders, will be controlled by the administration.

So, the chances are that the pro-Hoover and pro-administration forces will have votes enough in the resolutions committee to ride rough shod over the corn belt, if they want to, and adopt an agricultural plank vindicating the veto.

Administration supporters are demanding a plank unqualifiedly indorsing the veto. Hoover leaders are seconding the demand, Under Secretary of the Treasury Mills having asserted that the opportunity should be seized to extirpate McNary-Haugenism as completely as the free silver heresy of 1896.

Corn Belt Likely to Lose.

The prospect, therefore, is that the corn belt will lose its fight in the resolutions committee and will be compelled to appeal to the convention in a minority report offering its farm relief plank as an amendment to the platform brought in by the committee. In the battle that ensues will come the first big thrills of the convention. But here again, as in the resolutions committee, the administration supporters probably will be able to control the convention.

If the dominating elements are against concessions in the resolutions committee they will be able to prevent concessions on the convention floor.

YOUTH TODAY SURER OF THEMSELVES THAN EVER, SAYS HOOVER

Washington, D. C., May 26.—(AP)—Secretary Hoover paid tribute tonight to the youth of America.

Avoiding any reference to politics, the commerce secretary, in an address before the National Oratorical contest, denied the charge that the young people of today are "irresponsible" or "light-headed." On the other hand, he said, they are surer of themselves than at any other time in the history of the world—with a sureness "that carries with it a determination to justify itself."

Turning to the international aspects of the oratorical contest, Mr. Hoover declared that it was built upon the "Solid principle that the best foundation of international understanding is not in the leveling of national ideals and characteristics, but, on the contrary, in a healthy, enthusiastic nationalism, willing and eager to extend the hand of friendship to other nations, but never willing to sacrifice its essentially American character."

The oratorical contest tonight was won by James R. Moore of Somerset, Ky., who will represent the United States in an international competition.

HELP US OR WE BOLT, FARMERS WARN THE G. O. P.

Cheer Lowden at Big Veto Protest Rallies.

Springfield, Ill., May 26.—[Special.]—Farmers representing 14 counties in central Illinois gathered here today in a massmeeting of protest against President Coolidge's veto of the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill, and adopted resolutions calling on the Republican party to "repudiate the Coolidge-Hoover leadership."

The resolutions declare that President Coolidge's veto message discloses a lack of understanding and genuine sympathy for the fundamental problems facing American agriculture.

They declare the McNary-Haugen bill to be in conformity with the Republican party platform of 1924 and declare that "we feel we can no longer depend upon party pledges, and we serve notice upon the respective leaders of all parties that our individual and collective support will go only to those candidates who have a sympathetic understanding in this great question."

Hoover Hotly Attacked.

Hoover was characterized as the guiding influence with President Coolidge in his attitude toward the farmer. "Hope for the adoption of a fair national policy toward agriculture," the resolutions declared, "lies only in the complete repudiation of the Coolidge-Hoover leadership."

The resolutions committee was headed by S. M. Elkius of McLean county. Former Gov. Joseph W. Fifer of Bloomington sounded the keynote at the meeting.

"Go to Kansas City," he said. "You know the way. If you are turned down there, then meet again to consider what you will do."

The former governor, who came with the McLean county delegation to the mass meeting, aroused the 2400 farmers present to cheering pitch when he declared that his advice would be for the farmers to insist on the nomination of former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois as Republican nominee for President.

The delegations from fourteen counties gathered this afternoon at the courthouse and marched to the state arsenal, making an impressive parade. George Keyes of Springfield and former State Auditor Andrew Russell of Jacksonville, central Illinois delegates to the Republican national convention, elicited applause by stating they were going to the Kansas City convention to insist on the nomination of Frank O. Lowden.

A. L. Hereford of Springfield, delegate to the Democratic convention at Houston, declared the Democratic nominee would be favorable to the farmers. He told Republican farmers if they failed to secure recognition at Kansas City, to "vote as you shoot."

Galesburg's Rally Fiery.

Galesburg, Ill., May 26.—Threats of an agrarian uprising in which farmers and business men of the middle west will bolt the Republican and Democratic parties unless presidential candidates favorable to agriculture are nominated, were made at a mass meeting of over 3,000 farm men and women here today.

President Coolidge was lashed unmercifully by half a dozen speakers for his veto of the McNary-Haugen bill. Herbert Hoover was called the "most oversold man in the United States" and notice was served on political chiefs that he could never be acceptable to the farmers. Frank O. Lowden was hailed as the savior of the west and every mention of his name was greeted with wild cheers.

Ten counties were represented at the gathering. They included Knox, Warren, Fulton, McDonough, Henderson, Peoria, Henry, Rock Island, Mercer and Stark.

Resolutions Warn G. O. P.

Resolutions were unanimously adopted demanding that the middle west be taken into consideration at Kansas City and Houston and that a candidate favorable to this territory be nominated. New party alignments have come about for issues of far less consequence, the resolutions stated.

"Herbert Hoover can never be accepted by this section," the resolutions said. "He has not only evidenced supreme ignorance of the problems of agriculture, but has refused to admit there is an agricultural problem. We will not accept any candidates standing for the policies of the present administration."

Joliet High School Wins National Band Contest

High school bands representing many states assembled before the judges' stand in Joliet yesterday at finals of national contest. Each group of musicians is a champion in its own district and came to Joliet for the final judging.

Play Late Into Night

For the third successive year the Joliet High school band won first honors in the third annual national high school band contest, which has been in progress for the last three days at Joliet. The finals of the competition were held before a crowd of 3,000 which packed the high school auditorium. By right of its three victories the Joliet school will now retain the national trophy awarded by the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music. The contest was not decided until early this morning.

The band of Senn High school of Chicago was awarded second place, and third honors were won by Modesto, Cal. The other three bands which reached the finals finished in the following order: Gary, Ind.; Hammond, Ind., and Council Bluffs, Ia.

Results of the contest were announced by John Philip Sousa, famous bandmaster, who headed the judges, and his associates, Edwin Franko Goldman and Capt. Charles O'Neill, also bandmasters. Twenty-seven bands from high schools in fifteen states competed.

De La Salle High school band of Chicago came out second and Senn fourth in the marching contest staged independently by the Joliet chamber of commerce. Joliet's boys were first.

First honors in the competition of class B bands [those from high schools of less than 400 students] went to St. Mary's Industrial school at Baltimore, Md. Lansing Vocational school, Lansing, Mich., was second; Princeton, Cal., High school, third, and Vermilion, S. D., fourth.

A. R. McAllister, conductor of the championship Joliet band, will again head the National Bandmasters' association. All officers, including Lee M. Lockhart of Council Bluffs, Ia., vice president, and C. Mitremain of New York City, secretary-treasurer, were reëlected.

JAPAN ADDS ITS 'YES' TO KELLOGG ANTI-WAR TREATY

Joins Powers in Indorsing Proposed Pact.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., May 26.—[Special.]—Secretary of State Kellogg's proposal for the conclusion of a peace treaty binding the principal nations to renounce war as an instrument of national policy received added impetus today.

The Japanese government, in a note received at the state department today, announced its willingness to collaborate with the other powers in the negotiation of an anti-war treaty along the lines suggested by Mr. Kellogg in identical notes sent to Great Britain, Germany, Japan, and Italy a few weeks ago.

Two Conditions Reserved.

The only conditions implied by the Japanese government in its acceptance are that the proposed treaty should not interfere with a nation's right to self defense or with its right to fulfill obligations under prior international agreements such as the league of nations covenant and Locarno treaties.

Washington officials were enthusiastic over receipt of the Japanese note as its arrival marks the end of the first phase of negotiations for the proposed treaty. Thus far Germany has unqualifiedly accepted; Japan, Italy, and England have accepted with certain reservations, and France is on record as in agreement with the United States that an anti-war treaty should be concluded.

Indications are that the last step in the negotiations will be Mr. Kellogg sending to all the interested powers identic notes outlining the progress made thus far and the American reaction to the various reservations outlined by England, Japan, and France. It would not be surprising if the negotiations were broadened so as to include signatories to the Locarno pacts.

Inclusion of the Locarno treaty powers, if decided upon, will be an effort to satisfy the French, English, and Japanese insistence that nothing in the proposed pact interfere with those treaties.

Mr. Kellogg is willing that all parties to the Locarno pact become parties to the proposed treaty through signature at the same time with the principal powers.

In view of the American reaction to the various reservations advanced, it is becoming increasingly apparent that even if the treaty is signed as now advanced by Mr. Kellogg, it will be so tied up with implied reservations regarding special interests and prior international obligations that its nullifying effect on war will be greatly minimized.

Language of Japanese Note.

"I beg to inform your excellency," Baron Tanaka, the Japanese minister for foreign affairs, states to Secretary Kellogg in his communication, "that the government of Japan sympathizes warmly with the high and beneficent aims of the proposal made by the United States, which they take to imply the entire abolition of the institution of war, and that they will be glad to render their most cordial coöperation towards the attainment of that end.

"The proposal of the United States is understood to contain nothing that would refuse to independent states the right of self-defense, and nothing which is incompatible with the obligations of agreements guaranteeing the public peace, such as are embodied in the covenant of the league of nations and the treaties of Locarno.

"Happy to Collaborate."

"Accordingly, the imperial government firmly believes that unanimous agreement on a mutually acceptable text for such a treaty as is contemplated is well capable of realization by discussion between the six powers referred to, and they would be happy to collaborate with cordial good will in the discussion of the purpose of securing what they are persuaded is the common desire of all the better peoples of the world—namely, the cessation of wars and the definite establishment among the nations of an era of permanent and universal peace."

INDIANA HARBOR MEN GREET OCEAN VESSEL WITH LIVERPOOL CARGO

A crowd of more than 500 gathered at the docks in Indiana Harbor yesterday afternoon for a program of festivities in celebration of the arrival there of the S. S. Novodoc from Liverpool with a cargo of pig iron.

The Novodoc, which was built and is operated by the Patterson lines of Montreal, steamed into Indiana Harbor Friday evening in command of Capt. Kenneth La Rush of St. Catharines, Ont. It was the maiden trip of the freighter which crossed the Atlantic from Liverpool to Montreal in 19 days.

When the freighter docked at Indiana Harbor, it was boarded by immigration officials, who made a regular inspection of the crew and the ship. This performance, which is seldom witnessed in the vicinity of Chicago, attracted the attention of harbor fans and word was quickly spread that an ocean vessel was in port.

Ceremonies of welcome were speedily arranged by officials of East Chicago, Ind. Speakers hailed the arrival of the Novodoc as an indication of the future importance of Chicago as an international port when the lakes to gulf and St. Lawrence waterway projects are completed.

Dr. R. P. Hale, mayor of East Chicago, was in charge of the program.

Briand Better; Leaves Paris for Country Home

PARIS, May 26.—France rejoiced today over the announcement that Aristide Briand had sufficiently recovered from his recent critical illness to leave his residence at the Quai d'Orsay for his country place in Cocherel. The foreign minister will remain in the country until the end of next week. On several occasions since M. Briand was taken ill on April 15 his life has been despaired of.

CICERO DEFEATS SCHOOL PROJECT; 'SECESSION' ASKED

Action to separate from Cicero, now combined with them in Township High school district No. 201, was threatened by leading citizens in Berwyn, Lyons, and Stickney, last night after Cicero in a special election overwhelmingly defeated a proposition for a special $600,000 bond issue for the erection of a new high schol in Berwyn.

Due to the heavy vote against it in Cicero, which now has the only high school in the four towns, the proposition was defeated by 1,716 ballots. The total vote was: For the proposition, 6,840; against it, 8,556. Berwyn cast 6,069 votes for it, and 713 against it; Lyons, 142 for it, and only 4 against it; Stickney voted it down, 72 to 34, and Cicero cast only 595 votes for it, while 7,760 voted against it.

The district has a population of over 300,000 and a site for the proposed school was purchased two years ago at 29th street and Home avenue, Berwyn. A citizens committee of the district, headed by William K. Pflaum of Berwyn, had recommended it; and George Tucker, president of the school board of the district, said there was urgent need for it.

"Our only recourse it to take legal action to separate the other three towns from Cicero, as a township school district," Mr. Pflaum said yesterday.

AUTO RUNS 59 MILES ON GALLON OF GAS.

Automobile engineers who worked for years in an effort to reduce gasoline consumption have found the solution in a marvelous invention that fits all cars. An actual test made by one of the engineers showed 59 miles on a gallon of gas. Thousands of car owners have already installed this new invention. They not only report amazing gas savings but are also surprised to find quicker pickup, instant starting, smoother running motors and disappearance of carbon. E. Oliver, 999, 281 E. GUNMEN TAKEN INTO BUSINESS FOR TRADE WAR said, had been boosted to profiteering heights by the Master Cleaners and Dyers' association.

Which brings on the next chapter.

Competition Keeps Trade Lively.

The Master Cleaners and Dyers' association has recently been charged by Ben Kornick, president of the rival Central Cleaners and Dyers, 2705 Fullerton avenue, with responsibility for assaults on the Central drivers, and the burning of three of the Central's trucks. Kornick swore out warrants against Albert Doris, an official of the association, and charged that many gunmen were employed to stifle independent competition.

For years the Master Cleaners and Dyers' association has sought to control the entire industry in Chicago. At the head of it now is F. W. Crowley. Allied with the association are the Cleaners, Dyers, and Pressers' union No. 17742, of which Ben Abrams is president; the Laundry and Dye House Chauffeurs, Drivers, and Helpers' union, of which John G. Clay is secretary-treasurer, and the Retail Cleaners and Dyers' union, of which Sam Rubin is the head, and in which 10,000 tailors are members, paying $2 a month dues and $10 annual assessments.

Through the allied unions, Crowley, as the czar of the entire group, is able to paralyze a rebellious tradesman, the Employers' association charges.

Becker Appeals to Crowe.

Becker, in a letter sent to State's Attorney Crowe and to the Employers' association last December, and made public by the association yesterday, declared that his entire force in his former establishment, which he had operated peacefully many years, was suddenly called out on strike. Union officials told him to see Walter Crowley, manager of the Master Cleaners' association.

"Well, the verdict of Mr. Crowley," the letter states, "was that he could make all our property valueless by simply giving the word, but to show how fair and considerate he was, he would allow us to join the Master Cleaners' association, and pay him $5,000 in cash (no checks accepted).

"Upon our plea that we could not raise more than $3,000 cash, we were told that we could pay the balance, $2,000 in the next two months, June and July, 1927. In addition to that, we were told that unless the prices as laid down by their association were strictly adhered to, the next punishment would be the entire wiping out of our business."

"Mr. Becker's letter added: "So I sold out my entire business against my will. At my age I knew I was not strong enough to do any more fighting." He further said "the Master Cleaners and Dyers' association is not a secret one. Their nefarious business is carried on openly and above board."

The letter cited prices: "They charge $1.75 for a man's suit when $1.25 will give a reasonable profit, and $2.25 for a simple dress when $1.50 would be right."

Mr. Crowe was the only man, Mr. Becker wrote, "who can remedy the outrageous conditions as they exist today, by simply saying, 'I will'."

"By so doing," the letter ended, "you will gain the prestige of the respectable citizens and you would be surprised by the amount of good will you will gain."

Says Nothing Came of It.

Nothing came of it, Becker declared in his statement to Attorney Walker. A few years ago Becker was the chief witness in an indictment against Rubin, Abrams, Boris, et al. Upon the trial the state refused to prosecute, Mr. Becker said.

Now it appears, according to Attorney Walker, that the various factions in the industry have all taken to arms, and have been scurrying about for good gunmen. Becker landed the big prize in Capone, the lawyer said.

"Becker's old company is to be run by a Michigan company which has employed a two-gun gangster and several aids to protect their interests," Mr. Walker declared. "I am informed that the Central Cleaners and Dyers, after many vain attempts to bring their oppressors to justice, has been negotiating with Abe Schaffner, another notorious gunman.

Big Tim Murphy Coming.

"Big Tim Murphy, who is seldom long without a racket, is trying to muscle his way into the Retail Cleaners and Dyers' union. All places are being rapidly filled—none but the surest shooting gunmen need apply."

In a formal statement lamenting the new turn of affairs in business, Secretary Hostetter of the Employers' association declared that:

"For some years there has been a condition in the cleaning and dyeing business of Chicago having all of the earmarks of a conspiracy—a racket or a collusive agreement—by which competition has been strangled and high prices upheld.

"This industry has been shot through with crimes of violence; indictments have been returned only to be stricken off for 'want of prosecution'; independents have been driven from the field."

Finds Rackets Plentiful.

The statement added that the present situation was the climax of such conditions. Mr. Hostetter continued:

"During the last six months there have been presented to this association 98 separate racketeering schemes of one character or another for investigation.

"To suggest an affidavit or statement, or to introduce a lawyer, is sufficient to terrify them into silence. They are almost unanimous in advocating the policy of 'fighting fire with fire' as the only effective solution of their troubles.

"It means that we are sunk to the savagery of the jungle. Out of this is emerging—has already emerged—a new law so hideous in its potentialities as to make one shudder at the possible consequences."

Belgium's misfortune brings you amazing furniture values!

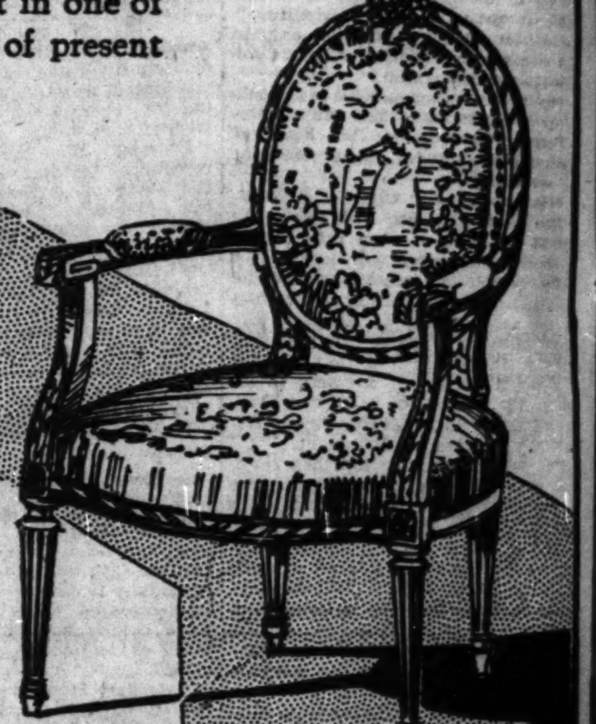
Our foreign buyer and our President have made numerous trips abroad, establishing connections with the best artisans, financing makers in distress, selecting models best suited for this market, and in many instances paying bonuses for extra quality.

Because we offer for $6.75 stools which sold before the war for $42.50 (and hundreds of other equal values), comparative prices would sound like impossibilities. Therefore only one price will appear on the tags in this sale.

In Belgium, famous for generations for wood carving, weaving and needlework, today many artisans and artists are paid less for a full day's work than their American brothers get for an hour's labor.

That's bad enough, but it isn't all. No matter how much the Belgian maker asks for his product, no matter how much the American duty, the low Belgian franc offsets it all. 100 American dollars today buy what it would take 700 dollars to buy in 1913. No such European condition has existed since the time of Napoleon.

Right now and while the stock lasts, we offer rare and beautiful furniture, tapestry and needlework chairs at prices so low that we ask you not to be afraid of the quality. Just come, see for yourself, and take part in one of the strangest adventures of present day business.



$39.75 $42.50 $47.50

LATVIA OUTLIVES FEAR OF RUSSIA; NATION THRIVES

Soviet Trade Treaty Works Profitably.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Copyright: 1928: By The Chicago Tribune.]

RIGA, Latvia, May 26. — Latvia, after ten years of independence, today is beginning to reap the benefits, which seemed at first long delayed and even doubtful.

When the new state was established, pessimists predicted a short life, and even the patriotic Latvians feared reabsorption by Russia. But time is on the side of the little republic, and today Latvia is looking forward to occupying a permanent place among the family of nations.

The present government wishes to preserve friendly relations with Russia, Foreign Minister Antonus Belodis said today, but not more than with any other world governments with which it is in contact. The best proof of this is the working of an economic treaty with Russia, which the present government inherited from its Socialist predecessor.

Reciprocal Features.

Its two features are trade and transit. Latvia promises Russia freedom of transit over its railways to the ports of Riga, Libau and Vindau, and railway communication with the rest of Europe. So well is this worked that the Russian import and transit business over Latvian railways in the last six months has been 340,000 tons, which is an increase of 80,000 tons over the previous year. Exports from Russia over the Latvian lines amounted to 20,000 tons in six months.

Russia promised in the treaty to order goods to a value of $40,000,000 from Latvians annually, and in the first six months it has placed $20,000,000 and promised the second $20,000,000 within a month or two.

Long Term Credits.

Some of these orders are on long term credits, ranging from a year to two years, and are financed by the Latvian State bank, which has close relations with the great English and German banks. The goods ordered are chiefly railway material, clothes, knitted goods, seeds, cattle, bicycles and other manufactured goods.

So far, Mr. Belodis said, the Russians seem to be working the treaty in good faith, and there is no reason to suppose they will not continue to do so. He said that the frontier matter is entirely stabilized.

Latvia's relations with Esthonia are very close, there being a military alliance between the two countries, while relations with Lithuania are still excellent. A complete accord, which would amount to a Baltic union, is delayed by Lithuania's quarrel with Poland over Vilna, in which Latvia is preserving a neutral attitude.

MARRIES

MRS. LYMAN M. DRAKE JR.

[Moffett Photo.]

Spring colors predominated at the wedding yesterday afternoon of Miss Mary Jacoby and Lyman Manley Drake Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman M. Drake of Winnetka, in St. James Episcopal church.

The bride wore a gown of ivory satin and tulle and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley, orchids, and white roses. Her long tulle veil was bound to her head in coronet fashion and trimmed with old duchesse lace which was a part of her mother's wedding veil.

Miss Laura Jacoby was her sister's maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Winifred Smith, Suzanne and Cynthia Kohlsatt, Jean Logan, Anna Katherine Hurd, and Edwina Litsinger. They wore orchid pink dresses and hats.

After the ceremony, which was read at 4:30 by the Rev. Dr. Duncan Browne, a reception was held at the Ambassador Hotel East. The newlyweds will return from their honeymoon on July 4 and will reside in Evanston until the house they are building in Glencoe is ready for occupancy.

MORE EVIDENCE OF SECRET JAPAN TREATY EXPOSED

Shantung Affair Is Seen Part of Plan.

(While Tribune dispatches tell of further allegations that Japan has secretly bartered military aid against the southern Nationalists for valuable concessions from Marshal Chang Tso-lin, northern dictator, Teijiro Tamura, Japanese consul in Chicago, has entered a formal denial of such a secret treaty.)

BY JOHN POWELL.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SHANGHAI, May 26.—The Nationalist government council today made public a number of intercepted telegrams which allegedly passed between agents of Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the north Chinese dictator, and Baron Tanaka, the Japanese premier, which apparently prove the existence of a series of secret agreements negotiated in recent months whereby Marshal Chang practically agreed to legalize the twenty-one demands of 1915, which established a Japanese protectorate over Manchuria. In addition, he is said to have granted the Japanese exclusive rights and privileges in Shantung province.

The most significant telegram contains the signature of Chuan Chiu-kuo, former Chinese chargé d'affaires in Tokio, appointee of the Peking government, who wired Tuan Chi-jui, former Peking premier, stating that he had interviewed Baron Tanaka regarding the Japanese assistance to Marshal Chang.

The telegram stated that Baron Tanaka had said the Japanese real purpose in intervening in Shantung was to handicap the Nationalist advance on Peking, and that if Marshal Chang was prepared to accept and legalize the twenty-one demands, that Japan was prepared to throw ten divisions of troops to north China, including Shantung, Chihli, and the Manchurian provinces.

Baron Tanaka also is quoted as stating that Japan is ready to hand over control of Shantung province to Marshal Chang providing Marshal Chang is willing to grant Japan exclusive privileges in Shantung, including control of the port of Tsingtao.

Japan also insisted that Marshal Chang muzzle the anti-Japanese outburst in his territories.

Barter for Assistance.

The Nanking government made public telegrams exchanged between the northern commander, Chang Chung-chang, formerly stationed in Shantung, and the Peking government, whereby Japan was given special rights in Shantung in exchange for Japanese military assistance against Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, the southern commander in chief.

The Nationalist government's reply to the Japanese declaration of a protectorate over Manchuria, which probably will be dispatched to Tokio tomorrow, declares that Japan's dispatch of troops to Peking and Tientsin districts is likely to cause a recurrence of trouble similar to that at Tsinan; that had Japan not sent troops to Shantung no trouble would have been experienced.

With reference to Manchuria, the Nationalist note declares that the area is Chinese territory, over which China is responsible.

"Japan, America and other nations at the Washington conference guaranteed to respect the territorial integrity of Chinese territories, hence Japan has not the right to send troops or assume the administrative functions of government," it says.

Deny Secret Pact.

PEKING, China, May 26.—(AP)—The headquarters of Chang Tso-lin today declared that the allegations of an agreement with Japan, published in Shanghai, could be regarded as nothing other "than pure fabrication."

Heavy Fighting Continues.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PEKING, May 26.—No details have been received of the northern offensive launched yesterday beyond the statement that heavy fighting continues.

The Japanese assert they are determined to maintain the pledge reiterated at the Washington conference, while Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the Peking war lord, asserts he is prepared to guard the sovereign rights of Manchuria to his utmost ability.

CONSUL DENIES TREATY.

TRIBUNE reports of a secret treaty between Marshal Chang Tso-lin, northern Chinese generalissimo, and Japan, exchanging valuable northern concessions for military support, were formally denied today by Teijiro Tamura, Japanese consul in Chicago. He said:

"A special Shanghai dispatch of THE TRIBUNE foreign service dated May 25 reported the publication by some Chinese vernacular newspapers of an alleged secret agreement between the Japanese minister to China and the Chinese authorities at Peking concerning communists' activities in China, in connection with which certain concessions were said to have been promised to Japan.

"I am authorized to state that there has never been any secret agreement of this kind between Japan and any one of the Chinese military or political factions, and to reiterate that the sole intention of the Japanese government in the present crisis in China lies, as has been already announced by its minister of foreign affairs, in its earnest hope that the deplorable civil strifes now raging in Peking-Tientsin area, exposing native and foreign lives and properties to serious dangers, might be saved, and to do its best efforts to keep such ruthless hostilities from spreading into Manchuria where Japan has vital interests which she cannot afford to expose to similar dangers, and to assure the much needed continued peace, order and prosperity which have characterized that territory during the last twenty years, in sharp contrast to the rest of China."

BUTLER, HEAD OF G. O. P. NATIONAL BODY, TO QUIT

Boston, Mass., May 26.—[Special.]—Former Senator William M. Butler, chairman of the Republican national committee, has definitely decided to retire from the committee, and the delegates at the national convention next month probably will elect Louis K. Liggett to succeed him as Massachusetts member.

Senator Butler became a member of the national committee in the spring of 1923, succeeding the late John W. Weeks. As the personal choice of President Coolidge, Mr. Butler was elected chairman of the committee on the night that the Cleveland convention adjourned in 1924, and he will have served exactly four years when he relinquishes that office to the man designated by the nominee of the Kansas City convention.

Friends of Herbert Hoover have made every effort to induce Mr. Butler to continue not only as a member of the committee but also as Hoover's choice for the chairmanship, should the secretary of commerce get the nomination. Chairman Butler leaves for Kansas City next Wednesday. Before that time he probably will formally announce his retirement.

EAST LAGGING IN AIR SERVICE, BUT WAKES TO NEED

Saga of Chicago to New York Flight.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, May 26. — [Special.] — Passenger service on the air lines is expanding every week. Comfortable cabin planes will fly this summer out of Chicago to the Pacific coast and to the Atlantic seaboard. At present the eastern service is far behind the west. New York has no passenger service, except the emergency travel with the air mail provided out of Chicago by the National Air Transport company.

The Colonial Airways wil soon start a service between New York and Boston. By next fall it will be operating between Buffalo, Springfield, Mass., and Boston. A new Montreal-New York line is soon to open

The development in the east seems to depend largely on the action of cities in providing airports and on the ability of the manufacturers to supply ships. Orders are now in for a year ahead. Capital is ready and the people are becoming "air minded."

Story of New York Trip.

This is the description of a journey in the only eastern service now available out of Chicago, riding on the mail plane to New York. It shows what will happen to you when you decide to take to the air. All the familiar landmarks of rail and auto travel are wiped out. You will be in cloudland, playing leap frog with storms, looking at mountains, lakes, and rivers, instead of station platform signs.

This journey begins at the Chicago municipal airport at 63d street and Cicero avenue. This is becoming a busy place, with passenger ships arriving and departing on time table schedules day and night. The New York service has been in operation since last September, with only one fatal accident. This was when a new pilot struck what is called a "line squall."

The San Francisco ship is 40 minutes late this morning and it is 8:50 o'clock before the start is made. The pilot is Frank Burnside, one of the oldest in the service, who has been flying between Chicago and Cleveland every day for years. The ship is a big Douglas biplane, with 2 open cockpits and a 400 horsepower Liberty engine.

Decides to Wear Parachute.

The pilot climbs in behind. Your seat is a deep and roomy place among the mail bags. At the last moment a disconcerting parachute, which feels like a knapsack, is strapped around you. Privately, you decided to slip out of it, as you would never dare jump with it anyway. But you leave it on. With a helmet and goggles and windshield, you are well protected against the wind behind the propeller.

It is a quiet, sunny morning on the field, but as soon as you rise and head southeast a haze is observed over the city, gray there and blue in the distance. The pilot waves at you and points over the tail of the ship. A big silver Ford monoplane is sailing along with us, quite close but higher as if ready to swoop down and attack. This is the Detroit mail, which soon swings off toward the sand dunes.

In fifteen minutes you are riding along west of the dunes, with the lake and the gray plumes of Gary the chief landmarks. The steady, weather beaten wings are bright with sunshine. The cockpit is comfortable, but cabins must come. The wind here makes it difficult to read the morning paper.

From the altitude of about 2,000 feet the earth flowing below is a vast flat plain, dotted with homes and cut into thousands of neat farms.

Log of First Hours.

10:35 a. m.—The pilot signals again and points below. You see a landing field and a hangar, but sweep by in a few seconds.

11:15 a. m.—Through the haze a bay comes into sight ahead. The wind has freshened and the wings bend and turn. The ship now is over the bay shore. Factories appear and a large town on the right. Then the lake and the outskirts of a city. Can it be Cleveland? No, the ship drones on. The lake is now over the left wing. There is a peninsula and to the right the haze of the city. The tiny waves are washing in on the beach below. Now over land again, a railroad, open suburbs, and at 11:50 a. m. the ship begins to settle, dropping with even keel, then bending and going down in a wide circle.

Short Stop at Cleveland.

This is Cleveland—318 miles out of Chicago. Pilot Burnside is through here. The mail is transferred to a sister ship which is all ready. You are given a few moments to walk the solid earth, get a little lunch across the street and smoke a cigaret.

"All aboard for New York," the manager of the office tells you. A ladder is placed against the new plane and you climb in, readjusting the parachute, for the trip ahead is the most hazardous part of this air line—over the mountains of Pennsylvania.

12:18 a. m.—The ship is off again It is colder and you put on an overcoat. The wind sings mournfully through the wires as the ship circles up to a new altitude, about 5,000 feet. There is a new pilot in the cockpit, Dean C. Smith, a tall, smartly dressed, capable looking man. Once at the desired altitude the ship heads east and travels as steadily as an express train.

It grows colder. Clouds are drifting by, some under the wings. A big white bank of fog looms up ahead.

12:50 a. m.—Now you are above that cloud bank which shut off the east. It is made up of puffs of wooly white vapor. It is blinding white in the sun, like a winter day. Through openings the earth lies far below in a pattern of sunshine and shadow The wind plucks with live fingers at your head. The fog clings as you dash through it. The wind whines.

1:15 p. m.—There is a river and it looks as though the country has become broken and rolling. It is lonesome all alone up in the air. Towns? There are a few nameless ones, but they mean nothing to the air traveler.

Reaches Home of Storms.

2:10 p. m.—The earth has rolled up gently into waves and ridges of dark crust, forest covered. The farms and villages have disappeared. This is the Alleghany mountain barrier, home of the clouds and storms of this region. The altitude now looks like 8,000 or 9,000. Dark clouds ahead.

2:30 p. m.—Driving right into a storm. The lightning flashes to the left in front of the plane. Rain drops splash on the windshield. More and bigger mountain waves ahead. The gleam of a trout stream far below. This is the wilderness. The plane climbs higher. The pilot is going up over this storm.

2:40 p. m.—Now the ship is sailing high in the sunlight again. The dark clouds have gone. This may be Pennsylvania or Mars.

3:00 p. m.—Can't see anything ahead; we have run into a heavy fog. This is compass work for the pilot. He goes higher, ever seeking the sun. He finds a road into the open. This is too high and remote a world in which to be comfortable. Read the Gumps or the want ads or something.

Mountains Safely Crossed.

3:25 p. m.—The plane is going down through the fog. It comes out at last over a gray farm and hedge row country, a neat and conventional land. The mountains have been crossed. There is another river and a city, then more green and checkered country.

3:50 p. m.—Landing. This must be the New York airport at Brunswick, N. J. A few circles on bended wing and the wheels touch the earth gently.

You have come 399 miles since Cleveland—to New York in 7 hours. The plane is 40 minutes late, that is all—and those minutes were not lost on this route, but somewhere west of Chicago by the San Francisco ship.

This landing completes a trans-continental air trip by this writer in passenger planes, with a trip along the Pacific coast, making 4,140 miles in air, and all as part of the regular flying services that are spreading a network of transportation over this country.

The Brunswick airport is nearly 2 hours' travel from New York by bus and train. If Chicago gets a lake front airport it will have the distinction of having a real city landing place, not one in name only.

YOUTH KILLED IN AUTO CRASH ON SOUTH SIDE

Three deaths yesterday increased the automobile fatality toll in Cook county to 374. The dead:

Albert Kulish, 20, of 10150 South Michigan avenue. Killed late last night when the automobile in which he was riding collided at 68th street and Cottage Grove avenue with another car driven by Ralph Love, 43, of 6910 Cottage Grove avenue. Love was seriously injured and was taken to Jackson Park hospital. Kulish had purchased his car only a few hours earlier.

Thelma Wagner, 5, of 2255 Augusta street. Struck by an automobile as she stood on the sidewalk at Rockwell and Augusta streets. The driver of the car, William Ax, 25, of 3552 Lyndale avenue, was held on a charge of manslaughter and Roger Metcalf, 509 Orleans street, was held for the inquest. According to police, Ax was trying to avoid the truck when he drove on the sidewalk and struck the child.

Frank Wittstern, 75, of 1507 Cleveland avenue, a laborer. Run down by an automobile at Sedgwick street and North avenue on May 18. The driver of the car was Joseph Contoris, 23, of 2455 Burling street.

CHICAGO PILOT KILLED; PLANE HITS DEPRESSION

New York, May 26.—[Special.]—James A. Reid of Chicago, reserve pilot on the New York-Atlanta air mail route, was killed this morning when his plane crashed near Richmond, Va., according to reports received here.

Reid was carrying northbound mail from Richmond when he was forced to land. After striking the ground his machine rolled over a ten foot embankment. He was crushed to death and the airplane was wrecked.

No one saw the accident, and there are no telephones near the scene of the crash.

Officials of the company said Reid volunteered to take the mail through in spite of heavy weather. He was told he could make the attempt, but instructed to turn back if he encountered fog.

Reid is said to have joined the Pitcairn company several weeks ago, coming from Chicago. He is said to have no close relatives.

BROTHER DYING; HUNT SISTER.

Chicago police have been requested by the police of Portland, Ore., to locate Miss Mabel Walters, whose last address was on Lombard avenue, Oak Park, so she may be informed that her brother, Roy, is dying in that city.

BUTCHER GETS CHANCE TO USE ICEBOX PISTOL

Expecting a holdup some day and foreseeing he would be locked in his ice box should it happen, Henry Schmidt, a butcher of 211 East 75th street, put a revolver in the box, and yesterday he had the chance to use it. The bandit came in late in the afternoon, waited until Schmidt had finished with a woman customer, and then presented an automatic. He backed Schmidt and his 11 year old son, Henry Jr., into the ice box and then took $200 from the till. Schmidt fired three shots through the glass door of the box as the robber was leaving.

A police guard was placed at the home of Municipal Judge Herbert G. Immenhausen, 148 West Superior street, last night after an anonymous telephone caller informed the judge that he had overheard several Italians making threats to bomb the Immenhausen residence. The informant said the Italians were angry because the judge had fined a compatriot arraigned before him in the Morals court several months ago.

One
Automobile That Says:

"I am Somebody—I'm Going Somewhere"

THOUSANDS of cars roam the streets. Some claim to go very fast, some tolerably fast. Some get by on nickel plate. Many sell on price alone. But Reo builds the Wolverine to be a different kind of an automobile.

Builds it to say, "I am somebody—I'm going somewhere." And Reo puts in the stuff to make the Wolverine mean just what it says.

Reo gives it a heavier chassis—the most expensive brakes in the industry—a motor that compares with those in many more expensive cars—trim bodies and comfort.

Reo gives it top speeds that make more costly cars blush with shame.

In short, Reo builds the Wolverine for people who want a car that really looks like something, acts like something, gets somewhere—yet is priced as low as $1195 f. o. b. factory.

That's the Reo Wolverine. Meet one today in any Reo showroom. Ask it to tell the entire story with you behind the wheel. You'll be surprised.

CHICAGO AS A MUSIC CENTER.

In a letter to Edward Moore, music editor of THE TRIBUNE, the editor of Singing and Playing, a New York musical review of standing, writes: "Every indication points to the strategic and technical importance of Chicago. As our country is on the verge of a new era in transportation—in a few years our skies will be darkened with passenger airplane expresses—our artists will have a new territory to serve, and it seems that Chicago will be one of the biggest centers, if not the biggest. Unquestionably the whole country is on the verge of a new boom in music."

THE TRIBUNE is confident this editor's views are well founded, but it is also interested in Mr. Moore's ironic reception of them as evidence that at last New York is beginning to realize that in this hinterland is a musical life and achievement, to say nothing of future development of first rate importance. And Mr. Moore is of opinion and supports it with expert testimony that so far as the midwest is concerned a New York cachet is not necessary to professional success or the favor of the public.

That New York critical opinion is provincial is not surprising. All great capitals are provincial. Mr. Moore has no difficulty in citing rather ridiculous instances of the belated discovery of talent by New York critics. What is important for us is the development of our own standards and very great opportunities as one of the musical capitals of the world. For more than a generation Chicago has had one of the great orchestral organizations of the world which thirty years and more ago was not only presenting the great classics under one of the greatest conductors of any age and on the highest level of performance, but was giving the earliest hospitality to new music. The later establishment of a grand opera company of its own has added to the city's prestige as a musical center and given more weight to its indorsements with the American public, at least outside of New York. Mr. Eckstein's unique accomplishment at Ravinia has added even more, at least among the musically informed.

But although the spirit of Chicago ought to be and is friendly to experiment and novelty, and though, thanks to Theodore Thomas and to his successor, Mr. Stock, the select congregation of the orchestra has had access to new work at all times, the policy of the grand opera has been conservative from the first. With the balance sheet showing a huge deficit and the patronage a preference for the old favorites, no appeal for a more speculative policy could have or perhaps deserved to have much force. If it could have been backed by an ability and willingness to cover an increased deficit, we think it might have effected some changes in the schedule, for, save possibly in the case of one musical director, we believe there was no special resistance to reasonable experiment.

With the present grand opera régime we think there is a substantial reason to hope for an advance in policy. Doubtless the main outlines of policy for the grand opera season will remain the same so far as the presentation of the stock or classic works is concerned, but in the new opera house on Madison street has been included a smaller theater and it is quite practicable, we are confident, and certainly highly desirable that this should be used to extend our operatic and musical frontier and to give discriminating patrons of music an opportunity to hear interesting new forms. If the Civic Opera is to be characteristic of Chicago, it will be hospitable and helpful to progress in the arts as Chicago is in science, education and material enterprise. It is no secret that there is a substantial music loving public which is not interested in conventional grand opera. But it would be a reliable nucleus, at least, towards the support of new work and of older operas of high merit but lacking in general appeal. The experiment of the Allied Arts though not made permanent gave encouraging evidence of the possibilities in this field.

We think the smaller theater of the new opera house offers the Civic Opera association a chance to take the lead in the country. And we are optimistic, too, about the present direction of its affairs. Mr. Insull is anything but hidebound. He has been one of the most progressive men in his own industry and vocation, and we can see no reason to fear he is blind to the benefit of intelligent experiment and to the necessity of progress in our musical affairs.

We are not recommending expensive speculations in novelties. But we are confident that in the right hands the smaller theater can perform an invaluable service to the cause of music and general culture in America with very little expenditure of money. For it will not call for a heavy salary list and we think is likely to win guarantors and a public not interested in the older works to which the main opera company will devote itself.

A PRELIMINARY TO TAX REDUCTION.

The increase in taxes in Cook county appears to have aroused almost as much astonishment as resentment. Many taxpayers in Cook and throughout the state seem to have paid no attention to the warnings of the consequences to be expected of wasteful government. Now they have discovered that misgovernment is costly and they are demanding that something be done about it.

Fortunately much of the damage is not irreparable. Wasteful practices have been developed, but they can be altered if the will to alter them exists. The action of the Chicago city council in ordering publicity for all city pay rolls is evidence of a disposition to remedy some of the more outrageous practices of the politicians at the expense of the taxpayers.

Much could be accomplished if public spirited citizens of standing in the community and solid, practical experience were appointed to examine the accounts and business methods of the city, county, and sanitary district to discover where expenses can be cut. The appointment of such men would of itself be an evidence of the desire of office holders for economy; the extent to which the recommendations were followed would be an index of the regard of the tax spenders for the interests of the taxpayers.

GERMANY TRAINS FOR THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

News from Duesseldorf, Germany, is that in an exhibition meet in which German Olympic candidates contested Hoffmeister of Hanover broke the world's discus throwing record and that a relay team twice met the world's record for 400 meters. Something says that Germany will take the track and field events of the Olympic meet this time. The nation has been regimented for these sports as it used to be for war.

The old general physical education of Germany was based on gymnasium work. It made a fine average of muscular, bodily welfare, but it was not so easily translatable into sports. Such physical education applied to a whole people is better, although less interesting, than highly specialized training given particularly selected material for proficiency in track and field games. The latter will win athletic meets in such sports and if it is a world meet the wins will be conspicuous. That they indicate a general national average may be doubted. America might produce one man who could do 100 yards under ten seconds and 100,000 who will do sixty miles an hour sitting on their collar buttons in a car. The one in a hundred thousand would not indicate much as to the physical condition of the others.

Germany in preparing for the international games has adopted mass instruction which spreads the benefits of the training and searches minutely for championship material. It is probable that national pride is resolved to seek a triumph of muscle, stamina and endurance both for distinction and for solace. The Swedes made a gallant bid for this distinction and did well and will do so again, but they are not drawing from 60,000,000 of people as the Germans will do.

Americans need not be astonished if the Germans take track and field prizes from them in the next international meet and it will not be a bad thing if such is the case. It might push America into a general training of its youth for the subsequent games which we hope to have held in Chicago in connection with the big show of 1933. It has been said that the United States has won because it took its sports entirely too seriously and made a business of them. If there is anything of a caution or a reproach in that it is because business involved only the most promising men. Germany is making even more serious business of it, but it includes virtually the youth of the nation.

CHICAGO'S 1933 EXPOSITION.

[Topeka (Kas.) Capital.]

A. Loren Brown of Chicago, one of the boosters of the Chicago exposition of 1933, expects this exposition to beat the world's fair of 1893 "ten times over, from any angle you look at it." There is no doubt that Chicago's leaders in every department, possibly excepting the police, intend to repeat in 1933 the triumphs of 1893 in Chicago's exposition. The city's wholehearted enlistment has been demonstrated already.

In fact it is time the country and the west had a world's fair or exposition that people will naturally flock to. In spite of subsequent failures since the memorable show of 1893 there is something in an exposition, when it is on an adequate scale. To elderly people it is hard to realize that the great Chicago world's fair was 35 years ago, and of course younger people have no conception of the thrill that that successful exposition gave to millions of visitors. The outstanding triumph, when one looks back upon it, was the architecture. But even apart from its superb setting the fair itself was one of the really splendid episodes of a lifetime.

In 35 years, of course, much has happened and the world may be said to have been made over. There are so many things of interest which were undreamed of half a century ago that it might appear that a world's exposition is not the great attraction it was in Chicago in 1893 or in Paris in 1900, and in fact several expositions have been passed up by a public surfeited with satisfactions of a material kind. Yet those who recall the Chicago fair remember that its features that live in memory were not in fact material, but were spiritual, and Chicago's spirit is wholly committed to such an exposition in 1933. That millions with their airplanes and automobiles will make a point of Chicago in 1933 can hardly be doubted.

Mr. Brown in his speech on the Chicago exposition in 1933 put together the amazing figures of progress in 35 years. In Chicago since the last exposition population, wage earners and factories have tripled; foreign trade, "a half of which derives or is destined for the Chicago trade territory," has increased five times, and assessable wealth has multiplied 20 times. Chicago he rates as 10 times the city it was in 1893, and he thinks it will make an exposition as much superior. Architects and artists have already been given carte blanche to design the setting. For one thing money is "no object" to the Chicago exposition planners. They are out to do a big thing and will do it.

MUSICAL MYSTERY.

Mrs. Smith—This 'ere fellow thinks 'e can sing like Caruso.

Mrs. Brown—Well, they do say as 'ow Caruso 'ad a beautiful voice, but 'ow could they know, with 'im stranded on that island with nobody but Friday to 'ear 'im?—Tit Bits.

CATHOLICS, JEWS, PROTESTANTS OBSERVE PENTECOST

BY THE REV. ERNEST A. BELL, D. D.

[Minister Night Church, Chicago.]

Seven weeks after Easter is the historic anniversary of Pentecost, falling this year today, May 27. It is not an arbitrary or artificial festival, but like Good Friday and Easter it is the commemoration of a great occurrence among the earliest Christians. At Pentecost came the descent of the Holy Spirit upon the apostles and their associates at Jerusalem. As such, the anniversary is the heritage of all Christendom, and it should be utilized in the life and thought, and prayers and preaching, of all churches.

At this time there is a marked revival of interest in the observance of Pentecost among Protestants, who have for a long time allowed the observance of the day to fall into disuse. The general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, now in session in Kansas City, not only is recognizing today with special services but the bishops in their message at the opening of the conference recommended the appointment of a commission to prepare a program for a world-wide observance of the day in 1930. The Disciples of Christ are in the midst of a program already worked out to culminate in 1930. The general assembly of the Presbyterian church, now in session in Tulsa, Okla., will undoubtedly make similar recommendations, as certain commissioners have gone to the general assembly prepared to sponsor the movement and no objection is anticipated.

Between the resurrection and the ascension Christ spoke often to His disciples of a day that was near, for which they were to wait. We have the record of His words on this subject in the last chapter of Luke's gospel and in the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. He kept telling them that what God had promised by the prophet, Joel, was soon to be fulfilled to them. In our Catholic and Protestant Bibles that great promise, that God would pour His spirit upon all humanity, is found in verses 28 to 32 of the second chapter of Joel. But the Jewish scholars who set the Hebrew Bible into chapters and verses discerningly made a separate chapter of that promise, and it appears in the Hebrew Bible as chapter 3.

Among the Christian festivals observed in the Roman Catholic church the day of Pentecost ranks as a double of the first class. That is, it is a festival of the very highest order, and cannot be supplanted by any other observance whatever. It is of equal rank with Easter Sunday. On the day of Pentecost the celebrating clergy wear red vestments, "to remind us of the tongues of fire."

Pentecost is known also as Whitsunday, that is, white Sunday, from the ancient custom of presenting candidates for baptism in white garments on this holy day. Among Lutherans the New Testament name of Pentecost is retained and efforts to restore it are being made in other churches. The Jews still keep Pentecost, and utilize it for the confirmation of their children. The word Pentecost means "fiftieth." The Jews commemorate on this day the giving of the law at Mount Sinai, fifty days after the Passover and the exodus from Egypt. The Christian Pentecost is fifty days after Easter, that is, seven weeks, counting both Sundays according to the ancient usage.

The tremendous need of our times is God's power in the churches, and through the churches for the world. The fitting observance of the day on which this spiritual energy first burst upon the earliest Christians will help us in our time to share the power which made them conquerors in their time.

The need of this Pentecostal power today is evident as we study society, the world situation and the lack of spirituality of the churches of all denominations, perhaps some more than others, but nevertheless in all. To name some of the factors that enter into the problem: The misunderstanding and strife that imperil holy love in some of the churches; the surrender, by some of the ministers and teachers, of foundation beliefs of the whole Christian movement—beliefs that have held as facts from the first Easter morning till now; the needless conflict between some scientists and some religious persons—often due to misjudgments and sometimes to wrong tempers; laxity in morals and the appalling increase of divorce; extreme violence and political corruption; extortion and fraud; alarm and foreboding of responsible statesmen; wars and the fear of more wars; arrogant and blatant atheism—all these and other evils call for a new Pentecost. Or rather, since the Holy Spirit came to abide with Christ's people always, and does so abide, we ought to plead for an extension and intensification of the work of the spirit of Pentecost in all hearts and in all institutions—that the kingdom of God may come in fullness and finality and his will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

There are some reasons for believing that the Spirit came to the disciples while they were in the temple. Luke tells us in the last verse of his gospel that from the ascension on the Mount of Olives, near Bethany, they returned to Jerusalem, and were continually in the temple, blessing God. They were not likely to be celebrating, ten days after the ascension, the great Jewish festival of Pentecost in the upper room which was the lodging of the apostles, but at the temple, along with the devout Jews from every nation under heaven, who are definitely mentioned in the Pentecostal narrative in the second chapter of Acts. Later, in Acts iii:11 and v:12, it is clear that Solomon's porch in the temple had become Christian headquarters. Jesus had taught in Solomon's porch [John x:23] and he may have instructed the apostles to make that their first meeting place.

Along with the eleven apostles, as they waited and prayed for the fulfillment of the Father's promise, were Mary, the mother of Jesus, with other Christian women, his brothers, and a total company of about 120.

The Spirit came with a rushing sound like a violent wind, and rested like tongues of fire upon each believer in the assembly. Their words were miraculously understood by the multitudes of various languages who rushed to see and hear. The chief preacher among them was the Apostle Peter. Before the day was ended thousands had repented and become followers of Jesus, 3,000 in one day. Their heavenly life impressed all the people, and thousands more soon joined them. They devoted their property generously for the use of the new brotherhood. Calvin remarks that the church of Pentecost was more like a society of angels than of men. It was a colony of heaven. St. Augustine thought that Pentecost had been observed by the apostles themselves. Luke tells us in Acts xx:16 that Paul had decided to sail past Ephesus and was hurrying to Jerusalem, to be there for the day of Pentecost.

By the time of the Reformation many felt that the freedom and vitality of the gospel had been strangled in ceremonials. Some of the reformers cut loose from ritual and went to an extreme of simplicity, even sterility, in public worship. We can scarcely go astray if we recognize suitably the great days of the New Testament, than which there is none greater than Pentecost.

NO. 9.

Come, thou almighty King, help us thy name to sing,
Help us to praise!
Father all glorious, o'er all victorious,
Come and reign over us, ancient of days!

Come, thou Incarnate Word, gird on thy mighty sword,
Our prayer attend;
Come, and thy people bless, and give thy word success:
Spirit of holiness, on us descend!

Come, Holy Comforter, thy sacred witness bear,
In this glad hour:
Thou who almighty art, now rule in every heart,
And ne'er from us depart, spirit of power!

To the great One and Three, eternal praises be
Hence, evermore:
His Sovereign Majesty may we in glory see,
And to eternity love and adore!

FIGHTING PARASITES WITH BIBLICAL OILS.

THE laws of Moses, as found in the Old Testament, require the use of essential oils, such as hyssop and myrrh, as disinfectants. Moses learned his sanitation in Egypt. The Egyptians used the aromatic oils, such as cedar, cloves, and cinnamon, for embalming and in various disinfecting operations. Cedar chips, cedar chests, and cedar oiled paper are used in the fight against moths.

There is a world of folklore evidence, some of it age old, in support of the essential oils as agents to be used by man in his fight against insects and microscopic parasites. In spite of all this urge physicians have been charged with neglecting this group of remedies.

Drs. Kingery and Kisson decided that they would find out what there was to the common faith in these oils. They decided to investigate the power of thymol and related oils to kill the parasites that cause ringworm and a score or more of infective skin disorders. Their tests showed that thymol was a most powerful agent for killing fungi. It had an efficiency rate of 93 per cent where the application was kept up for one minute only. When the exposure was longer the efficiency rate was 100 per cent.

Oil of cinnamon ranked next to thymol. Oil of cloves was a close third. The following aromatic oils were found to be quite inefficient: Peppermint, wintergreen, thyme, lemon, eucalyptol, camphor, menthol. Thymol was quite as efficient as iodine, and much more so than salicylic acid, benzoic acid, and chrysarobin.

There were several of the biblical disinfectants which these experimenters did not try out, such as hyssop and myrrh. They next tried the more effective of these agents against a group of fungi which cause barber's itch, ringworm, favus, and a number of such disorders. They worked all right in the test tube. Kingery and Kisson did not try them practically.

However, a group of prominent skin specialists then proceeded to add bits of practical experience, every one of which tended in small measure to confirm the favorable results which Kingery and Kisson had had with these biblical drugs.

SINUS INFECTION.

Mrs. H. D. D. writes: Will you kindly advise as to the most effective relief for infection of the sinus nerves on either side of the nose. I have used the atomizer containing a proportion of one teaspoonful salt to one pint warm water. I have also snuffed this, and used argyrol, but the trouble still bothers me.

REPLY.

What is now known as sinus infection was known as catarrh yesterday. That statement is true at least in part. I presume light therapy is about the best treatment we have. Some cases need operation.

On the whole, treatment is not very satisfactory. Fortunately, the condition is not very serious.

BOOZE AND THE BENDS.

M. D. writes: I differ with you as to sandhogs and benders. I have known a sandhog for five years and he gets the bends. He is a religious man and neither drinks nor smokes.

Why do you say drinking causes the bends when I know it does not?

REPLY.

If you will permit me, I differ with you as to what you know. You know one religious abstainer who is a sandhog and who gets the bends.

You do not claim to know all the sandhogs, nor how many of them drink. All that I said was that drinking was a predisposing cause of bends. I did not say it was the only cause, or the principal cause, or that none but drinkers got the bends. I quoted an ex-sandhog and told what he said. It was his observation that heavy drinking was the most important contributing cause of the bends.

ALIMONY.

Streator, Ill., May 14.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—1. How long must a man pay alimony to a divorced wife with minor child?

2. If said wife remarries, must he still support her and the child?

3. This man has married again. In case of his death could his divorced wife claim any part of his estate, or would it pass on to his present wife? J. H.

1. During the minority of the child unless the order is changed.

2. Yes, except as this, with other facts might be a ground for securing a change in the order.

3. If the divorce was secured for his fault the wife would have dower in the real estate which he owned during the marriage.

NONCITIZEN MINISTER.

Meckling, S. D., May 18.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Is it legal for a regular ordained minister to perform a marriage ceremony here if he is not a citizen of the U. S. but of Canada?

He has preached here for about three years, and has performed several ceremonies and just now the question has been brought up about the validity of such marriages. E. B.

Yes, they would be valid.

HEIRESS IN QUANDARY.

Chicago, May 18.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—My brother, deceased, was a customer of a New York firm which was a member of the New York Stock exchange. As his heiress I have asked the amount still standing in his name to be transferred to me. They tell me, though, that they are not able to do this without a power of appointment along with a waiver. How should I get such papers, and does it pay to do it, as the sum is very small? E. P.

You should explain the facts to them and ask them to indicate specifically what steps they wish you to take. It seems probable on so small a sum they would be willing to waive probate. If your letter accurately describes what they have already asked, then we would consider their requirements obscure and that they ought to amplify their instructions.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Richmond Examiner reports that a special dispatch from Jackson, Miss., says: "Heavy firing was heard in the direction of Vicksburg on the morning of May 23. It is reported and believed in official circles that the enemy [Gen. Grant's army] assaulted the works at Vicksburg on May 20 and was repulsed." A later report says: "The enemy have made three desperate assaults on Vicksburg and have been repulsed." It is reported here that rebel pickets on the Rappahannock yesterday admitted that Vicksburg had been captured.

MURFREESBORO. — Clement L. Van Vallandigham arrived here on May 24 from Nashville. He was placed in a small spring wagon and taken to the office of Provost Marshal Wiles. Gen. Rosecrans and a few others called on him and three or four hours were spent in conversation. He was ordered taken to the house of Col. Winston, living near our outposts on the Shelbyville road, then to be delivered into the hands of the rebel authorities under a flag of truce.

CHICAGO.—Weddings reported in this city follow: Warren M. Fales and Miss Charlotte B. Nichols, by the Rev. W. H. Ryder; Elias Banker and Mrs. Irena W. Mead, on May 25 by the Rev. I. S. Mahan; Capt. William Kyle of this city and Miss Helen M. Fisher of Otsego county, N. Y., on May 25 by the Rev. E. M. Borring; Samuel J. Pike and Miss Jennie M. Martin on May 25; Porter Weiss and Miss Susannah Newsbaum on May 25 by the Rev. J. R. Shipherd.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Schley's squadron is outside Santiago in the belief that Cervera's fleet is bottled up within the bay. That is the substance of the official reports to Washington. While absolute confirmation of the location of the Spaniards is lacking, owing to the surrounding hills which render invisible from without any ships that may be within, it is said on good authority that a Cuban sympathizer has given to Schley definite information that Cervera is there.

KEY WEST.—Commander McCalla of the Marblehead has again given the Spaniards along the southern coast of Cuba a severe attack of heart disease. Twenty-five miles east of Cienfuegos he ran close in shore without molestation and landed 30,000 rounds of ammunition for the insurgents.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—As soon as the navy is ready to furnish convoys the army of invasion will be sent to Cuba. This statement is made from official authority, which also says the troops and transports are now ready.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE.—An American patrol of one officer and twenty men had an engagement last night in the Luneville sector with a German patrol of equal strength, and routed the enemy. Several Germans were killed. There were no American losses.

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE.—Since yesterday evening the fire of the enemy artillery has shown a marked increase at various places along the British front. Villers-Bretonneux (south of the Somme), the Scarpe valley, east of Arras, and the towns of Auchonvillers, Englebelmer, Mailly—Maillet, and Martinsart, between Albert and Arras, all have been bombarded with gas and high explosive shells.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE.—The first airplanes to be furnished to the American army from the United States have arrived in France and are in use in a training camp. They are of the type equipped with the Liberty motor.

CHICAGO. — Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft shook hands and slapped each other on the back in the dining room of the Blackstone hotel and the fashionable throng present rose and cheered and cheered. It was the first time they have greeted each other as friends since the political upheaval in 1912, which resulted in Col. Roosevelt's race for President on the Progressive ticket.

CHICAGO.—Miss Hazel Mae Robbins, daughter of Mrs. Mary E. Robbins, 720 Simpson street, Evanston, and Sergt. Maurice James, son of Prof. and Mrs. James E. James of Evanston, were married on May 25 at St. Luke's Episcopal church, Evanston.

THE FATE OF RESERVISTS.

Detroit, Mich., May 17.—The editorial on reserve officers is excellent. I have always liked the old American designation of "volunteers," and believe reserve officers will keep it alive. They are ready for duty in public emergency, but never appear on the public pay roll during peace except for short periods of instruction; one who gets a couple of weeks in each three years being lucky. They are true volunteers, in the highest sense of the word.

For several years reserve officers attending camps of instruction were herded like orphans at a circus; marched in formation under command of junior regulars on seeming assumption that anything on federal pay roll, even a regular second looey, outranked a major or colonel of reserves. But the reservists generally swallowed it and assimilated all the instruction they could get. Seemingly the lessons of the war had not been learned by high command, and the same old stuffed-shirt types were in charge. Recently reserve unit commanders have been allowed some of the functions of command.

National guard units are protected by a section of national defense act which provides that all vacancies shall be filled by promotion within unit when possible. There is no such law for reserve divisions, and we may again have the bloc promotions of long lists of regular officers to all reserve vacancies in field and general grades. Few reserve captains in the late war had chance for field rank or better. It was like the British attitude toward native Indian officers: "You can be lieutenants, perhaps captains; but field ranks will be filled from certain county families at home." Today no combat field officer of reserves can become a general. All he can get is a certificate of eligibility meaning nothing much. The young lieutenants coming into the reserve are magnificent; but they should be told that a lifetime of service will always leave them in inferior place unless the laws are changed. VOLUNTEER.

THE CAMPBELLS ARE COMING.

Maywood, Ill., May 13.—Your correspondent, T. W. Brian, wishes to know if Highland Scotch people are white or yellow. This is to prove that they are white. I am of Highland Scotch parentage, white, weigh 145 pounds, and if he is over that weight I will meet him in a fight to decide whether the MacLeans or the Brians are yellow, the proceeds to go to some worthy charity. JOHN MACLEAN.

SCOTLAND FOREVER.

Chicago, May 15.—"A First Division Canadian" saw a big Scotch soldier on the firing line who was scared stiff and crying like a baby. He also informs us that 90 per cent of Scotch regiments are composed of Englishmen. This, to any one not prejudiced, would suggest that the chances were 9 to 1 against the scared party being Scotch although in a Scottish uniform.

Is he aware that only 23 per cent of the 1st Canadian Division were Canadian born? I have no figures at hand but would not be surprised if the same applied to the Australians and New Zealanders, and I am certain the balance were not English.

Personally I think the English are fine; no doubt the few trimmings they had from the Scotch previous to the "Union of the Crowns," and when Scottish regiments were 100 per cent Scotch, made them realize the error of their ways, and also explains their hatred of the bagpipes.

Judging by "A First Division Canadian's" letter I am satisfied that he saw very little, and to be blunt about it, I think he is not fit to shine a Scottish soldier's shoes. "CANADIAN SCOTTISH."

DUMBER.

Chicago, May 18.—In this morning's TRIBUNE "Waterloo Wat" says he has been waiting for some one to ask MacCartie, "What's dumber than a dumb Norwegian?" He wants this omission rectified. Well, here it is: "Waterloo Wat" is dumber than a dumb Norwegian because the dumbest Norwegian knows "MacCartie" is a Swede. C. O. G.

THE BETTER TO BITE YOU WITH, MY CHILD.

Chicago, May 7.—On Saturday, April 28, my little girl, 4 years old, was playing on the sidewalk with her ball. It rolled out into the street and a passing auto rolled over it and burst it. The man at the wheel got out, and asked my little girl for her name and address. She gave him this information and he wrote it down. He also promised he would replace the ball that afternoon. Now, I am not asking for a new ball, as it really was an accident, but imagine my little girl asking me to go on North avenue to look for the man with three shining "teeths". She surely is disappointed in this man with gold teeth, as he had no business promising her a new ball if he didn't intend to keep his promise. MRS. A. LAUFER.

ANGEL OF PARTY SAYS SOUTH IS ALL FOR SMITH

Calls Prediction of Split in Ranks Absurd.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Houston, Tex., May 26.—[Special.]—Jesse H. Jones, multi-millionaire of Houston, popular son Presidential candidate and Democratic convention host, yesterday discredited as foundless, a prediction by Clark Howell, publisher and Democratic national committeeman of Atlanta, Ga., that the prohibition and Catholicism issues will more likely than not split the party definitely and permanently at the meeting here next month.

"In electoral votes—mind you, I am speaking of electoral votes—the south will support the Democratic nominee, regardless of who he is," Mr. Jones said.

Mr. Howell, considered more of an authority for the eastern than the western section of Dixie, makes his interesting forecast in an article in the current issue of the North American Review.

"If the south rejects Al Smith, which is not entirely unlikely," the publisher writes, "the northern wing which helped elect Wilson and Cleveland, may desert the party.

South for Smith, Leader Says.

"Only a phenomenal pressure of wisdom and charity can carry the party through those perils to solidarity of sentiment and concert of action for a common victory," an excerpt reads, while another declares "The most appealing bet to a sporting spirit would be that the Houston convention will split rather than solidify."

Former Gov. William P. Hobby of Texas, joined with his candidate, Mr. Jones, in denying there are grounds to warrant Mr. Howell's statements.

"Gov. Smith probably will be nominated in the first ten ballots," said Mr. Hobby.

"The south will support the New Yorker. We are more anxious to have a Democrat in the White House than we are to keep the presidency dry and Protestant. The Ku Klux Klan is fighting Al Smith, but this will give him as many southern votes as it costs him.

"As for prohibition, it is hard to tell how much of drinking there is in the south because it is done more privately than in the north; but Dixie on record is dry and will never vote for a temporizing plank, including the one suggested by Gov. Smith, giving each state its right to prohibit or permit liquor.

A Candidate Worth $50,000,000.

Mr. Jones, who may become an important factor in the Democratic convention, although endorsed by the Texans principally to forestall a declaration for or against Al Smith, was interviewed in the convention arrangements headquarters, where he has taken an office and is in active charge of affairs.

Tall enough to carry his two hundred pounds well, he lounged in a chair, his feet on a desk and answered questions with the conservativeness, as he described it, of a new candidate in the field. His voice was soft, low and meditative; his hair solid gray and his eyes, a calm blue. He is credited with having assets of $50,000,000, this presidential possibility. He is 54 years old and has a wife and a stepchild.

"All my thoughts have been on acting as host to the delegates," he said. "I have never sought a public office, never wanted one."

"Don't you have some message for the middlewest?" he was asked.

"You can say this—that I feel deeply the need for federal attention to the farmers' problems. I'm not sure what would be the best remedial measure, but I am certain the farmer has been too long neglected."

North Carolina Results.

Charlotte, N. C., May 26.—(AP)—Reports from 43 of the 100 counties in North Carolina tonight indicated that Democratic party precinct meetings today had voted to instruct their delegation to county conventions to favor presidential nomination candidates as follows:

Twelve counties for Representative Cordell Hull of Tennessee; nine counties for Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York; one county split between Smith and Hull; one county split between Hull and Gov. A. W. McLean of North Carolina; three counties instructed against Smith; one county instructed to vote for a dry candidate; 17 counties uninstructed.

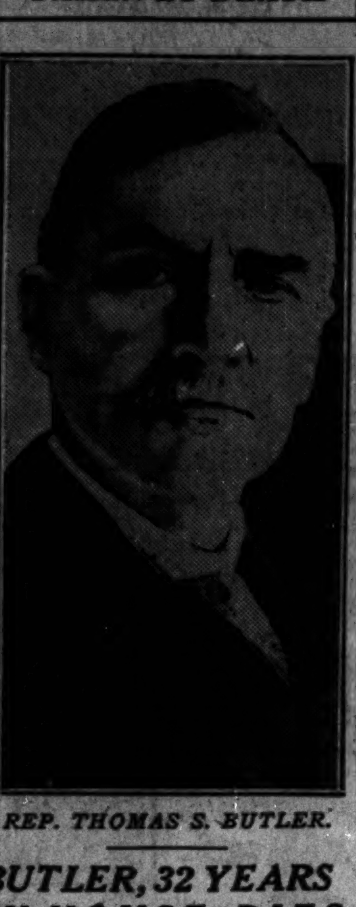
TAKEN BY DEATH



REP. THOMAS S. BUTLER.

BUTLER, 32 YEARS IN HOUSE, DIES OF HEART ATTACK

Washington, D. C., May 26.—[Special.]—Representative Thomas S. Butler, 72 [Rep., Pa.], chairman of the house naval affairs committee and known as the "fighting Quaker," died at 8 p. m. today in his apartment at the Burlington hotel. He had served in the house for 32 years.

Mr. Butler became ill of angina pectoris three weeks ago, a short time after he had made his successful fight in the house for the passage of naval legislation. Mrs. Butler and two sons, Samuel and Horace, were at his bedside when he died. Another son, Brig. Gen. Smedley Butler, is with the American marines in China.

The Pennsylvania representative had been chairman of the naval committee since the Republicans captured control of the house at the close of the world war. As an advocate of a strong navy, Mr. Butler was forced to go against the teachings of his religion.

Mr. Butler served 16 uninterrupted terms and according to old-timers this is the longest period of consecutive service in the annals of the house.

Representative Fred Britten [Rep., Ill.] is ranking Republican member of the naval committee and as such is in line for the chairmanship.

CONGRESS O. K.'S $16,285,000 CUT IN POSTAL RATES

New Bill Effective July 1 if Coolidge Signs It.

Washington, D. C., May 26.—(AP)—Congress completed legislative action today on a measure to reduce postal rates on most classes of mail to the 1921 basis, thereby slashing $16,285,000 from the mail costs of the nation to take effect on next July 1. The measure now goes to the White House, where Chairman Griest of the house postoffice committee predicted it would meet approval.

Newspapers and magazines receive a large benefit from the measure in reduced mail costs, estimated to create a saving of $6,000,000 a year. The reduced rates include a return to the 1920 basis for the mailing of advertising reading matter by the publishers.

Back to One Cent Postcard.

Other provsions include:

Restoration of the one cent postal card.

Reduction to the 1921 basis of most matter falling under the second, third, and fourth classes of mail.

The creation of a new postal service in the form of acceptance of business reply cards and letters in business reply envelopes for transmission without prepayment of postage. This is estimated to cause an increase in postal revenues of $4,000,000.

The collection of one cent additional an ounce on first class matter when mailed with deficient postage.

Reduction of bulk pound rates on third class matter, causing a decrease in rates of $10,500,000.

Reduction of rates to distant zones on fourth class matter, a decrease of $2,200,000.

A minimum charge per piece on second class matter when there are 32 pieces or more to the pound.

The provision of special delivery stamps in denominations of 10, 15, 20, 25 and 35 cents with the service extended to all classes of mail, estimated to cause an increased postal revenue of $800,000.

Rates on Second Class Matter.

The reduction in the second class rates which affect the mail charges on advertising portions of newspapers and magazines would place the first four zones under the 1920 rate basis and the remaining four zones at a midway point between the 1920 and 1921 charges.

The new rates proposed in the bill would be a reduction from 2 to 1½ cents per pound in the first and second zones; from 3 to 2 cents in the third zone; from 6 cents now existing for the fourth, fifth and sixth zones to 3, 4 and 5 cents for these respective zones and from 9 to 6 cents in the seventh zone and from 9 to 7 cents in the eighth zone and between the Philippine Islands and the United States.

DRYS RAID THREE CENTERS IN SOUTH SIDE NIGHT LIFE

Prohibition Agents Robert Richeson and Willard Moglin were assigned several weeks ago to gather evidence against anti-Volstead cafés in the colored sections on the south side. They purchased a pint of walnut stain, browned their faces and hands and then visited the cafés in the guise of colored business men from Birmingham, Ala.

So successful was their mission that three of the brightest spots patronized by Negroes were raided last night. They are the Greenland at 3520 South State street; the Casino Gardens at Blue Island, and the Cotton Gardens, 3510 Indiana avenue. In each place arrests were made and liquor seized.

Another detail of agents visited the Triangle café at 810 Des Plaines avenue, Forest Park. Sixteen barrels of beer were taken and Michael Rafferty, the owner, was arrested. The prohibition forces had received complaints that high school students were drinking in this resort.

Hursen's "Funeral-Homes" Relieve Home-Crowding at Funerals

There are many who desire to preserve the environment and facilities of home when a funeral takes place. Yet, the space is small and the visiting friends are many. Often the furnishings in the house or apartment are entirely moved out to avoid the discomfort and crowding which are inevitable.

At each of the 3 Hursen "funeral-homes" in Chicago there are elegant, spacious suites set apart in quietness for the very purpose of having funerals conducted as in the home, without the crowding or discomfort.

Each suite or apartment is furnished as at home. It has the environment of home, the space, the exclusiveness, the peace and quietness and the facilities of home. It has more. There is a service to family and visitors which it is rarely possible to render in the home.

This is why each of Hursen's 3 funeral establishments in Chicago, the most elegant in all America, are in fact "funeral-homes." They are built to accommodate funerals of any size, large or small. Yet there is no extra charge for the use of these suites or for the chapels.

The charge for "Hursen" funerals is but a fraction of the charges usually exacted elsewhere. "Hursen" funerals cannot be surpassed for elegance. Call Hursen, of course!

JUGO-SLAVS MOB ITALIAN CONSUL, RIP DOWN FLAG

Protest Sale of Land to Alien People.

BELGRADE, Jugo-Slavia, May 26.—(AP)—Demonstrations against Italy and counter demonstrations against Jugo-Slavia broke out today in the districts of Dalmatia and Slovenia. Consulates were attacked and flags of the two countries were torn down and desecrated. Police used bludgeons freely and hundreds of heads were cracked.

Decision of the Jugo-Slavian government to ratify the Nettuno conventions, which would permit Italian citizens to own land within 30 miles of the Adriatic coast of Jugo-Slavia, caused the outbreaks. Jugo-Slavians demonstrated against Italy and Italians resident in the disturbed districts at once retaliated.

Mob Attacks Consul.

At Sebenico, Dalmatia, the Italian consul was driven into his cellar by a mob which gave way to police only after a hard fight.

At Preko, irate Italians, who heard of the Sebenico episode, took a Jugo-Slavian flag off a motorboat, tore it into shreds, and burned the remnants in the public square.

Fascists prevented the Jugo-Slavian steamer Kosovo from Zara from entering Preko harbor and that port now is reported closed to Jugo-Slavian traffic.

Demolish Clubroom.

Zara itself was the scene of an anti-Italian riot. The Italian clubrooms there were demolished, an Italian flag was burned in the market square, and the windows of the Italian consulate were smashed. The mob also wrecked the offices of an Italian steamship company.

It is reported from Spalato that Italy has recalled Consul Stanetti. He is to report personally to his home government regarding a Jugo-Slav film which was shown there and which, it is said, offensively belittled the Italian army.

Rioting at Spalato.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SPALATO, Jugo-Slavia, May 26.—A huge crowd, aroused over a report that Italians had burned two Jugo-Slavian flags and an alleged speech by Gabriel D'Annunzio, the poet-aviator, in which he was credited with saying that "next year Dalmatia would belong to Italy," today conducted anti-Italian demonstrations. The Italian club, Lega Nacionale, was invaded and the interior demolished. The crowd was tremendously excited and the demonstrations continued until late at night.

Roman Students Protest.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, May 26.—Tension between Austria and Italy over Upper Adige burst out again today when 400 Italian university students, in retaliatory demonstrations, tried to register a protest before the Austrian legation at the Piazza Del Popolo. The demonstrations were aimed as a reply to the incident at Innsbruck Thursday, when Tyrolese students tore up the flag floating before the Italian consulate there.

The students marched first to the Palace Chigi, applauding Premier Mussolini, who, however, did not appear. The mob then went to the tomb of the unknown soldier, where they rendered homage and then dispersed.

MINER RESCUED 146 HOURS AFTER BLAST IS DEAD

Waynesburg, Pa., May 26.—(AP)—John Wade, 38, Negro miner who was rescued after having spent 146 hours in the darkened recesses of the Mather mine, near here, following an explosion, died late today at a Waynesburg hospital. He succumbed to pneumonia, which developed suddenly due to his long exposure, and quickly sapped his exhausted strength, doctors said.

Previous to the time he was stricken, Wade's only complaint was that his feet ached. After the explosion, which occurred last Saturday, Wade said he "walked and walked" and then sat down until located by rescuers late yesterday. He did not remember much that happened while wandering in the débris strewn mine tunnels.

A total of 176 bodies had been taken from the mine tonight. At least a score of men are still listed as missing.

KILLED BY GAS IN HOME.

Frank Boslusny, 38, of 3311 West 23d street, a tailor, was found asphyxiated in his home last night. Three burners in the gas range were open. Mrs. Boslusny told the police that her husband had been ill two years.

SUCCESS

There is but one straight road to success. Real merit marks the milestones. The useful individual or firm is inevitably the successful one.

All the printers' ink or white paper in the land would not sustain a firm over a period of fifty years without real merit behind it. Quality, price and fair treatment must be there or customers would not support a concern for so long.

Opportunities are never lacking to those who make their way by merit. The capable, reliable man is so much sought after in these days of modern business that he cannot long remain undiscovered.

CALUMET HARBOR TAX PLAN UPHELD BY CITY LAWYERS

Legal Opinions Sought for Early Court Test.

Proponents of the Calumet harbor project which would make South Chicago a seaport with great benefits accruing after the completion of the deep waterway, were given new hope yesterday. From the office of Corporation Counsel Samuel A. Ettelson came the message that perhaps the enabling legislation for the harbor construction and maintenance is not defective despite the contrary opinion of Ald. John S. Clark, chairman of the city council finance committee.

It was admitted that County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer is the one who must make the decision which will either permit the beginning of the building of the harbor or delay it until corrective legislation has been obtained from the general assembly. Mr. Sweitzer said he would be guided by the best legal opinions and that he would give opportunity for an early court test, either a mandamus suit to compel him to levy the harbor tax, or an injunction suit to prevent him from levying it.

Disappointed by Decision.

Business men and property owners of South Chicago and the Lake Calumet region were indignant yesterday upon learning of the finance committee decision. The harbor and the connecting link would boom real estate values and make that southern extremity of the city a far greater center of industry and commerce, they point out.

Patrick H. Moynihan, chairman of the Illinois commerce commission and Republican leader of South Chicago, saw Mayor Thompson and obtained the assurance that everything the city's forces could do would be done.

The obstacle, as Ald. Clark saw it, is that in getting legislative authority to put a tax of 4 mills on each $100 of assessed valuation of Chicago property, an amendment was not secured to the Juul law which fixes a tax rate limitation. It was admitted by the city's lawyers that this was a slip, due to the illness at the time of Leon Hornstein, the city's expert.

Warrants Are Withheld.

First Assistant Corporation Counsel James W. Breen held that the intent of the legislature is plainly shown in the language of the statute and that under a liberal interpretation this law is not in conflict with the Juul law. Nevertheless, it was understood, Controller Charles C. Fitzmorris had been advised not to issue any tax anticipation warrants pending further study of the law.

It was pointed out that on a $25,000 piece of property the tax would be only 40 cents a year—because of the practice of fixing the assessed valuation at approximately 40 per cent of the real value—and if the tax is levied it would be unprofitable for any one to resort to court action to escape paying it. From all city property it would bring $1,200,000 a year revenue, but the individual payments would all be small.

WOMAN GAS VICTIM REVIVED.

Mrs. Katherine H. Shipman, 66 years old, was overcome by gas when a pot of coffee boiled over in the kitchen of the home of her son-in-law, S. E. Fisher, at 1652 West 100th place. She was revived by Lieut. James Fleming and his inhalator squad.

CLAIRE DUX SINGS AS NORTH SHORE FESTIVAL CLOSES

Children's Chorus Is Pleasing Feature.

BY EDWARD MOORE.

An afternoon and an evening concert and the twentieth music festival at Evanston was at an end. There were choruses juvenile and adult, soloists of various types, the Chicago Symphony orchestra and two greatly populous and greatly admiring audiences.

Of all the manifestations of the day the most admirable achievement would seem to be that of Claire Dux, soprano, in the evening. In the first place, she did what no other soloist of the week had attempted, which was to introduce herself with a slowly moving aria with no display about it at all.

She sang the gentlest selection from Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro," but in the second place, she succeeded with it as no soloist did during the week. It was more than excellent singing, though Mme. Dux is the best Mozart singer in the world.

Lawrence Tibbett, baritone, was the other soloist, making a success for himself with other operatic excerpts, arias from "Pagliacci" and the "Barber of Seville," and various songs as popularly demanded. Peter C. Lutkin, founder of the North Shore Music festival, repeated a number from last year's program, the first movement of the Vaughan Williams "Sea Symphony" and the "Hallelujah" chorus from the "Messiah," in which the festival chorus called up all its resonance.

The afternoon, according to the custom of years, was turned over to the children in a concert by them and for them. Some fifteen hundred youngsters took the stage to sing folk songs and religious songs with the heavenly tone of children's voices.

Hold 53d Reunion

Back in 1875 the boys of the Sumner Debating society argued pro and con the political problems of that day at O'Neil's hall in west Lake street. Last night, around a table at the Hotel Sherman at their fifty-third anniversary dinner, the boys were still arguing. The topics had changed with the times, but their technique remained the same.

Originally, there were 117 members of the club. Fourteen gathered last night to greet their comrades at the fifty-third dinner. Forty-eight have died, and letters and telegrams from others in many parts of the country were received.

Two of the old faithful, neither of whom has missed an annual dinner since 1881, were on hand. They are Edward J. Rogerson and William E. Slosson, secretary.

It was Slosson who, in the character of custodian of records, passed around the board a group picture taken at the 1896 dinner. Five of the pictured faces graced the meeting last night.

STANSBURY MADE LOESCH AID FOR VOTE CRIME QUIZ

Frank J. Loesch, chief prosecutor before the special grand jury investigating election crimes, yesterday announced the appointment of David D. Stansbury, former assistant United States district attorney, as one of his principal assistant prosecutors.

Mr. Stansbury, who served under former District Attorney Charles F. Clyne, has been in private practice for some years.

"I have received more constructive help in five minutes from Stansbury and former Judge Frederick L. Fake, another of my assistants, than a month's work had accomplished previously," said Mr. Loesch, who has been given full charge of the inquiry by Attorney General Oscar Carlstrom.

"Of course, every one knows Stansbury was counsel for Druggan and Lake, the beer runners. But other lawyers have also represented Druggan and Lake, and many worse criminals.

"We are convinced absolutely that Mr. Stansbury will do his full duty, and his ability is so great that we believe he is one of the most valuable acquisitions we have made.

"We have just a week to get ready for the grand jury, called for June 4. Of course, everything depends on the county board validating the appropriation for us. Without that $150,000 we are helpless.

"There is going to be no attempt to get a lot of indictments that will not stand up. No case will be brought before the grand jury unless we feel sure that we have the evidence to go through with it and obtain a conviction in court. We are not going to act on suspicion, but purely on facts."

Attorney General Carlstrom was at his home in Aledo yesterday. He will return tomorrow to continue his conferences with Mr. Loesch and the prosecutor's staff.

EDITOR FROM WHOM ROOSEVELT WON SIX CENTS FOR LIBEL DIES

Ishpeming, Mich., May 26.—(AP)—George A. Newett, 72, editor and publisher of the Ishpeming Iron Ore and defendant in the famous libel suit of Theodore Roosevelt, died at his home here today after a long illness.

Roosevelt sued Newett and won 6 cents damages for an article in which the editor said the former President was addicted to liquor.

The case was tried in Marquette in 1912 before the late Justice Richard Flanagan of the Michigan Supreme court, who was at that time a circuit judge. It resulted in a direct 6 cent verdict for Roosevelt.

Newett was born in Janesville, Wis., and had lived in Ishpeming since the early seventies. Years ago he served as mineral statistician for Michigan. He was regarded as one of the best informed men in the country on iron and copper mining and was regarded as an authority on mineral formations in upper Michigan.

JOHN E. ERWIN DIES.

Dixon, Ill., May 26.—(AP)—John E. Erwin, 56, a prominent attorney here, died last night. He is survived by a son and a brother.

ALL YEAR 'ROUND COMFORT

FOR ANY SIZE HOME

NOW the Holland Vaporaire Deluxe for fine homes offers all advantages of large heating-cooling systems used in modern theaters, hospitals and schools. A simple, compact plant of reasonable price and low operating cost constantly circulates clean filtered air—warm or cool, depending on the season—through every room, changing the atmosphere of the whole house every 30 minutes, or oftener when desired. Heating or cooling response is immediate. The minute a fire is kindled the electric Super-Sirculator forces warmth in measured volumes to every part of the home. Thermostatic control prevents a temperature variation of more than two degrees in winter. Forced firing is never required. Power driven warmth meets every demand, in even the most severe weather, and saves tons of coal. The saving in fuel helps pay for the system. Two firings daily—three minutes in the morning, three minutes at night—is all of the attention required.

Proper humidity, maintained constantly and automatically, eliminates the chief cause of colds. The air is kept constantly on the march. It teems with life and energy. Floors are kept warm and draft-free all winter. Summer heat holds no terror. Filtered air is forced by the Super-Sirculator to all parts of the house. The effect is equivalent to an electric fan in every room. The system, built to last a lifetime, may be installed in any sized home, new or old. It is tried and proved and guaranteed by written bond. Every installation is made under factory supervision and engineered to meet the individual requirements of the home to be heated and cooled. Purchase may be made from current income by a deferred payment plan of financing. Before you buy a new heating plant or repair your present one, get the facts about Holland Vaporaire Deluxe. Just sign and mail the attached coupon or telephone our nearest branch.

OFFER CHICAGO 36 HOUR AIR-RAIL TRIPS TO COAST

From Chicago to Los Angeles in 36 hours, including two nights in a Pullman berth and the intervening daylight hours in the cabin of an all-metal, three motor, twelve passenger airplane, is the schedule which has been arranged by the Scenic Airways, Inc.

Regular air service from points at an overnight railroad distance from Chicago to cities removed by a comfortable night's Pullman journey from Los Angeles will be initiated early in July, according to yesterday's announcement by J. Parker Van Zandt, president of the Scenic Airways.

Daylight Scenic Flight.

It is planned to bring into the arrangement all railroad lines between Chicago and the Pacific coast. In addition to saving the traveler 32 hours in the trip to the coast, Van Zandt pointed out that the air-rail transportation arrangement will give the passenger an air view of the most picturesque section of the route.

Cost of the entire trip, including railroads and Pullman fares at both ends of the journey and the airplane passage, will probably slightly exceed $150, according to the estimates of the promoters. A passenger leaving Chicago by rail at 8:15 Saturday evening would transfer to an airplane at Kansas City or Omaha, depending on the route taken, at about 8:30 the following morning. His airplane journey would continue for ten hours. One possible route would include stops at Dodge City and Las Vegas, Gallup, Grand cañon, where the Scenic Airways operates an 800 acre landing field, and Seligman. The traveler then would resume his rail journey, arriving in Los Angeles Monday morning about 9 o'clock.

A Week-End Trip.

By such an arrangement a business man may leave Chicago or Los Angeles on Saturday evening and arrive at his destination Monday morning without wasting a single working hour.

During the war Van Zandt was in the aviation service of both the United States and French armies and was connected with military aviation until 1925. In 1925 he was appointed by Secretary of Commerce Hoover to be secretary of a committee on civil aviation. His home is in Chicago.

Announcement of this projected service follows closely the disclosure of plans that the Transcontinental Air Transport is arranging a 48 hour New York-Los Angeles service by rail and air.

RED McLAUGHLIN IS REFUSED NEW TRIAL; SENTENCED

Lawyers Argue for Hours, but in Vain.

CRIMINAL COURT.

Frank Brady, obtaining money by confidence game, sentenced to 1 to 10 years in the penitentiary by Judge Emanuel Eller.

Eugene McLaughlin, assault to rob, sentenced to 1 to 14 years in the penitentiary; Frank Baynes and John Odchuskuy, robbery, sentenced to 1 year to life each in the penitentiary by Judge John P. McGoorty.

Eugene [Red] McLaughlin, often charged with crimes but never until now convicted, was refused a new trial yesterday by Judge John P. McGoorty in the Criminal court and was sentenced to an indeterminate term of from 1 to 14 years in the penitentiary. Unless the Supreme court upsets the finding, McLaughlin will serve time for his effort two years ago to rob Walter J. Newman, New York jewelry salesman, of $85,000 worth of jewelry.

Attorneys Joseph Harrington and Samuel Golan argued for hours yesterday attempting to convince Judge McGoorty that he should grant a new trial. If he had, McLaughlin appeared to have a good chance for freedom, because Newman has disappeared since he was forced to disclose the alleged attempt of Robert McLaughlin, brother of the defendant, who is president of the Checker Cab company, to intimidate him.

Two Others Sentenced.

While McLaughlin's battery of lawyers was making efforts to free him, a jury reported a verdict of guilty against Frank Baynes, 20, and John Odchusky, 21, for robbery.

The judge promptly sentenced them in McLaughlin's presence to terms of from 1 year to life in the penitentiary.

At one point of the argument of Attorney Golan, who had claimed his client was convicted because of the prejudice of the community against him because of his past, the judge become angered and administered a sharp rebuke.

"Don't you dare stand before the bench of this court and say that if the motion for a new trial is overruled that the court must stultify himself," said the judge sharply.

Jurors in Court.

The defense attorneys brought into court some of the jurors who had convicted McLaughlin and had them testify that Hubert C. Jedlicka, one of their number, had twice been the victim of robbers. He had told this to his fellow jurors some time during the trial. Attorney Harrington argued that this made Jedlicka prejudiced against the defense. He argued the same as to the attempt to influence Juror Fred W. Eicke, whose home was later bombed.

"Your home wasn't bombed, was it?" asked Assistant State's Attorney Charles Dougherty in cross questioning John J. Coffman, who testified to Jedlicka's statements.

Claim Instructions Wrong.

The attorneys argued that the instructions were wrong, that the state had introduced erroneous testimony, and that the prosecutors had made improper statements during the closing arguments.

CITY POSTPONES PAYING BILLS FOR BOND ISSUE ADS

Payment of bills incurred by the city council last month in advertising the $77,000,000 bond issues was ordered held up yesterday because of an opinion by Corporation Counsel Samuel A. Ettelson. The law department's view was that the aldermen were without the power to appropriate for advertising intended to influence the voting of the public.

City Comptroller Charles C. Fitzmorris had asked for an opinion, after the voters defeated every one of the propositions that were to have been paid for with the $77,000,000. John C. Bulger, an attorney, notified Comptroller Fitzmorris that he intended to ask an injunction restraining the city from paying for the billboard and newspaper advertising for which the council provided $6,000. Upon the threat of Attorney Bulger to sue Fitzmorris on his bond if the payments were made the matter was submitted to the corporation counsel.

MAY GRAND JURY PLANS LUNCHEON FOR OFFICIALS

Chief Justice William V. Brothers of the Criminal court, Commissioner of Police Michael Hughes, and Assistant State's Attorney Edwin J. Spiro received summonses yesterday from the May grand jury. They are to respond tomorrow at a luncheon in the Rose room of the Sherman hotel.

"They are to be our guests of honor," said Fred L. Boissy, foreman of the jury who will act as toastmaster. "This will be our last week of service and we wish to part from them in the most friendly spirit."

Attaches of the Criminal court said it is not unusual for judges, prosecutors and police officials to participate in social affairs with grand jurors. It was explained that the grand jury acting as hosts tomorrow will not be the body to investigate election frauds.

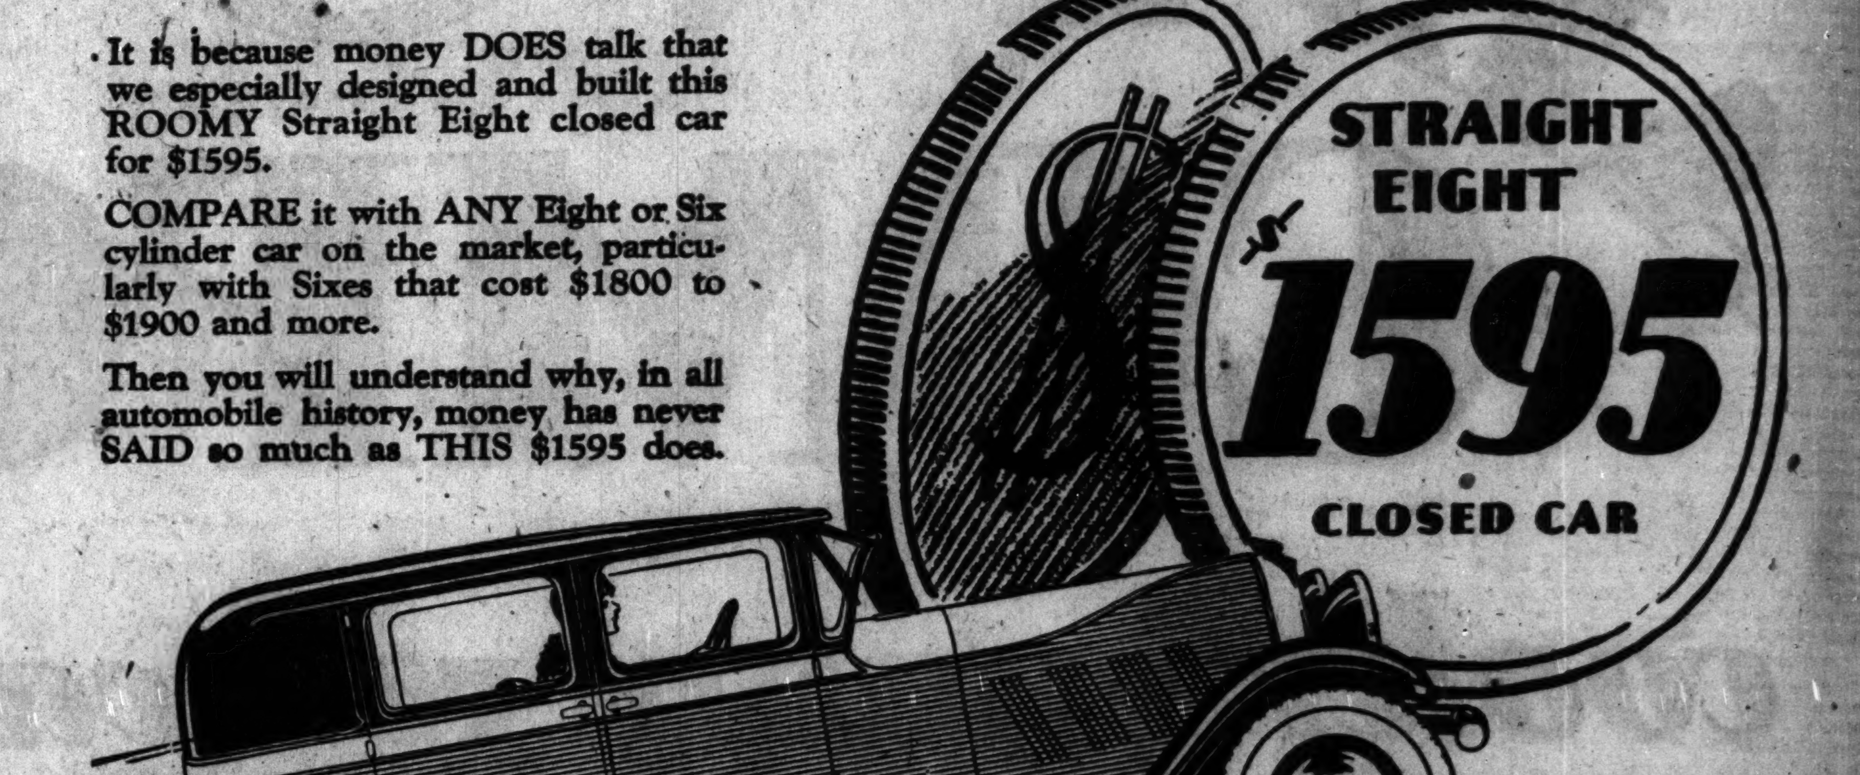
MONEY TALKS

It is because money DOES talk that we especially designed and built this ROOMY Straight Eight closed car for $1595.

COMPARE it with ANY Eight or Six cylinder car on the market, particularly with Sixes that cost $1800 to $1900 and more.

Then you will understand why, in all automobile history, money has never SAID so much as THIS $1595 does.



Now, Listen to $1595 Talk:

I am not a miniature 8 with only the ability of a large Six.

I am a big, roomy, powerful, strong, enduring Straight 8 worthy of the name.

My wheelbase is 125 inches long. That means comfort.

My frame is the strongest under any automobile in the world; 7 inches deep with 3-inch flanges and seven cross members. In addition Auburn has reinforced my foundation with a sub frame from front to behind motor.

Parenthetically speaking—Auburn built me with the one purpose of pouring more enduring value into my construction than any other comparable Straight 8 closed car on the market. Auburn is using me to show the world how really good a car CAN be built so that the public will sit up and take notice of Auburn's progress. In other words, I am the bell sheep of the Auburn line, and the family that gets me gets MORE than money can begin to buy anywhere else.

My motor is the most powerful Straight Eight for its piston displacement of any built. It has Bohnalite pistons and Lynite rods. You know only the best have them—they increase flexibility and save wear on the bearings. Also Lanchester balancer.

My ignition wires are not the ordinary kind that let current escape. They are insulated and ozone proof. That is a sample of the deluxe way in which I am put together in EVERY part.

And my ignition system is the famous Delco-Remy.

Now here is one of my special features, the Bijur chassis lubrication system that only Packard, Rolls Royce and myself have. One push of the foot and you oil 21 places. No dirty work. No uncertainty. No wonder I am able to stand up longer and perform better when I get such good service.

You'll wonder what makes me ride so comfortably; long wheelbase has much to do with it, also my low center of gravity (no side-sway) the way my weight is scientifically balanced has lots to do with it too—also the fact I have four Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers.

When it comes to stopping, you will learn what BRAKES should be. Mine are four wheel internal expanding hydraulic, with compensating cylinder. And my brake drums have an extra ridge around them to make them keep their true shape. 20,000 miles without adjustment is not unusual with my brakes.

When you get in to DRIVE me, you will sit at the most comfortable angle you ever sat in, in any car. The gear shift lever is only about an inch from your hand. "Finger tip" control is what I call it. Instead of scuffing your shoe searching for the starter button, it's conveniently on the instrument board. If you ever stop my motor on a hill, you'll appreciate this starter button, believe me! And all my pedals are rubber covered to protect the wife's shoes.

My upholstery is of the finest (comparison with $5000.00 cars proves it) and my cushions have genuine curled hair and deluxe springs. That's why you feel so relaxed.

Am I egotistical and boastful?

No, I am really modest—because "you haven't heard nothing yet"—just get in and DRIVE me, then and only then can you know how much $1595 can SAY and GIVE you in style, comfort, performance and endurance.

Remember—I don't ask to be compared to skimpy Eights, nor to even high priced Sixes (to outperform them is child's play) but compare ME to REAL automobiles of the most modern design and HIGH prices.

50 MILLION RIVER BILL APPROVED BY COMMITTEE

Project Calls for 9 Foot Mississippi Channel.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., May 26.—[Special]—Approval of the $50,000,000 river and harbor Omnibus bill providing funds for deepening great lakes channels to 24 feet, constructing a nine foot channel in the Mississippi below Grafton, Ill., and scores of other projects was voted by the house river and harbor committee today.

The measure, which will not be acted on until the short session, will be introduced in the house Monday.

St. Clair River Works.

Among the most important items included in the great lakes channel deepening project is authorization for the construction of works in the St. Clair and Niagara rivers to compensate for the Chicago and other water diversions. The compensation project calls for an estimated expenditure of $2,700,000 of which Chicago eventually may be called upon to pay $1,750,000.

Ohioan Wins Point.

Just before the committee acted, Representative Chalmers [Rep., O.] won a favorable action on an item calling for a survey to determine the feasibility of operating barge line transportation between Toledo and Fort Wayne, Ind., on the Maunee river. Mr. Chalmers said that eventually it is planned to extend this line to St. Joseph on Lake Michigan thus greatly shortening the distance between Chicago and Toledo. The chambers of commerce of Toledo and Fort Wayne are boosting the project.

Another important item added to the river and harbor bill today called for the expenditure of $225,000 in the improvement of the Waukegan harbor.

Representative William E. Hull [Rep., Ill.,] and other Illinois representatives were jubilant over the inclusion in the bill of the project for deepening the Mississippi channels to nine feet between the mouth of the Illinois river at Grafton and St. Louis.

Michigan to New Orleans.

"Completion of this project," Representative Hull said, "will give us immediately a nine foot channel from Peoria to the gulf."

In adopting a project for the improvement of great lakes channels the committee rejected the recommendations of Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, chief of army engineers, that the channels be deepened to take care of boats having a draught of twenty-three feet. The project as it now reads calls for connecting channels suitable for vessels of twenty-four foot draught. The amount authorized for this work would be $29,268,000.

Favorable senate action on the measure which increases the capitalization of the inland waterways corporation by $10,000,000 and authorizes the extension of the government's barge facilities to the Illinois and Missouri rivers came at a time when the bill's most optimistic proponents virtually had conceded its defeat.

The bill was approved without a roll call largely as a result of a strategic move on the part of Senator Reed [Dem., Mo.].

Unable to obtain unanimous consent for consideration of his measure early in the afternoon, Senator Reed launched a savage attack against the eastern sugar interests, who formed the backbone of the opposition against the barge bill. When he had silenced the guns of the opposition, Senator Reed turned to Senator Johnson [Rep., Cal.], who had control of the Boulder dam measure, and asked for consideration of the barge bill. The California senator said he would agree if a vote could be taken without debate.

Vice President Dawes looked around the chamber. When no one arose to speak he called for a vote.

The bill now will go to conference. The measure carries two new amendments, one providing for the survey of a canal between Boston, Mass., and Beaufort, N. C., and another requiring that when the barge lines are sold to private interests they must be sold as a single unit.

Establish New Barge Lines.

As the measure now stands it will be possible to establish a government barge line to Peoria within a few months after the measure is signed by the President. Under the terms of the bill the secretary of war is authorized to establish new barge lines on the Illinois and Missouri rivers as soon as a survey has disclosed sufficient commerce and adequate terminals. The line could be extended to Lake Michigan when a nine foot channel is established.

Senator Deneen [Rep., Ill.] and other Illinois congressmen are confident that the completion of the Illinois waterway and the establishment of the barge lines will be of untold benefit to the middle west.

SHOALS BACKERS PLEAD FOR BILL WITH COOLIDGE

Besiege Him in Effort to Avert Veto.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., May 26.—[Special.]—With government operation of Muscle Shoals now approved by both houses of congress, pressure is being applied at the White House to avert a presidential veto.

Ten senators and representatives led by Senator Ellison D. Smith [Dem., S. C.], urged President Coolidge this morning to approve the measure passed yesterday. Groups headed by Senator Norris [Rep., Neb.], and other advocates of the measure will see the President Monday.

Another delegation headed by Representative Frothingham [Rep., Mass.] advised Mr. Coolidge that the bill should be vetoed immediately. The Massachusetts representative told the President that if the bill became law it would establish a dangerous precedent by setting the government up in business.

Former Senator Underwood of Alabama, an advocate of private operation of the Shoals while in congress, will urge the President on Monday to sign the present Shoals bill, it was stated today.

Ex-Judge at Broadview Held on Girl's Charges

Charles G. Krotz, 54 years old, former police magistrate of Broadview, was held to the grand jury in bonds of $5,000 yesterday when he was arraigned before Justice of the Peace Richard Betts of Maywood on charges of taking indecent liberties with a 14 year old girl pupil of the Roosevelt school. The girl in the case is the daughter of a neighbor of Krotz, who lives at 1847 South 14th avenue, Broadview, and the acts charged extended over a period of two years.

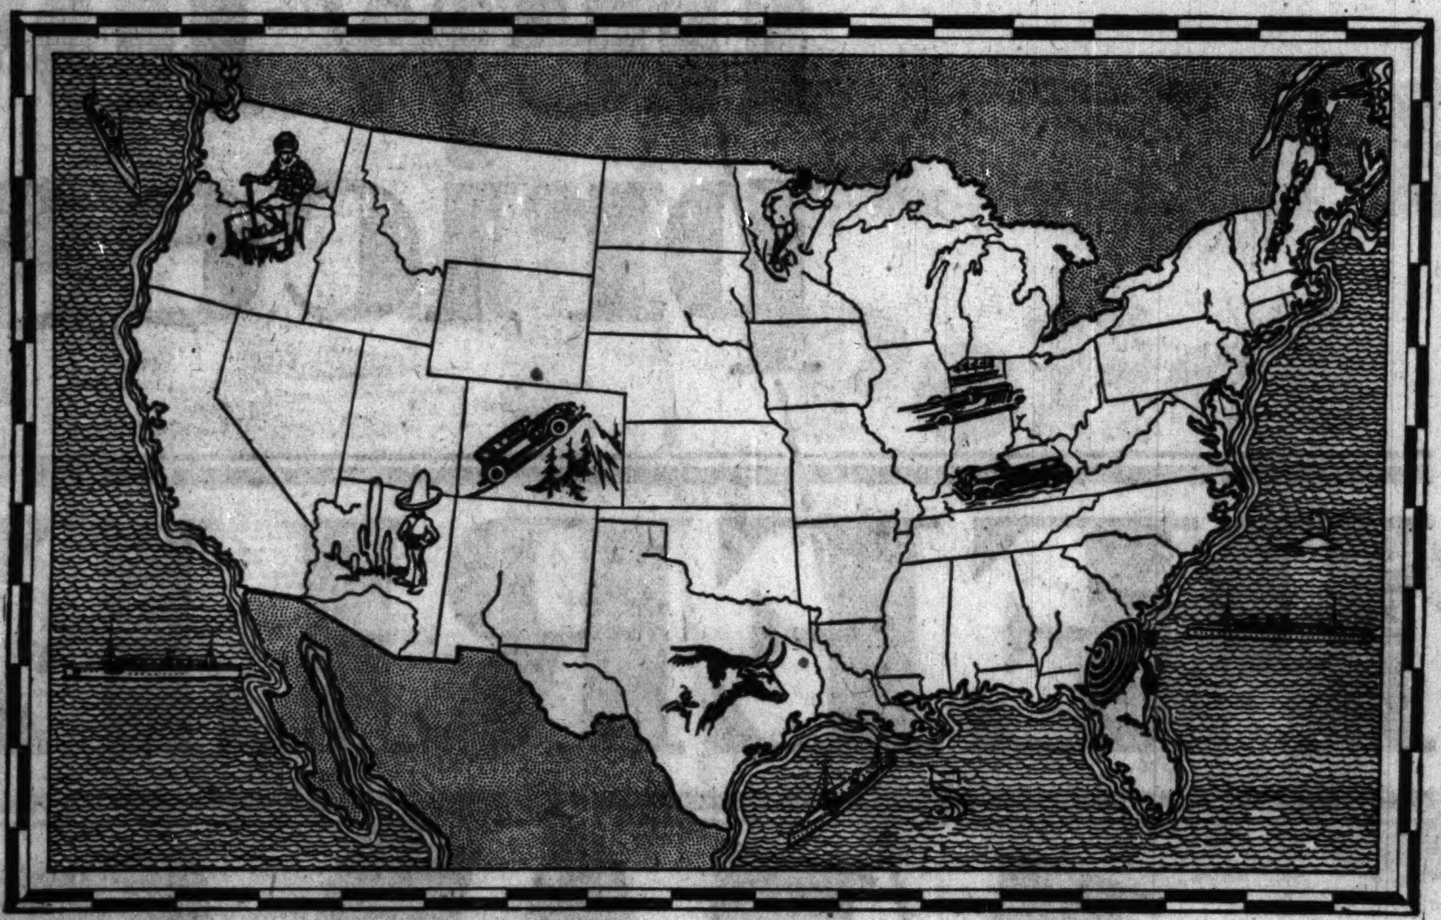
Tested . . .

from Maine to Arizona for Power, Speed and Endurance



LONG ago, Hupmobile engineers found that the rigorous tests provided by Nature under varied climatic conditions far exceed those imposed by factory proving grounds. That is why every new Hupmobile model is tested in the field—on real mountains and under all atmospheric conditions from coast to coast. Maine and Minnesota give the sub-zero temperatures that prove efficiency of starting and lubricating systems. Uniontown Hill and Pike's Peak make strenuous demands on power and axle gearing. Cooling is checked at 120 degrees in Arizona; carburetion in Colorado's high altitudes and at sea-level in Florida. Thus, no matter where you live or drive, Hupmobile engineers have preceded you. One more reason why Hupmobile performance and stamina continue to win thousands of new owners from the ranks of those who formerly paid far more for equal luxury and dependability.

24 body and equipment combinations, standard and custom, on each line. Six of the Century, $1345 to $1625. Century Eight, $1825 to $2105. All prices f. o. b. Detroit, plus revenue tax . . . The Century 125 Eight has all the advanced engineering features, the refinements and luxury of the new Century Eight.

Change Noted Since Day of Loesch's Ultimatum.

The attitude of the 1,300 prisoners jammed into the county jail has changed since Frank J. Loesch, president of the Chicago Crime commission, demanded transfer from the Criminal bench of Judges Stanley Klarkowski, Otto Kerner, and Emanuel Eller. This observation was made yesterday by Warden Edward J. Fogarty as he announced the record number of prisoners held in his establishment, which was originally intended to incarcerate not more than 300.

The atmosphere in the courts has also changed, according to old time observers. Instead of the courts operating a few hours a day, disposing of a majority of cases by the felony waiver route and accepting a plea of guilty to a minor offense, jury trials are now found to be the rule rather than the exception and the jail is becoming more crowded.

Prisoners Lose Confidence.

"Times have changed," observed the warden as he announced the record attendance at his institution. "Of course, we are overloaded here, but the prisoners have a different attitude and are easier to handle.

"Instead of being confident that they will escape with a light sentence, as in the past, they now sit in their cells and wonder what is going to happen to them. They are not as cocky as they were when they could 'cop,' as they called a plea to a minor offense, and get off with a light sentence."

The warden said, however, that steps should be taken to speed up work on the new jail as he now finds it necessary to crowd four and five and sometimes six prisoners in a cell.

Court Hours Increased.

The working record of Judge John P. McGoorty, as announced by the clerk of his court, is a typical example of the change in conditions, it is said. In the last week the judge put in 44 hours, and in the preceding week toiled 41½ hours. The crime commission's figures for 21 days in April showed that Judge Kerner worked the most hours in that period, 87½. Other judges worked from 75 to 22 hours.

During last week only one felony waiver was registered, according to Melmar P. Delano, chief clerk of the court, and one probation granted. Every other case disposed of was either by a jury trial or a plea of guilty to the indictment as it was rendered by the grand jury.

Vacations, it was announced by First Assistant State's Attorney George E. Gorman yesterday to his assistants, may not be allowed this year. If conditions change later, he said, short rest will be allowed.

Summer Schedule Delayed.

The usual summer hours of the courts of from 9 o'clock in the morning to 2 o'clock in the afternoon, a period of five consecutive hours, has not been put into universal effect this year. Judge Klarkowski has started on the summer schedule and Judge Frank Comerford announced he would do so this week, but the other judges are still working the usual hours, and most of them putting in extra time.

Four additional judges will start to work on June 4 in an effort to catch up with the calendars, which have clogged up since the juries have been given an opportunity to determine in a majority of the cases what punishment should be meted out to gun robbers, burglars and automobile thieves.

American Wife Exonerated in Killing Jap Husband

A coroner's jury yesterday exonerated Mrs. Sarah Morisaki, 53, an American, of blame for the killing of her Japanese husband, Sokashara. She shot and killed Morisaki during a quarrel Friday evening in their home at 816 North Clark street. The jury held that the killing was justified, as the man had drawn a revolver and was trying to shoot her at the time. The weapon was found under his body.

Three Face Trial July 9 for Killing of Girl Usher

The trial of three youthful slayers of Pearl Eggleston, 17 year old usher at the Ritz theater, Berwyn, will start July 9. That was decided by Judge Frank Comerford yesterday. Assistant State's Attorneys Harold Levy and Emmet Byrne attempted to get an earlier date, but the judge said he did not want to tie up a jury over July 4. Attorney W. W. O'Brien represented the defendants, Stanley Durmaj, Stanley Thomas, and Albert Mas.

BLOOMINGTON TO BE G. O. P. SHRINE TOMORROW NIGHT

Party Will Celebrate Its 72d Birthday.

Bloomington, Ill., May 26.—[Special.]—The spirit of Lincoln will pervade this city Monday, when under the auspices of the McLean county Republican central committee, party leaders from state and nation will gather to celebrate the seventy-second anniversary of the founding of the Republican party here in May, 1857.

A birthday banquet will be served in Consistory temple Monday evening, and among the speakers will be Ex-Gov. Joseph W. Fifer of Illinois, Gov. Adam McMullen of Nebraska and Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom.

The historic gathering in Major's hall here in 1857 was regarded by Lincoln himself as forming the origin of the party he was to lead to victory.

Lincoln's speech on that occasion is known to history as the "Lost Speech," for the journalists present, including the late Joseph Medill of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, were so enthralled by the eloquence of the great emancipator that they forgot to make notes, so the speech never was printed.

Fifer Knew Lincoln.

Gov. Fifer was a soldier of the civil war, knew Lincoln, and is perhaps the only ex-governor linked with the stirring period of the sixties. Although well along in the eighties, he is at his law office daily and keeps in touch with public affairs.

Upon the occasion of the last meeting between Gov. Fifer and Medill in Chicago, and when the former was state executive, the "lost speech" and incidents in connection with the famous convention, were mentioned at length by Medill.

Ex-Governor Reminisces.

While in a reminiscent mood this week, the former governor said:

"I knew that Mr. Medill had been a close friend and supporter of Lincoln and I was very glad of the opportunity to listen to what he had to say. He told me that Horace Greeley of the New York Tribune, was opposed to the nomination of Lincoln and wanted Douglas nominated for senator. After Lincoln was nominated, Greeley wrote Medill: 'Now you have drawn your white elephant, and you can shoulder him and carry him if you think you are able to do so.'

"Mr. Medill gave me his impressions of the celebrated convention in Bloomington on May 29, 1856, where he had a seat on the platform.

"There were a number of good speeches, but finally the crowd called for Lincoln. After repeated calls, Lincoln arose from his seat at the rear of the hall and remarked that if there was no objection, he would talk from where he stood, but the crowd would not have it that way, shouting, 'Come to the platform.'

Starts Off Quietly.

"Lincoln then came forward. He started off, Medill stated, in a rather quiet, unassuming manner, and Medill began to take notes, but as Lincoln progressed, he warmed up to the subject and Medill and all the other reporters, became so interested that their attention was riveted to the speaker.

"Lincoln's manner was so earnest and wonderfully eloquent that everybody forgot themselves, and in consequence, no report was ever made of the address and it went down to history as 'Lincoln's Lost Speech.'

"Medill recalled that Lincoln did not gesticulate to any great extent, but most of his time held his hands upon his hips, and his body would move from side to side as he spoke. Mr Medill declared to me that he had never heard such a speech, before or since.

"When Lincoln sat down, Medill cast his eyes upon his note paper, but found only a few sentences. He made no attempt to cast the speech from memory, fearing that he could not do justice to it. The other reporters felt the same."

TRIBUNE SETS RECORD TODAY IN SIZE OF ITS ROTOGRAVURE SECTION

Demands of advertisers for space in the color picture-rotogravure section of THE TRIBUNE have resulted in the publication today of the largest number of pages for that section in the history of this newspaper. The section, which heretofore has never been larger than 24 pages, today is increased to 28 pages, and it has seven color pages. Never until today have there been more than five color pages. John Park, production manager of THE TRIBUNE, states the section is still susceptible of an increase in pages, since it is printed on specially designed unit type of presses, developed by THE TRIBUNE through years of experimentation.

URGES CHANGES IN JURY SYSTEM TO AID JUSTICE

Report Criticizes Present Method of Selection.

Faults of the present jury system in criminal cases and a series of suggestions for improvement were contained in a report released yesterday by the Illinois Association for Criminal Justice. The juryman sacrifices his time and money for the public welfare and occasionally serves at the risk of his life and property from gunman and bomber and he should be given better treatment, the report stated.

Methods of selecting jurors were criticized and it was urged that it be made more difficult for a venireman to be excused from service, but that he be permitted to designate the time of the year when jury service will be the least hardship. It was recommended that the minimum age requirement be raised from 21 years to 25 years.

The report contained a study of the trial of Harry J. (Lefty) Lewis, who was accused of the murder of Max Braverman.

Lewis Jury Picking Cited.

"A total of 1,350 jurymen were summoned in this case," the report said. "Of that number 178 were returned "not found," 192 were served but did not respond, 4 were reported dead, and 236 excused, 40 were out of town and 5 were sick. This made a total of 655 prospective jurors who did not appear in the box for questioning.

"The number that appeared was 695, of whom 646 passed through the jury box before the necessary 12 were selected. The other 37 were waiting to be called when the jury was completed.

"Out of the 646 who were questioned, 163 were excused because they claimed they had conscientious scruples against the death penalty; 386 were excused when they said they had fixed opinions, 65 were excused by agreement of counsel, and 32 were peremptorily challenged, 16 by the state and 16 by the defense.

"The defendant was acquitted in the face of the testimony of eight eye witnesses that the defendant shot the deceased in the back while the deceased was running away. The view that the verdict would have been different if the jury had consisted of twelve representative citizens is generally accepted."

Change in Methods Urged.

The survey made by the association resulted in the finding that the personnel of the state's attorney's office is inadequate and that the assistants are generally young and inexperienced lawyers appointed for political favor. It was suggested that, instead of assistant prosecutors being assigned to handle all cases in a designated court room, the assignments be made to the cases at the time of their inception and that the assistant follow through in any or all courtrooms.

JOHNSON HOLDS CONGRESS TO ACT ON BOULDER DAM

May Prevent Adjournment Tuesday.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., May 26.—[Special.]—Boulder dam legislation continued the storm center of congress today with adjournment plans held up pending the outcome of the filibuster against it.

Although the Boulder dam bill was technically before the senate throughout today's session, and Senator Johnson [Rep., Cal.] was constantly alert to block efforts to sidetrack it, there was actually no discussion upon it.

Senator Johnson demonstrated his control of the situation by causing the defeat of two motions to displace the bill and take up other measures.

By a vote of 15 to 51 the senate rejected a motion by Senator Reed [Rep., Pa.] to take up a house bill relating to army promotions. Immediately after this action the senate, 22 to 44, voted down a motion by Senator Hale [Rep., Me.], to take up the house naval cruiser bill. This is believed to spell the doom of the new navy bill at this session.

Senate Obedient to Johnson.

By these actions a majority of the senate showed its willingness to give Senator Johnson a further chance to break down the filibuster against the Boulder dam bill.

The opponents, who have been prepared to filibuster against the Boulder bill, had another easy day of it as senators desirous of talking on other measures used up all of the time. The senate adjourned at 6 o'clock without any attempt being made to force a late night session.

Senator Johnson served notice repeatedly during the day that he would insist upon action on Boulder dam before he consented to adjournment of congress.

Johnson Seeks Delay.

Senator Curtis [Rep., Kas.], majority leader, sought action today on the house resolution fixing 5 o'clock on Tuesday as the hour of adjournment. Senator Johnson blocked the unanimous consent necessary for immediate consideration, and action went over until Monday. When the resolution comes up on Monday, Senator Johnson will force a roll call on the proposition and will attempt to amend it to provide for adjournment on either June 2 or June 5.

If the majority which stood by Senator Johnson today fails to do so in his efforts to delay adjournment, he is expected to make a final drive to force a vote by means of an all night session Monday night.

The opposition is confident that the Boulder dam bill cannot be passed even if congress remains in session a week. Thus far Senator Ashurst [Dem., Ariz.], who has expected to lead the filibuster, has not been forced to hold the floor at all. He insists he can talk indefinitely if required to do so.

Three Plead Guilty to Sabotage in Red Coal Field

MOSCOW, May 26.—(AP)—Three defendants in the trial of miners and engineers charged with anti-government sabotage in the Donetz coal fields, today pleaded guilty. They testified that they belonged to a secret organization which aimed at undermining the Russian coal industry.

LITHUANIA EDICT CURTAILS POWER OF PARLIAMENT

Declares Vilna Is Capital of Nation.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1928: By The Chicago Tribune.]

KOVNO, Lithuania, May 26.—Lithuania, which during the last seventeen months has been governed by a joint dictatorship of the self-appointed President Anthony Smetona and Premier August Waldemaras, received a new constitution today which completely changes the French parliamentary system form of government adopted ten years ago.

Lithuania had thirteen different cabinets under the old system before Mr. Smetona and Mr. Waldemaras arranged the putsch of December, 1926, dissolving parliament and establishing the dictatorship under which the country has prospered.

Instead of a three year term, the new constitution authorizes the election of a president for seven years, and parliament and the president are empowered to edit laws, confirm the budget and make international treaties.

Cabinet "Intrenches."

The cabinet is responsible to parliament but is obliged to resign only after a three-fifth negative vote, which also is necessary to amend the constitution. Until now, a majority vote was sufficient to oust the cabinet.

The constitution also declares that Vilna be the capital of Lithuania. Vilna is now held by Poland.

Parley Is Failure.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

WARSAW, May 26.—The Lithuanian delegation which came to Warsaw to prepare the technicalities for a reconciliation between Lithuania and Poland, left the Polish capital today, carrying a few suggestions back to Kovno, and promising to return June 26. The Polish officials, however, term their visit a failure. Poland's disappointment turned to indignation when it heard that the Lithuanian government decreed a new constitution proclaiming Vilna the Lithuanian capital, though the town is in Poland's hands now.

For months Lithuania has been talking of the reform of its constitution and threatened to take a referendum on the question of its capital. The Lithuanian parliament protested that the referendum was an infringement of its legal authority. To close the debate, the Lithuanian government overruled the objections, and simply decreed a new constitution. Feeling is running high in Warsaw.

Traffic Treaty Signed.

BERLIN, May 26.—(AP)—The joint Lithuanian-Polish commission which has been considering frontier traffic between those countries today reached an agreement. It was signed by the official representatives of both sides. This disposes of one of the three principal problems in the friction between Lithuania and Poland.

100 CLUBWOMEN OFF FOR MEETING AT SAN ANTONIO

More than 100 Chicago and downstate clubwomen left Chicago yesterday morning on a special train for San Antonio, Tex., where the sixteenth biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs is to be held from May 28 to June 7.

A stupendous program has been arranged for the 11 days' sessions, including, in addition to educational features and speeches by experts along civic and cultural lines, close to sixty social affairs, luncheons, teas, dinners, and "chuck wagon feeds" at a Mexican ranch. Mrs. J. Marc Fowler, newly elected president of the Illinois federation, and Mrs. Walter W. Seymour, retiring president and new director in the national body, headed the state delegation.

DIES OF ILLNESS AFTER WOUND.

Aaron Van Ulm, 53, of 5051 South Park way died at the county hospital yesterday of illness which developed two months ago following a gunshot wound in his right leg. He received the wound when he accidentally discharged a revolver by dropping it to the floor.

SWINDLES TWO FOR MONEY TO PAY COURT FIGHT

Nicholas Uzelac, 40, of 913 Jefferson street, was sentenced to one to ten years in the penitentiary by Judge Harry B. Miller on March 31. He requested and was granted an appeal and was released on bonds.

Yesterday Uzelac, rearrested, admitted to the police that he had been making profitable use of his time. He said he had swindled Emil Hanzilik, 5312 North Kilpatrick avenue, of $3,100 on April 28 and Samuel Tvavazek, 1801 South Allport avenue, of $1,000 a few days later. The victims corroborated his story.

"Lawyers cost money," Uzelac told Sergt. Nicholas Goles of the Chicago police, who brought him back after he had been taken into custody in Milwaukee. "You have to pay them, so you have to get it first. That's why I went back to my racket."

PATIENT KILLED IN FALL.

William Seits, 33, of 2021 Lane court, rose from his bed in the Alexian Brothers hospital yesterday while delirious from fever and walked to the third floor balustrade. He fell to the first floor and was killed.

..Oh, you must own a "72"..

If you are even momentarily puzzled over the choice of a fine motor car, there is a quick way out of your troubles . . . ¶ You know without being told that all motor cars endeavor today to act like Chrysler in engineering and performance. That is self-evident and obvious . . . ¶ You may have felt that some of these endeavors have succeeded in overtaking the Illustrious Chrysler "72"—if not in fact, at least superficially. You can quickly undeceive yourself. You can quickly prove that Chrysler "72" is still as far ahead as it was four years ago . . . ¶ Not merely in principle or in theory, but in plain, blunt facts of performance which you can see, and feel, and register . . . ¶ Not merely in speed. Not merely in the speed with which speed is delivered. But in every one and all of the characteristics which Chrysler "72" created—so far, far ahead that the gap is even greater today than it was at the outset of Chrysler history . . . ¶ Chrysler then was unmistakably the greatest "buy" in the market—with all of its host of emulators, Illustrious Chrysler "72" is even more so today.

HOPE TO REVIVE INSULL PLAN OF "L" EXTENSIONS

Aldermen Recall an Offer Nearly 4 Years Old.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

Exactly three years and eight months ago tomorrow the elevated lines offered to spend an estimated $23,100,000 in extensions and improvements to the rapid transit system if given the necessary authority. That plan was put on the shelf. There it has rested ever since.

The legislature has declined at its special session to consider the granting of more authority to Chicago with which to deal with its transit problem. Added power probably cannot be obtained for another year, although the next regular session of the general assembly convenes next January.

Might Get Improvements.

Some of the aldermen argued yesterday that an attempt should be made to improve local transportation in the meantime. They suggested the proposal of Samuel Insull might be considered, since it never has been withdrawn. They anticipated, however, that Mr. Insull might desire to modify his plea, perhaps to improve it, from their viewpoint.

By coincidence, these aldermanic suggestions are said to fit in with the idea of Mayor Thompson on what should be done. The voters at the primary election turned down the proposed bond issues totaling $77,959,000. It was reported to the Commercial club at its annual meeting last Friday that the mayor and his advisors deemed it politically inexpedient to resubmit any bonds at the judicial election June 4.

Mr. Insull outlined his plan first in an address to the Chicago and Cook county Bankers' association on Feb. 21, 1924. On Sept. 27 of that same year he presented it formally to the council committee on local transportation. He publicly discussed it again before that same committee on Jan. 8, 1926, and then said that he still desired the privilege of building the extensions proposed on Sept. 27, 1924.

Details of Extension.

Mr. Insull proposed to build an elevated extension near Ashland avenue from the Metropolitan Elevated structure at 18th street to 75th street. Another extension was to run from the Metropolitan northerly from Division street to connect with the Ravenswood branch of the Northwestern "L."

Both the Englewood and the Stock Yards branches of the south side system were to be extended westward to hook up with the Ashland avenue mid-city trunk line. The south side lines were to have an extension southward from 63d street and Stony Island avenue to South Chicago avenue and then in that thoroughfare to 92d street. The Logan Square branch was to be extended northwesterly along Milwaukee avenue to Irving Park boulevard. The Humboldt Park branch was to be extended westerly to Central avenue.

In addition, a third track was to be placed on the Garfield Park branch from Paulina street to Laramie avenue, and a fourth track from Laramie avenue to the city limits.

On the Douglas Park branch of the Metropolitan a third track was planned from Marshfield avenue to the city limits. A third track between 43d and 63d streets on the main line of the south side system also was in the program. A third track on the Oak Park "L" from Wells street to Ashland avenue still was another improvement promised.

Would Relieve Loop Jam.

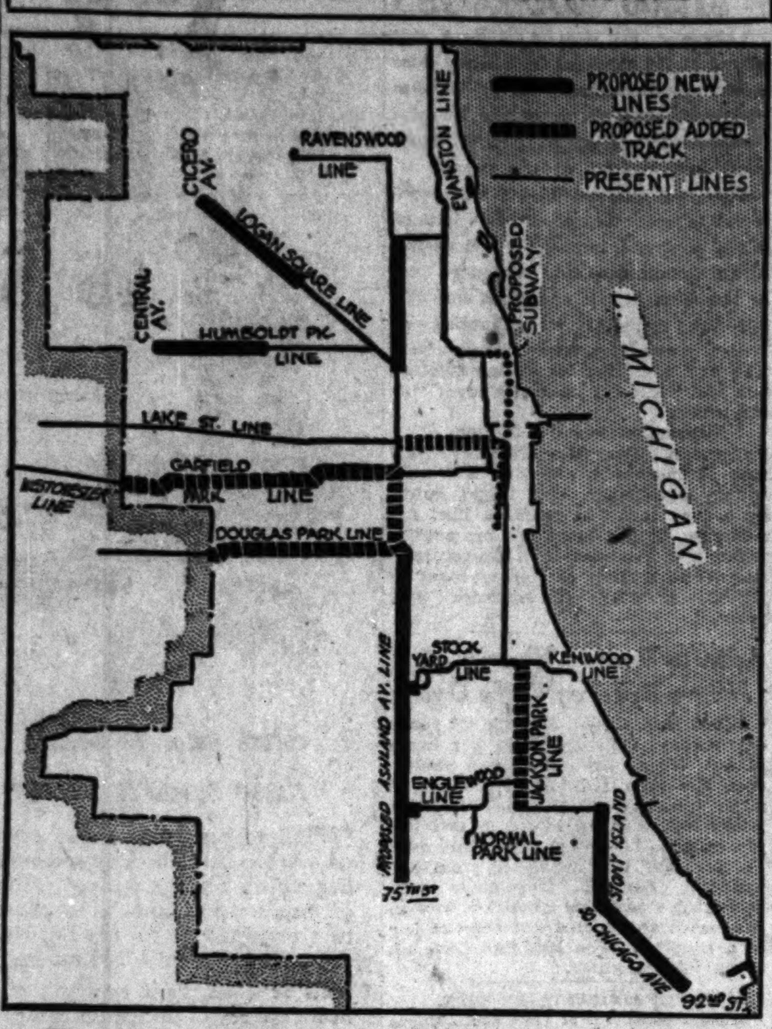
City engineers and the companies' representatives have said the most beneficial of these improvements would be the mid-city trunk line stretching from the north to the south side in the neighborhood of Ashland avenue. The company said this line would serve a population of 450,000 living within half a mile of the line. Of that number a large percentage have no rapid transportation at present.

The aldermen said this trunk line would relieve thousands of the necessity of going through the loop. The "L" management indorsed that view but added that the trunk would create more traffic for the loop, and gave no estimate of how much the loop would be relieved. The city has made no guess on that subject.

Mr. Insull desires and hoped that in connection with these extensions a subway would be built by the city through the loop. He said for two years he was ready to sign a contract to use that subway in connection with the elevated system. The engineers and expert advisers of the "L" roads have advised him not to make the extensions until the subway is agreed upon. Mr. Insull, however, himself has indicated he would go ahead with the extensions as soon as given permission to do so.

Chairman Joseph B. McDonough of the council local transportation is expected to call a meeting of that committee next week and ask each member to express his views on what should be attempted next.

Insull Plan for "L" Extensions



The map shows the present lines of the elevated railroads, indicated by thin black lines; the proposed extensions, indicated by heavy black lines, and present lines to which it is proposed to add tracks, indicated by heavy black line striped with white.

Pulling Firebox to Mail Letter Gives Hospital Scare

Evansville, Ind., May 26.—[Special.]—Unaccustomed to city ways, a woman relative of a patient in St. Mary's hospital here, attempted to mail a letter in the firebox, causing the fire department to make a frantic run to the hospital and considerable attendant excitement.

BACKERS OF EACH JUDICIAL TICKET DEPLORE BOSSING

Political Aims Charged by Both Camps.

The controversy over "Who's trying to be the bosses" in the judicial election June 4 sputtered along yesterday. The coalitionists declared an "inside circle of lawyer bosses" in the Bar association is trying to defeat three Superior court judges "because it wishes friends on the bench."

The Bar association said the "political bosses," when they nominate a judge who otherwise would not land on the ticket, "feel they are placing him under obligation." The day's output was largely a revamping of the week's disputations and no new territory was covered.

The Chicago Church Federation has asked 1,000 ministers to urge their congregations today to support the Bar association nonpartisan ticket.

Cite 1927 Referendum.

The coalitionists, in their literature yesterday, said:

"To maintain our courts free from the influence of politics, and to adhere to the policy of retaining sitting judges who have made good records, the two great parties, Republican and Democratic, joined in naming the same six candidates for reëlection as judges of the Superior court and one for judge of the Superior court to fill a vacancy.

"The sitting judges, Walter P. Steffen, John J. Sullivan, Jesse Holdom, Joseph Sabath, Worth E. Caylor, and Martin M. Gridley were approved for reëlection by a large majority of the members voting in a referendum conducted by the Chicago Bar association Dec. 1, 1927.

"In October, 1926, Judge Robert E. Gentzel, in a bar association primary, was indorsed by a vote of 1,950 out of 2,205 votes cast."

The bar association, through John R. Montgomery, judicial campaign manager, issued this statement:

"An aroused electorate is counted on as the judicial campaign swings into its final week, to elect the Chicago Bar association nonpartisan judicial ticket. These bar candidates are Judges Howard W. Hayes and Daniel P. Trude of the Municipal court, Charles Center Case, special state's attorney in the vote fraud inquiry, and State Senator James J. Barbour.

"The bar association also is placing emphasis on the importance of voting for three judges on the Republican ticket—Walter P. Steffen, Martin M. Gridley, and Joseph Sabath. These judges were indorsed by vote of the bar association members and nominated for its ticket.

"The association has no other purpose than to elect the most capable judges. It, therefore, supports Judges Steffen, Gridley, and Sabath, even though they appear on an opposing ticket.

"Where the political bosses nominate a judge who would not otherwise receive the nomination, the bosses feel they are placing him under obligation. In the cases of Judges Steffen, Gridley, and Sabath the obligation is the other way. Their faithful services on the bench entitle them to reëlection.

"Mr. Brennan, Democratic leader, speaking for the Crowe-Brennan combination, has criticized the bar association for indorsing Senator Barbour for the Wells vacancy for which Messrs. Crowe and Brennan nominated Judge Robert E. Gentzel of the Municipal court at the last possible moment, when it was too late for the bar association to submit his name at its primaries."

Harrison Backs Bar Ticket.

Carter H. Harrison, five times mayor of Chicago, yesterday gave his indorsement to the four candidates composing the bar association's nonpartisan ticket.

"There was a time when the local political parties nominated candidates to the judiciary for their learning as lawyers, their character as men," Mr. Harrison said. "To the shame and sorrow of Chicago it must be said that was in the long ago, before the days of the bipartisan political control that has united the worst in both parties in a conspiracy based upon lust, for the power which brings personal aggrandizement and wealth, but leaves ruin and corruption in its trail.

"The Bar association knows its candidates and is qualified to speak. Personally I shall vote for them. I urge my friends and all other good citizens to do likewise."

YANKEE EDITOR'S BARBS AROUSE PANAMA CABINET

May Be Deported for Criticisms.

BY GERALD MARTIN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1928: By The Chicago Tribune.]

COLON, Panama Canal Zone, May 26.—President Rodolfo Chiari of Panama and his cabinet yesterday discussed the daily attacks against the administration made by Nelson Rounsevell, manager of the Panama American, an American daily newspaper. While no statement was issued, it is believed that drastic action, and probably deportation measures, will be taken. Foreign Minister Alfaro also discussed the situation with American Minister John Glover South.

Mr. Rounsevell, a Nebraskan, formerly ran a wheel and poker game at Cerro de Pasco, Peru. Later, he entered the magazine business, coöperating with C. N. Griffis in the publishing of the Lima paper, the West Coast Leader. After that he joined the staff of the Valparaiso paper, the South Pacific Mail, which he purchased and then sold. Following this venture he went to Panama, starting with Mr. Griffis the Panama Times Weekly. That was a financial failure.

Then came the Daily Panama American. He built a plant on property owned by Juan Antonio Jimenez, who went to Washington with former President Porras recently, appealing for intervention in the coming presidential campaign. It was stated that Mr. Rounsevell rounded up with the opposition. It is said his daily criticisms against the government and the financial situation are hurting the chances of the government candidates in the August election.

Mr. Rounsevell's "disclosure" that the British financier, D. Elliott Alves, was controlling the British Panama corporation's gold mining proposals in the interior, claiming he was spying on the canal defenses, was ridiculed here, and denied by the Panama government as well as American officials. Mr. Rounsevell's attacks on Panama's National bank were also ridiculed.

Cabinet Member Resigns.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PANAMA CITY, May 26.—Gen Manuel Quintero, secretary of agriculture and public works, resigned, intimating to President Rodolfo Chiari that he was joining the opposition party. Gen. Quintero has a large following in the populous province of Chiriqui.

BEGIN RECOUNTING OF UPDIKE BALLOTS; PETITION IS DENIED

Indianapolis, Ind., May 26.—[Special.]—Following the ruling by Judge Harry O. Chamberlin in Circuit court, in which he denied the petition of Ralph E. Updike, representative in congress, for a transfer to federal court of the primary election contest suit by Archibald M. Hall, recounting of votes began today. Three commissioners—two Democrats and one Republican—are making the count. The same commissioners probably will direct recount of the vote for nomination for county surveyor.

Hall's supporters charge that more than 2,700 ballots were thrown out illegally, as mutilated, when they were in fact proper ballots.

$3,450,000 PAID JOBLESS EACH WEEK BY BRITAIN

Doles Cover All Making $25 a Week or Less.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, May 26.—Complete statistics for unemployment in England are only available for the last five years since the new insurance law has been in effect covering all classes of workers.

The original unemployment insurance bill, promulgated by David Lloyd George as chancellor of the exchequer in the Asquith cabinet just before the war, dealt only with certain classes of workers.

Since 1922, the number of unemployed throughout England has averaged 1,500,000, with a slight general tendency toward dimunition.

State compulsory insurance commonly referred to as the "dole" provides against unemployment and ill health and embraces old age pensions.

$3,450,000 a Year in Doles.

"The average weekly amount paid out by the government in unemployment during the financial year ended March 31 last, approximated £690,000 [about $3,450,000]," Mr. Betterton informed the house of commons.

The insurance covers all wage earners receiving remuneration of $25 or less per week and guarantees to men a "dole" of $5 a week, and $3.75 to women and boys.

Cost of this insurance is 31 cents per week of which the employer pays 16 cents and the employe 15 cents. The state contributes an aditional 4 cents which covers various extra items in the cost of administration and benefits.

Generally in small shops and offices where the number of employées is not too large; the employer pays the entire amount for each employe, but in large organizations, factories and other enterprises, whose employés reach a considerable number, the individual wage earner is required to contribute his part.

The health insurance amounts to 31 cents per week, divided equally between the employer and employé, and entitles any worker to medical attention, drugs, and care during illness, but carries no cash aid.

How Old Age Pension Works.

The old age pension is allocated to insured persons reaching the age of 65 and to uninsured persons at 70, providing $2.50 a week living allowance. Any one may benefit under this who has not an income in excess of $250 a year.

Payment of weekly premiums on this insurance is obligatory by law, and the employer is held responsible that it is executed. Any person starting to work at a wage of less than $25 per week registers at a labor bureau exchange and receives a card, with places for stamps to be affixed weekly. These stamps, to the amount of 2 shillings 9 pence, must be stuck on the card each week by the employer at the time he pays his employé. When a card is filled it is turned in at the postoffice and another card is issued.

Beside this relief, under the Elizabethan laws any destitute person is entitled to aid from a district relieving officer in his or her parish. The individual may demand food and shelter, which is administered in either of two ways.

Must Work for Food.

He or she may be sent to the workhouse, where supper, bed, and breakfast are provided in consideration for work performed the next morning. The tasks are usually breaking stone, sawing wood, cleaning up the workhouse, and other odd jobs. Complaint of this system is that the morning is occupied in performing the task when actually the person should have that period free to seek a job.

Out relief is given to families chiefly and includes a cash allowance and slips calling for delivery of groceries and coal, together with rent allowance, in some cases.

When a person loses his job, he registers at once at the nearest labor exchange, and if at the end of a week he is still without work he is put on the dole, which continues allowing him $5 a week, minus tax, or $4.75, for 13 weeks. Then there is a break of two weeks during which he receives nothing, ostensibly to spur him on to look harder for employment, and then if he is unsuccessful he goes back on the dole again for another 13 weeks. This keeps up indefinitely.

Many Dodge Work.

Labor officials seek jobs for likely candidates and employers requiring help are theoretically supposed to apply to the labor exchanges to send them likely applicants. All too often, the "dole" recipient is well content with his allowance and is highly indifferent to obtaining a job at say $15 a week and having to work for it.

The drawback to the dole is the requirement that all those on the list must apply at 8 o'clock every morning at the labor exchange in their neighborhood to see if anything has turned up for them. Many arrange to telephone for news instead, and others shamble in at 9 or 10 o'clock with "doctor's excuse" for lateness.

Retiring M. E. Minister Given Catholic Degree

Detroit, Mich., May 26.—(AP)—Because he has displayed an "outstanding tolerance of the opinions and sentiments of his fellow men," Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, retiring minister of the Central M. E. church, last night was given the degree of doctor of laws by the University of Detroit, Catholic institution.

EDITOR, JAILED BY JUDGE, ASKS $1,000 DAMAGES

Lancaster, O., May 26.—(AP)—A suit asking $1,000 damages for alleged false arrest was filed here today by William P. Lewis, news editor of the Lancaster Gazette, against Edward W. Boerstler, local justice of the peace.

Boerstler charged Lewis with contempt of court in an editorial criticizing a sentence imposed by Boerstler in an assault case and sentenced him to ten days in jail and fined him $20 but the sentence was revoked on error by Common Pleas Judge Shell, who said Boerstler lacked jurisdiction and had "lost his judicial temper" in the matter.

Jury Convicts One Editor.

Crandon, Wis., May 26.—(AP)—Herman Kronschnabl, editor of a Forest county newspaper, was found guilty by a jury today of criminal libel for referring to the town mayor, county judge and a citizen in a deprecatory manner in a story on non-payment of taxes. A stay of sentence was granted.

Admits Taking Poison 24 Hours Before; Wife Dying

When Mrs. Lillian McCabe, 26 years old, became violently ill in her home at 404 West 60th street, late yesterday, she admitted she had taken a large quantity of poison almost 24 hours before in an effort to end her life because she was despondent over the fact she was separated from her husband, Bernard. Physicians who were called said her condition was so dangerous they could not remove her to a hospital. The McCabes have an 8 year old daughter.

The NEW MARMON STRAIGHT 8 at $1395

The great new value that has put Marmon in 1st PLACE among all the builders of straight-eights . .

FIRST in production because it's first in performance, first in beauty and first in value. Not just "another new car" but an entirely new idea in motor car building—a straight-eight at the price of a six.

The straight-eight principle is not new. In the higher price field it has proved itself for years. On the Speedway practically every important event for years has been won by the straight-eight type of motor. In Europe, a majority of the finest and most expensive cars are straight-eights.

It remained only for a leading manufacturer to apply to the straight-eight the methods of efficient volume production which previously have been applied to the six. That is exactly what Marmon has done and the result is overwhelmingly successful. Months of increasing sales have made Marmon the largest producers of straight-eights in the world.

A single experience behind the wheel of one of these new Marmon straight-eights and you will know that no other type of motor has so smooth a flow of power, so quick a response to the throttle.

In addition it's a modish car for all the family to enjoy. Its' beautiful, it's roomy and in all its details and conveniences bears the stamp of quality which can come only from long experience in building the finest and best.

SOME OF SUMMER JOYS SOUGHT FOR CITY'S POOR FOLK

Camp Algonquin and Ice Funds Again at Work.

Vacation time is approaching—and so is the summer heat. Scorching roofs and sizzling pavements are still around the corner, but they are on their way. The prospective vacationer, with eye on a cool woods shaded stream, is overhauling his fishing tackle. The ice cream vender and the ice man are getting their wagons in readiness for a busy season.

To the family of means, such harbingers of summer signify a playday far removed from the city's heat and the worries of the workaday world. But to the city's poor, they are forerunners only of discomfort, breathless days, hot rooms, sick babies, youngsters confined to bare back yards or traffic filled streets.

Where Ice and Air Are Needed.

In the poor districts ice wagons will soon be followed by a retinue of children who hope to acquire the scattering chips from the ice man's pick. Wistful mothers will wish that baby's milk could be kept sweet. And fathers and mothers both, brought up in the country many of them, will long for a return to farm or small town. But there will be no money in the family purse to pay for even a day's outing.

In anticipation of all that, things have been stirring for the last week up on the Fox river, 40 miles northwest of Chicago. Camp Algonquin, happy haven for more than 1,200 weary mothers and children, will not be caught napping when summer comes.

Mrs. Astrid Save, for many years superintendent, departed to the camp last week with a corps of assistants. The whole place is undergoing a general house cleaning preliminary to the influx of visitors.

First Group Goes June 19.

On June 19 the first of six groups of mothers and children will arrive for two weeks' relief from the first blast of the summer's heat and for a breath of air untouched by the city's smoke and dust. All summer long these groups will be given their outings, "up on the hill." Down below in the Harlowarden camp section, 200 boys and girls, low in vitality and undernourished, will spend the summer under nutritional direction. The erection last summer of the Elizabeth Ward Memorial nursery, which cares for 40 infants, and the building of a dormitory to accommodate sixteen boys, has added much toward the camp equipment.

No check is too small or too large to help. Donations, either for Camp Algonquin or THE TRIBUNE free ice fund, may be mailed to THE TRIBUNE.

NEW MODERATOR

Dr. Hugh K. Walker of Los Angeles, who was elected moderator of the Presbyterian church of the United States at 140th general assembly in Tulsa, Okla.

PRESBYTERIANS DEFER ACTION ON SEMINARY BOARD

Tulsa, Okla., May 26.—(AP)—Action of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America on a committee report proposing a single board of administration for the Princeton Theological seminary, Princeton, N. J., was deferred here today until Monday by adoption of an amendment requiring the committee to submit the names of nominees at that time.

The plan of the committee of eleven would substitute a board of 33 members, comprising 18 ministers and 15 elders, for the board of trustees and the board of directors which now govern the institution, making the new board directly responsible to the general assembly.

FAR AWAY EGYPT SEES CHANCE IN CHICAGO'S FAIR

Minister Tells of Opportunity.

This is the first of several dispatches telling what the world thinks of the World's Fair to be held in Chicago in 1933. Ambassadors and ministers plenipotentiary at Washington are the spokesmen.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., May 26.—[Special.]—Not the ocean but Levantine middlemen and brokers—than whom there are none shrewder in the world—stand between the Nile valley and Chicagoland.

"A roadster," said Mahmoud Samy Pasha, Egypt's minister to the United States, "sells for $400 here. It should sell for not more than $452 in Egypt. That allows $32 for duty and $20 for freight. But what it does sell for is $750. They sell for $750 because you haven't your agents on the spot. The French and Italian agents handling your business pile up commissions and delays which could be avoided to the advantage of both of us if there were American agents on the spot. The lack of them and the consequent losses reflect on you people here.

Chance in New Egypt.

"You will not be doing a mistake to deal with the new Egypt, a nation whose population is 15,000,000 and is more and more thriving. Consider this: In the year 1922, the year of our independence, we had no reserve in the national treasury. Our reserve is now $200,000,000. The government is opening from 6,000 to 7,000 schools every year. The Egyptian university is in full swing. We are opening hospitals and building highways and improving our railways, our harbors and our irrigation. There are a thousand things we wish to buy from Chicago and the vast area of which Chicago is the metropolis. But buying from you now is tedious and difficult.

"That is why we Egyptians heartily welcome the announcement of the Chicago world's fair of 1933. We believe the negotiations between the two countries in connection with Egypt's participation in the fair will show practical results for both you and Egypt long before the fair opens and that the fair itself will crown the work because it will teach both of us a great deal.

Want Trade Relations.

"Practically speaking we are both undeveloped in our interrelations. We want your wheat and your machinery. We want Chicago branch banks in Cairo and Alexandria. All the other leading producing countries have chambers of commerce in Cairo and Alexandria. But not you. The foreign countries that have banks in Egypt are the United Kingdom, Italy, Greece, Germany, and France. Belgium, and even Japan. But not you.

"One trouble has been that there was no merchant marine between America and Egypt. But now we have it. We have had it for three years, but you don't seem to have known about it.

"We now buy from you motor cars and some textile fabrics. There are lots of things we could buy and wish to buy from you but you don't take advantage of the opportunity.

"For example, we imported wheat flour and corn flour in 1925 to the value of 18 million dollars. There is no reason at all why we should not get a great part of that from you. We imported 45 millions worth of cotton textiles. We did not get much of that from you. We imported from 12 to 13 millions worth of manufactured iron. We did not get that from you. We imported 7 millions worth—I am talking in dollars not francs—of tobacco leaf and 7 millions worth of woolen textiles. We did not get them from you. We imported 10 millions worth of wood for building. We did not get that from you. We imported half a million worth of raw corn. We did not get it from you although yours is very good.

"We imported 5 millions' worth of kerosene. We did not get that from you—except a small part. We imported one and a half millions' worth of mineral oil. We got very little of it from you. We imported one and a half millions' worth of printing paper, but very little of it came from you. Of wrapping paper we imported over a million's worth. We got very little of it from you. We imported over 10 millions' worth of coal. We got very little of that from you.

Why Chicago Loses Out.

"Now I will show you how you lose.

"We import 75 million dollars' worth from Great Britain—mostly cotton and woolen textiles, machinery, and coal. Italy sent to Egypt in 1925 a little over 30 million dollars' worth of goods. France sent about 28 millions' worth: British India, nearly 15 millions; Germany, about 18 millions; Belgium, about 11 millions; Japan, about 5½ millions; Little Roumania, about 8 millions; Turkey, 6 millions. But all the vast United States only about 11 millions' worth.

"And yet our people like to deal with you. Furthermore, the more competition the better for us.

"Now see the contrast.

"We export to you aboue 43 million dollars worth, mostly cotton. But we want to send you other things of which we are proud—the products of some of our new industries—such as our new natural color rugs with no dye in them. They will never fade. They are of the natural color as it comes from the sheep, and the color effects are obtained by mixing in a certain way the different red and white shades of the wool. That industry started a dozen years ago and it is progressing."

What They Can Show Us.

The pasha was enthusiastic about what Egypt is going to show us at the Chicago world's fair, saying:

"We shall send you some glorious specimens of our pearl and ivory inlays in ebony and cedar, specimens of our inlays of brass, copper, silver and gold, specimens of our beautiful silks and rugs, and our perfumes. And we shall send you something that will interest you very much and that is reproductions of living rooms and furniture based on designs 2,000 years old. You will be astonished at how comfortable and how exquisite these furnishings are. They are not clumsy but they are very strong. The people are taking up the manufacture of these reproductions and are putting great skill and feeling into them. It is one of the most remarkable instances of renaissance in the history of human culture.

"All that is going to interest you anew in the oldest of the nations, which is also the youngest. Thus our participtaion in your fair is going to produce high culture as well as solid economic intimacy.

"You must take an interest in us. America is expanding very rapidly and must have the foreign markets, and if you are going to get them rapidly and economically you must have your men on the spot. Your great firms must each have its own man in Egypt—a real American agent there assisted by a true Egyptian.

"Preparations for the fair will constitute a campaign which will map all that, and by 1933 Chicago and Cairo and Alexandria are going to know one another as never before. The new Egyptian university will be learning from the University of Chicago and Northwestern university on the one hand, and, on the other, there will, I trust, be adequate banking facilities between the metropolis of the Nile valley and the metropolis of the Mississippi valley.

PASSAVANT HOSPITAL ASSURED OF HELP AS WOMEN'S FAIR CLOSES

The fourth annual Woman's World's fair closed last night at the Coliseum.

"We can't tell as yet just what amount our proceeds will permit us to give Passavant Memorial hospital, our beneficiary this year," Miss Helen Bennett, managing director, said last night, "but we do know that there will be a good many rooms in Passavant furnished, that might have been empty if the Woman's World's fair had not been held."

Vocations held the center of interest on the closing day, the morning conference on "The Girl and Her Job," being attended by a large crowd of school girls eager to acquire information about possible professions or trades.

Throughout the day the girls of the Mortorboard national honorary sorority, in their black caps and gowns, escorted the high school and grade girls to booths or persons best qualified to advise them about the lines in which they were interested. Music, the sorority girls reported, seemed to rank first in interest.

Crowds lingered yesterday around the booth where Negro women explained and exhibited the handiwork of savages in Africa.

Prof. William Maddox, president of Rockford college, which boasts such famous alumnæ as Jane Addams, Julia Lathrop, and Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCulloch, was the speaker at a luncheon.

BEG YOUR PARDON!

An item Saturday which stated that Ukraine is a small republic under Russia's rule should have read "an independent republic in alliance with the Russian soviet government." Also it was stated that a mixed chorus from the Russian church sang at the Woman's World's fair. It was the Ukrainian church which sang.

Girl's Mother Asks Leniency for Accused Youth in Court

Mrs. Clara Donovan, 5850 Broadway, yesterday asked Judge Alfar M. Eberhardt in the Delinquency court not to impose a jail sentence on Ralph Hain, 24, of 5653 Kenmore avenue, who was charged with contributing to the delinquency of her daughter, Marie, and Helen Waniger, 17 years old. Hain testified both girls had told him they had been driven from the Donovan home and he gave them shelter for the night. Judge Eberhardt fined Hain $25 and costs in each case.

Flower Guild to Reopen Booth for Suburban Gifts

Beginning June 1 the Chicago Plant, Flower and Fruit guild will reopen its booth at the Chicago and North Western station for the collection of flowers and fruit from suburban gardens, for distribution to the hospitals and the shut ins of the city. Suburbanites flocking to the city each morning contribute the surplus products of their gardens, which are divided and distributed by the guild.

TODAY WILL BEGIN MEMORIAL RITES FOR WAR'S DEAD

Chicago's Official Parade on Wednesday.

BY KATHLEEN M'LAUGHLIN.

With the piping of flutes, the roll of drums and the flutter of flags, Chicago officially and actively will observe Memorial day this year on Wednesday, May 30, as the boys of '64, of '98, and '17 march again, down Michigan boulevard.

But this morning, with the crack of rifles and the faint echo of a far away bugle sounding "Taps," a part of the reverent duties of that day are being discharged as the graves of hundreds of soldier dead are located and decorated in many cemeteries.

Volunteer details and firing squads, furnished by Col. Francis M. Allen, are visiting burying grounds this morning to place flags and flowers on the graves of members of the Veteran Corps of the 131st Infantry, Illinois National Guard.

Memorial Services Today.

This afternoon a special memorial service for those who are buried abroad or whose graves cannot be located will be held in the armory, where a list of these names will be attached to the bronze memorial. A wreath will be laid beneath the names.

Patriotic speeches, the presentation and dedication of a new flag pole, raising of the flag and decorating of the graves of their comrades will make up the memorial services to be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock by the North Shore post of the Americal Legion at the Irving Park boulevard cemetery.

C. Wayland Brookes of the Sixth regiment of marines and commander of the Naval post, will be the principal speaker. The Rev. Alfred Newberry, rector of the Church of the Atonement, will dedicate the flag pole. Miss Margaret Paque will read Joyce Kilmer's poem, "The Wood Called Rouge Bouquet."

G. A. R. Death Rate Grows.

This year's parade on Wednesday will find the ranks of the boys in blue thinner than ever before. Members of the Grand Army of the Republic, it was announced yesterday by the memorial committee, are dying at the rate of 1,410 a month.

In the last five months the George L. Thomas post, the largest in Cook county, has lost thirteen members, reducing the roll from 111 to 98. Only one member remains in the James A. Sexton post in Chicago Heights. At the close of 1927 there were 404 G. A. R. members in Cook county, but the number that will walk or ride down Michigan boulevard in this year's parade will be considerably less than that.

For the few that will be able to march it has been arranged that they fall into the line at Randolph street, marching to the Logan monument, where special seats have been provided for them during the ensuing ceremonies.

Gen. James E. Stuart, 86, will as usual lead the parade as chief marshal. Reviewing officers will include Gov. Len Small, Mayor Thompson, Brig. Gen. Paul Malone, Brig. Gen. John J. Garrity, Brig. Gen. H. A. Wheeler, Col. Nelson Morris, and Dept. Commander D. H. Harper of the G. A. R.

Cadets from St. John's Military academy at Delafield, Wis., will march as escorts to the reviewing officers of the parade, which will start from Chicago avenue at 3 o'clock, disbanding at Roosevelt road.

Chicago lodge of Elks will hold services the morning of Memorial day in Mount Greenwood cemetery. Members will assemble at the Elks' home at 9:30 and drive to the cemetery, arriving at 11 a. m. William D. Saltiel and Dr. I. Val Freedman will be the principal speakers.

MORE PARENTS PROTEST MAYOR'S PARTIES AT PARK

Two more parent teacher groups met yesterday to denounce Mayor Thompson's Riverview park excursions for school children as plans were made for the closing of 15 more schools on Monday.

"Many of our mothers have visited the park and have found conditions anything but conducive to the welfare of the child," said a letter of protest sent to the mayor by the Delano school's Parent Teacher association. "As one of the objectionable and demoralizing features mention need be made only of the obscene pictures in the penny arcade which the children are allowed to view, to say nothing of the gambling that they are encouraged to indulge in."

REFUSES BISHOPRIC

DR. E. STANLEY JONES.

MRS. WILSON TO FACE CHARGE ON MONDAY OF SHOOTING HUSBAND

New York, May 26.—[Special.]—Mrs. Esther De Forest Wilson, wife of Dallett H. Wilson, lawyer and member of the advisory committee of the national Republican party, is expected to appear before Judge Lavine in General Sessions on Monday to enter a formal plea on the indictment accusing her of shooting her husband in his office on March 29 last.

Mr. Wilson, who was discharged from the hospital several days ago, was not a witness at the grand jury proceedings. District Attorney Banton said today, however, that he expected the lawyer to appear as a state witness when the trial of his wife began.

Mrs. Wilson has been at liberty under $15,000 bail on the assault charge. Another charge of possessing the pistol with which the shooting was done is still pending.

Schumann-Heink's Son Is Charged with Larceny

Los Angeles, Cal., May 26.—[Special.]—A charge of grand larceny growing out of accusations of stock embezzling, was filed today against Henry Schumann-Heink, 36 year old son of the singer. He is accused of defrauding Mrs. Margaret Dobson, Los Angeles, of $8,818 last October. According to Mrs. Dobson, he accepted the stock as security, sold it, but did not account to her for the money.

BAST'S ACCUSER TO BE REINSTATED BY METHODISTS

Bishop Blake's Action in Case Held Illegal.

Kansas City, Mo., May 26.—[Special.]—The reinstatement of John P. Ingerslew of Copenhagen, the Methodist minister who was expelled from his church because he accused his bishop, Anton Bast, of criminal charges since sustained, was voted by the Methodist general conference today on recommendation of its judiciary committee.

The report is a vindication of Ingerslew and a victory for Dr. Otto Fabricius, his attorney, who has fought for years through the Danish civil courts, and in the conference here, for his impoverished client's vindication.

Blake's Action Held Illegal.

It implies a rebuke, moreover, to Bishop Edgar Blake, accused of attempting to "whitewash" Bishop Bast not only by misleading reports to the church in America, but also by calling without authority the Danish annual conference session that expelled Ingerslew. That session, the judiciary committee rules, was entirely illegal.

The general conference today elected E. F. Lee of Malaya as missionary bishop of Singapore. Mr. Lee, who has worked several years in the Malay provinces, is a graduate of Northwestern university and the University of Chicago.

Chosen Bishop; Declines.

Bishop-Elect E. S. Jones of India now surprised the conference by declining the Episcopal post to which he was elected last night. The conference accepted Dr. Jones' resignation and took up consideration of the proposal to consolidate the Manila and Singapore areas under Bishop-Elect Lee.

An entirely new plan of pensions proposed for ministers was severely criticised when presented by the board of pensions to the conference today and was referred back to the committee with proposals for drastic amendment. The Methodists have a hundred different pension schemes in their several annual conferences, and the prospective legislation is an effort to unify the system so that every preacher throughout the church, no matter how poor his congregation, will be entitled to a fixed pension according to his years of service.

Ship's Cargo of Paint Proves Scotch Whisky

Philadelphia, Pa., May 26.—(AP)—Two hundred cases of Canadian whisky were seized by customs officers when the steamer Commercial Mariner arrived here last night from Tampa, Fla. The liquor was billed as dry paint.

The Beautiful New Thor AGITATOR

Tested and Approved 149 Good Housekeeping Institute

OVER NIGHT—a washing machine of amazing new beauty and quality, has won the women of America.

For years, women far and wide have respected the name Thor on a washer. Over a million know the meaning of Thor quality. Over a million have seen Thor washers come into their homes—and wash-day drudgery disappear.

New days demand new ways

The world moves faster—days are shorter—women deserve more time for healthful recreation. And hours wasted on wash-day never return.

So widespread is the knowledge of Thor quality, reaching, as it does, virtually every town and city in the country, that women came to us with the question—"Can you build a washer of Thor quality that will save more hours on wash-day?"

This was our answer

A washer that exceeds their demands. Faster than they asked for. Better than they asked for. And for the first time, a washer that gives consideration to woman's love for beautiful things.

We went to a famous interior decorator for its color harmony. We asked her to make it beautiful—to make it invite use by dainty hands. The result will delight you.

Then—our great surprise

As a fitting climax to our 21 years of washing machine building, we gave this washer every worth-while feature to be found in any washer—perfected them under Hurley standards—and last, presented it at the lowest price ever announced for a Thor quality washer.

A success—over night

A success that demonstrates the place quality still holds among women home-buyers. Quality at an amazing low price—but quality first!

The beauty of the New Thor Agitator wins admiration at first sight. Its neat, compact appearance will revolutionize washing machine buying. And its features of speed, cleaner washing of all clothes, conserving of time and health, have won the hearts of women everywhere.

One week's free trial

This applies to every woman who wants to make her home a better place to live in—who refuses to neglect her health and family—who wants more time for the worth-while things in life.

You have doubtless seen many washers. Used them, perhaps. Now we ask—in justice to yourself—that you see the New Thor Agitator. We ask further that you use it one week free. Take it into your home—wash clothes in it. Time yourself in comparison with your best previous experience. If the results do not amaze you, if its beauty does not win you—your dealer will return it without one penny of cost to you. If you find it fulfills our claims—keep it with the guarantee that it will serve you as all Thor washers serve—for years. We will then arrange to accept payment on an easy term arrangement that will suit your income.

Telephone your local Thor dealer or write or telephone us (Lawndale 0390) and we will arrange to supply you.

HARRY GILL.

Illinois, scoring points in eleven of the sixteen events, won the twenty-eighth annual track and field championships of the western conference at Dyche stadium, Northwestern university, yesterday. The Orange and Blue rolled up 58½ points against 45½ points for Iowa. The Iowans gave the team developed by Coach Harry Gill a struggle most of the way.

Two records were shattered and one tied. Two were equalled Friday in the preliminaries and the one which was broken was shattered again in yesterday's finals.

The heavy rain which fell until just before the opening of the games left the track and field in poor condition. The weather also kept down the attendance. Not more than 5,000 were in the stands.

Abbott Lowers Record.

David Abbott, who has been one of the mainstays of the Orange and Blue team all season, turned in one of the best performances of the championships. He smashed the conference record in the two mile run by stepping the distance in 9:23 7-10. The old mark of 9:27 was made by Rathbun of Iowa State in 1922.

After North of Minnesota had set the pace for two laps, Abbott went into the lead shortly after the start of the third circuit. He led from this point until the finish although Bullamore of Wisconsin ran on the Illinois athlete's heels until two laps from the line. Abbott finished with a burst of speed which carried him through the yarn at least seventy-five yards in advance of Bullamore.

Wilfred Ketz of Michigan, who shattered the Big Ten record in the hammer throw last Friday when he hurled the sixteen ball 160 feet 7 inches broke his own record in the finals. The Wolverine, who uses a triple turn in the circle, threw the ball 161 feet 7⅝ inches. Previous to last Friday's trials, Shattuck of California held the record at 160 feet 4 inches. The Californian made this record in 1912.

Droegemueller Ties Record.

Capt. Bill Droegemueller of Northwestern won the pole vault by clearing the bar at 13 feet 3 inches. This performance tied the Big Ten mark made last year by Droegemueller of Northwestern and Chuck McGinnis of Wisconsin. The Purple captain tried to get over the bar at 13 feet 6 inches but the runway was too soft to permit him to get high enough in the air to get over the bar.

In Friday's trials George Hester of Michigan tied the conference record of :09 4-10 in the 100 yard dash and on the same day George Simpson of Ohio State equalled the conference record for 220 yards, :21 2-10 seconds.

Another outstanding performance was that of Russell Walter of Northwestern. After the Purple runner had won the quarter mile in :48 5-10, he ran anchor for his relay team. When he left the mark on the final lap he was in seventh position. Walter fairly flew around the track and started after Capt. Cuhel of Iowa, who led the pack. For a time it looked as if Walter, who had drawn up to within two yards of the Hawkeye captain on the backstretch, would win. His efforts, however, had been spent and he finished in second position three yards behind Cuhel. The Purple athlete was unofficially timed in :47 4-10 for his quarter mile.

Simpson Wins Both Sprints.

In most of the events, the athletes competed true to form. George Simpson of Ohio State, who had been picked to win both dashes, came through in impressive fashion. The Scarlet and Gray athlete won the century in :09 8-10 and the furlong in :21 4-10. This double victory made Simpson the individual star of the championships with ten points.

Cooper of Michigan won the 120 yard high hurdles after Capt. Cuhel of Iowa knocked down the last hurdle. The accident knocked Cuhel off his stride and Cooper beat him to the tape by a yard. The Hawkeye captain had knocked down two other hurdles and was disqualified. Cuhel, however, secured revenge in the 220 yard low hurdles which he won from Cooper by a scant yard in :23 6-10.

Hal White of Illinois won the half

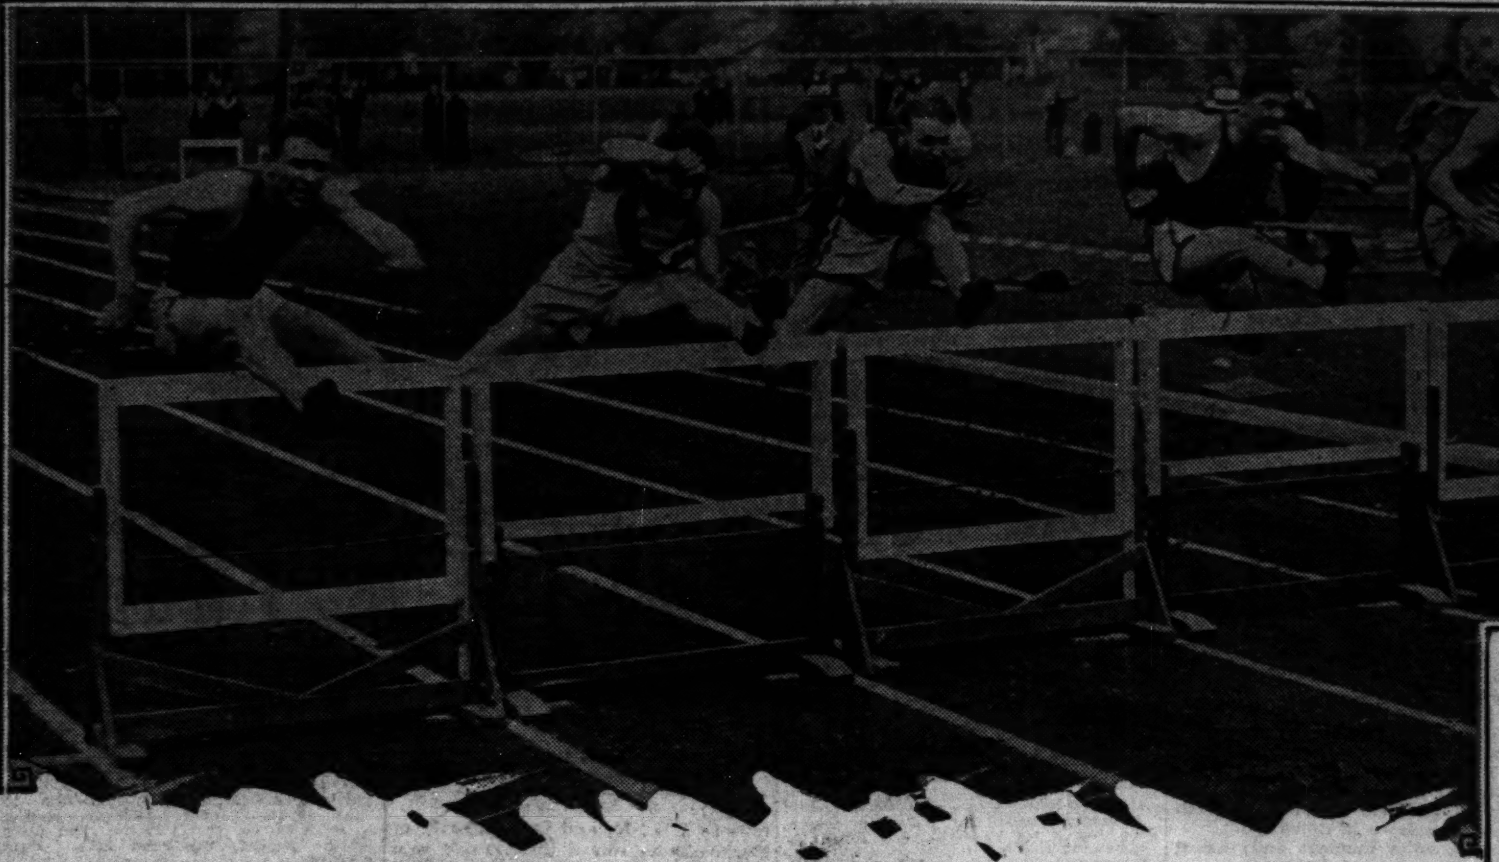
OVER THE TOP IN THE BIG TEN

Droegemueller sails over the bar at 13 feet 3 inches. This jump, which tied the Big Ten record, gave him first place.



Big Ten timber toppers take the first hurdle in the finals of the conference 120 yard high hurdle race. Cooper of Michigan won the event, coming from behind to nose out Cuhel of Iowa when the Hawkeye captain struck the final barrier. Cuhel finished second, but was disqualified, as he had knocked down three hurdles. This gave Rodgers of Illinois second and aided the Illini towards their 58½ point total and meet victory. Iowa scored 45½ points. Left to right: Cuhel, Iowa; Rodgers, Illinois; Petersilge, Ohio; Rockaway, Ohio; Cooper, Michigan, and Pahlmeyer, Wisconsin.

David Abbott of Illinois wins the two mile run. His time was 9 minutes 23 7-10 seconds, and broke the conference record.

Stanford Wins Eastern Track Title; Yale 2d

Cambridge, Mass., May 26.—[Special.]—Stanford's young track athletes are going west with another I. C. A. A. A. A. championship. They left the east agape at the Harvard stadium here today, where the fifty-second annual meeting of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America came to an end in a welter of mud and rain.

They rolled up 43 points to take their second successive championship. It is the seventh time in the last eight years that a California college has won, for the universities of California and Southern California held sway before Dink Templeton's Cardinals took hold.

Yale Finishes Second.

Yale, which interrupted the western string of victories by winning the championship in 1924, was second today with 25 1-3 points. Penn State, runner up to Stanford last year, was tied with Cornell for third place in the team standing. Each tallied 16 points. Syracuse was fifth with 15 and Harvard next with 14 points.

Stanford's sweep was the result of great strength in the field events and a sprinkling of sterling track athletes. Four first places were scored, in the running high jump, shot put, discus throw, and 120 yard high hurdles. Stanford's broad jumpers placed second and third, its javelin throwers third and fourth, two more shot putters second and fifth, and its pole vaulter got a tie for second. In addition, a second place was scored in the 440 yard run.

Weather Slows Track Events.

The bad weather mitigated against any new record today. The new intercollegiate marks which were set by Eric Krenz of Stanford in the shot put and discus throw and by Alfred Bates of Penn State in the running broad jump on Friday were not altered despite a renewal of the competition today.

Krenz was one of two double winners, the other appearing this afternoon when Ray Barbuti, Syracuse football player and star track man, captured both the 220 and 440 yard championships. Summaries:

TRACK EVENTS.

OLD STAMPDALE BEATS SIXTY BY NOSE AT AURORA

BY FRENCH LANE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Aurora, Ill., May 26.—Old Stampdale is once more in the good graces of Chicago racegoers. He won his way back in the Brookfield handicap here this afternoon when he came with a rush down the stretch and triumphed in the last strides by a nose. The two dollar bettors were down on him to the last check.

Three favorites in a row had been bowled over during a rainy afternoon of racing, when the old Christmas gift horse stepped out with four other sprinters to fight it out over the muddy track in the Brookfield. A few wise plungers were backing Sixty. Long shot players were giving Orestes II., a small play, but about nine out of every ten customers at the $2 windows said "Stampdale" when they pushed in the greenbacks.

Sixty Rushes Into Lead.

It was Sixty that gave Stampdale such a terrific battle and which gave his followers numerous attacks of heart trouble. Jockey McCrossen had Sixty running when the barrier lifted, and he soon sailed into a length's advantage. For half a mile, although Stampdale had an easy time holding second place, he wasn't gaining on Sixty. Then for the first time during the afternoon the sun peeped from behind the clouds, and it must have given Stampdale new hope. Jockey Leyland urged and he began to gain on the tiring Sixty soon after the run down the stretch started. From there on Stampdale was gaining slightly at every jump, but wasn't able to get his nose in the lead until just before they passed the finish line. Orestes II., was five lengths back in third place and never able to make it interesting for the two leaders.

While it had rained here most of the morning, the weather had been good in Chicago and the race specials came out loaded to the guards. There was a crowd of more than 8,000 on hand when the longshot Volt splashed through the mud during a downpour and won the first race.

Favorites were in complete eclipse during the running of the first three races, the biggest upset coming in the Yorkville purse for 2 year olds when Coal Black, generally regarded as the best juvenile here, could finish no better than third.

Black Darling Wins.

Cowboy Charley Irwin, who previously had put Volt over at tall odds, also provided the winner of this race, which was the secondary feature, in Black Darling, a western bred gelding by Bad Lands.

When Gold Mint won the six furlong fifth race and rewarded the favorite players, he did it entirely on his own running courage. During the long delay at the post, Jockey Parmelee was kicked severely on the foot by the bad actor, The Badger. The injury was so painful that the jockey hardly could keep his seat in the saddle, and after Gold Mint had scored a head victory over Thrace and was brought back to be unsaddled, Parmelee had to be lifted out of the saddle and carried to the scales to weigh out.

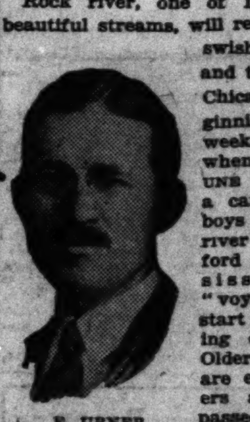
Becker to Lead Chicago Scouts on Canoe Trip

BY BOB BECKER.



E. URNER GOODMAN.

Rock river, one of Illinois' most beautiful streams, will resound to the swish of paddles and the cheers of Chicago boys beginning the last week in June, when THE TRIBUNE will sponsor a canoe trip for boys down Rock river from Rockford to the Mississippi. The "voyage" will start on the morning of June 25. Older boys who are expert campers and have passed the Boy Scout canoe and swimming tests will be chosen for the trip by the Scout organization of Chicago.

In paddling down Rock river, the canoe party will be on one of the most historic "flowing roads" in the middle west, a stream rich in Indian lore and history. For many centuries the Winnebagos and the mound builders before them had their homes on its banks, and many warring and hunting parties of Redskins have passed over the route which will be followed by THE TRIBUNE canoe party.

Heartily endorsing this interesting outdoor adventure for boys and offering their coöperation on the trip, are the American Canoe association, western division, and the camping committee of the Chicago Scout organization, of which William M. Scudder is chairman.

Although this canoe trip will be sport, it also will be educational says E. Urner Goodman, Scout executive of Chicago, who is enthusiastic about the "down to the sea in ships" cruise for Chicago boys.

"THE TRIBUNE is to be commended for its interest in boys and for sponsoring projects like this which make better boys," said Mr. Goodman yesterday in commenting on the trip. "This canoe cruise will be fun, of course, but it also will be a traveling school of the outdoors and Chicagoland history and as such of great benefit to the lucky youngsters who make the trip."

Dr. Howard Wakefield, president of the American Canoe association, has pledged the coöperation of his organization, and it is expected that several association members from Chicago and Rockford will join the cruise as "pilots."

The score or more boys who make the cruise will be under the supervision of A. R. Pieper, Postmaster of the Chicago Sea scouts, Theodore Shearer, assistant scout master, announced yesterday.

THE TRIBUNE will offer prizes to the boys for accomplishments in bird observation, canoecraft, fire making and campcraft. Another prize will be awarded to the youngster who writes the best story of a day's trip during the cruise, as the boys will assist this scribe in sending in daily reports of the adventures which the party experience while paddling down the famous old Rock river.

PADDLE 800 MILES.

Minneapolis, Minn., May 26.—(AP)—Completing 800 miles by canoe, with an elapsed time of 81 hours, six minutes, Ben Tibbitts and William Reynolds of Ball Club, Minn., were declared winners here today over 10 other pairs of canoeists.

Payne Wins 3,422 Mile Race from Los Angeles to New York

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

CHARLES C. PYLE.

New York, May 26.—Fifty-five men and boys, whites, Negroes and a bantam Filipino, emerged tonight from an athletic nightmare, finishing an 84 day run of 3,422.3 miles from Los Angeles to New York and 200 laps of an indoor track at the New Garden.

Andrew Payne, a high school boy from Claremore, Okla., said to be only 17 years old, won the race in 573 hours four minutes 34 seconds of running time and merited the $25,000 first prize which had been offered by C. C. Pyle, the promoter, who first appeared in the professional sport business as the exploiter of Red Grange.

Salo Wins Second Place.

John Salo of Passaic, N. J., a shipfitter, born in Finland, 35 years old, and the father of two children, was first across the finish line at the Garden and second in the race as a whole. His elapsed time was 588 hours 40 minutes 13 seconds.

Third in elapsed time was Philip Granville, a cinnamon colored, long-legged, paddle footed Negro from the West Indies residing in Hamilton, Ont., in 613:42:30. Salo is to get $10,000, if he gets it, and Granville is to receive $5,000.

Although Pyle admits having spent $100,000 more than his receipts thus far, he insists that he is solvent and able and ready to pay these prizes as well as $2,500 to Mike Joyce of Cleveland, a sun browned, blocky built man of about 35, who speaks with a galwegian brogue, and prizes of $1,000 each to the next six men in line.

New York Apathetic.

Derided from the first announcement of Pyle's fantastic plan six months ago until the last man had passed the clockers' table in the presence of a scoffing New York crowd of about 3,500 this evening, the race nevertheless will stand as one of the most heroic, if one of the most absurd athletic contests ever held.

The spectacle of Wildfire Thompson, a lanky hill-man from an Arkansas hamlet called Bear Hollow, bounding around the Garden floor this evening, hippety-hopping in filthy flannels with a wild tangle of whiskers trailing from his chin, was tempered somewhat by the spectacle of Henry Josephs, a tan-colored Negro, sitting on the running board of his $50 automobile, watching his boy, Cotton, fighting on and on through the final torture of 200 laps on a slippery cement floor.

Old Man Josephs is paralyzed from the waist down and his legs were awry in baggy, soiled corduroys as he braced himself on the running board with his arms. Another son, thirteen years old, crossed and recrossed the infield, offering Cotton draughts from a ginger ale bottle filled with water.

Cotton is going on sixteen years old. He had run across the American continent hoping to win some money for the family and the Old Man, being unable to work anyway, had assembled the $50 to buy the car which lasted until he reached New York and then broke down on 8th avenue.

Winner Won't Pay Off Mortgage.

For the purposes of ballyhoo it had been frequently given out on the way across the country that the Payne boy, Andrew, was running for money with which to pay off the mortgage of his father's farm at Claremore, Okla. But this evening, as Andrew galloped off the last few laps, his father rebelled at all this and said the time had not come when he had to call on his boy to pay off any mortgages for him.

So the synthetic pathos of the race was dispelled in the end and Old Man Josephs sitting helpless on the running board of the car which had been pushed into the Garden as realistic scenery supplied something genuine.

"I don't know what we're going to do," he said in a dull voice. "We ain't got a cent. The entry fee that we put up was not ours. We got to give it back to the man that put it up. We haven't won no prize. I wish I could get some smart publicity man to put my boy in vaudeville and make us some money. He's only going on to 16. Even if he didn't win they ought to pay some money for a boy running across the country and him only going on to 16."

Eugene Germaine, a French-Canadian from Montreal, the first man to enter the race and the bearer of a faded No. 1 on his back, limped endlessly around the Garden floor, unheeded but vindicating himself with himself. His left leg, from the ankle almost to the knee was swollen to almost twice its normal size in a seizure of the malady known as shin-splint.

Leg Pains at Every Step.

This seems to be a kind of sprain, starting in the instep and climbing the leg gradually unless relieved. Having no trainer, Germaine kept on to the end merely because he wished to be one who had crossed the continent on foot in 84 days, although the pressure of his weight on the left foot sent piercing pains up to his hip at every step.

Andy Konstantin, born in Siberia and resident since then in western Canada, drowsy under an unclipped mop of hair and wearing a faded red track suit, kept on at a vigorous walk. Out on the Arizona desert Andy developed an abscess on one thigh and was advised to quit. A self-taught surgeon operated on him at the roadside and Andy walked it off.

Pyle Greets Leaders.

Pyle was present in such minor glory as he had been able to salvage after the rebellious and recriminating of the tired and cranky runners during the last 150 miles of the run. His contracts with the men had been exposed as pretty greedy documents, promising them nothing and not even

Tilden, Coen Beat Chinese Doubles Team

Kansas City, Mo., May 26.—(AP)—Winning the doubles in straight sets here this afternoon, the United States eliminated China in the third match of the international Davis cup tennis series.

Capt. William T. Tilden, America's ranking star, and W. F. Coen, 16, of Kansas City, youngest player ever to wear the Stars and Stripes in Davis cup competition, swept through Gordon Lum and Paul Kong, 6-2, 6-1, 6-3, to clinch victory in the American zone semi-finals. John Hennessey and George Lott won for America in singles yesterday.

Today's victory advanced the United States to the American zone finals, which will be played at the Chicago Town and Tennis club next Friday, Saturday, and Sunday with the winner of the Japan-Canada match, which is now being played.

The victory today left without import the concluding singles tomorrow between Hennessey and Kong and Lott and Lum.

BY EDWARD BURNS.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 26.—When Kiki Cuyler sat brooding on the Pirates' bench the later half of last summer, he must have dreamed of the moment which arrived this afternoon; the moment in the first inning when he socked a homer with two mates on to produce enough runs to win a ball game from Mr. Donie Bush.

Kiki's homer, good for three runs, demoralized the Pittsburghers and they blew up, to give the Cubs two more tallies in the second inning. Both teams scored in the seventh which brought the final count to: Cubs, 6; Pirates, 1.

Sharing the starring honors with Kiki was Pat Malone, cheered on by a delegation of home folks from over at Altoona, Pa. While the Cubs were in the midst of giving him a five run lead, the Altoona rooters gave him a gift, which made it a most pleasant afternoon for Pat.

Holds Pirates to 6 Hits.

Pat allowed his six hits in pairs. The first pair came in the fourth inning when the two Waners did their ganging act. A double play halted the attack at this juncture. The next pair, in the seventh, averted a shutout. But it was in the eighth that Pat rose to the heights. Joe Harris batted for Kremer and singled to right. Sprout Waner singled to center and old Joe got to third when Wilson juggled the ball. Then Pat struck out Pinch Hitter Brickell and the great Paul Waner and had two strikes on Wright when the latter popped to Webb.

After the game both clubs took a train for Chicago, where they will play tomorrow afternoon at Wrigley Field. The Pirates will leave tomorrow night for Pittsburgh to engage the Cardinals, while the Cubs will stay at home to battle the Cincinnati Reds. Carmen Hill is scheduled to pitch tomorrow for Pittsburgh and Sheriff Blake or Percy Jones will carry on for the Cubs.

Here are the circumstances under which Cuyler put on his heroic first inning act: Kremer walked Beck and Maguire moved Clyde to second with a bunt. Webb singled off Wright's glove and Beck stopped at third. Wilson popped out to short. Then Cuyler drove the ball to the fence in left center. He never even hesitated at third and legged on home. The score was: Cubs, 3; Pirates, 0.

Grimm Is Injured.

Before Kremer could recover from his chagrin, Grimm got hold of one and sent it along the left foul line for a triple. The panicky Pirates sought to make a play at third after Capt. Charley had arrived. The effort resulted in Grimm getting hit in the mouth by the ball. He had to leave the game. Hartnett ended the inning by giving L. Waner a mighty chase in the direction of the flag pole to pull down a long drive.

After Malone had pitched to three Pirates the Cubs went about the task of getting two more runs in the second inning. Butler ran to third, when Comorosky dropped his long fly and proceeded home when Wright's bad relay caromed into the Cub dugout. Malone paused at the plate while a delegation of Altoona home folks presented him with a satchel, then singled to right. Beck moved him to second with a bunt and Maguire's single put Pat on third. When Webb grounded to Kremer, a double play was in prospect but Wright, the middleman, made a wild throw to first, Malone scoring and Webb going to second.

Both Teams Score.

The score remained this status until the seventh, when both teams scored. Webb opened the seventh with a triple and jogged in after Paul Waner had made a great play on Wilson.

The Pirates made their lone run of the game when P. Waner singled, stole second, paused while Wright popped to Hartnett in front of the plate and came in when Grantham tripled over Wilson's head.

SOX AND TIGERS RAINED OUT; END SERIES TODAY

Hose Leave Tonight for St. Louis.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

TED LYONS.

Complications in the form of rainfall set in yesterday about noon and made it necessary that the White Sox and Tigers cancel the third of their series at Comiskey park. Ordinarily the postponement would be played off today, but in this case it was impossible because the Cubs will be on the north side battling the Pirates and there is a gentleman's pact between the magnates that on days of conflicting games neither one nor the other shall offer the customers any bargains.

For this afternoon's affair on the south side Ted Lyons probably will work for the home talent and Elam Vangilder for the foreigners. This pair engaged in quite a workout last Sunday at Detroit and Ted had a 1 to 0 decision until one was gone in the ninth whereupon Bob Fothergill and a few others hit something and the Sox were nosed out by 2 to 1. Lyons is anxious to make amends for this unexpected upsetting of his apple cart.

Although the Sox haven't been able to do much climbing on the percentage ladder they have conducted themselves fairly well since coming out of the seven game losing streak down east. They started doing better as soon as Hunnefield was placed on second. Since that day they have copped seven and dropped five. Three of these verdicts were acquired in the four games played at home last week and some of this fortune can be traced to the fact that Metzler was given Falk's place in left field. The former hits when it helps.

The Sox will drop down to St. Louis tonight for four days so as to leave the local field open to the Cubs but next Saturday will find the Schalkmen back on Comiskey park for a long stay in which they will endeavor to make it interesting for the clubs from the east.

Ann Arbor, Mich., May 26.—[Special.]—A ninth inning home run by Louis Weintraub, former Chicago high school star, enabled Michigan's baseball team to eke out a 3 to 1 victory over Harvard here today. Weintraub's winning hit, which came with Oosterbaan on first base, was a long drive down the left field line.

The game was a pitching duel, each team getting only four hits. Score:

BADGERS WHIP ILLINI

Madison, Wis., May 26.—[Special.]—Coming to bat in the last half of the ninth inning with the score 9 to 3 against them, Wisconsin pounded seven runs across the plate to defeat Illinois this afternoon, 10 to 9.

In the ninth Doyle singled, and Momsen, who replaced Beebe, crashed a double to left. Matthusen walked. Thelander, another pinch hitter, tripled, but was thrown out at home, and Cuisinier hit safely. The result was three runs. Andrews relieved Stewart and after walking Decker, bored Winer in the ribs, and was benched for Harrington. A wild pitch, a single by Massey and a crashing hit past shortstop by Mansfield brought in the winning tallies. Score:

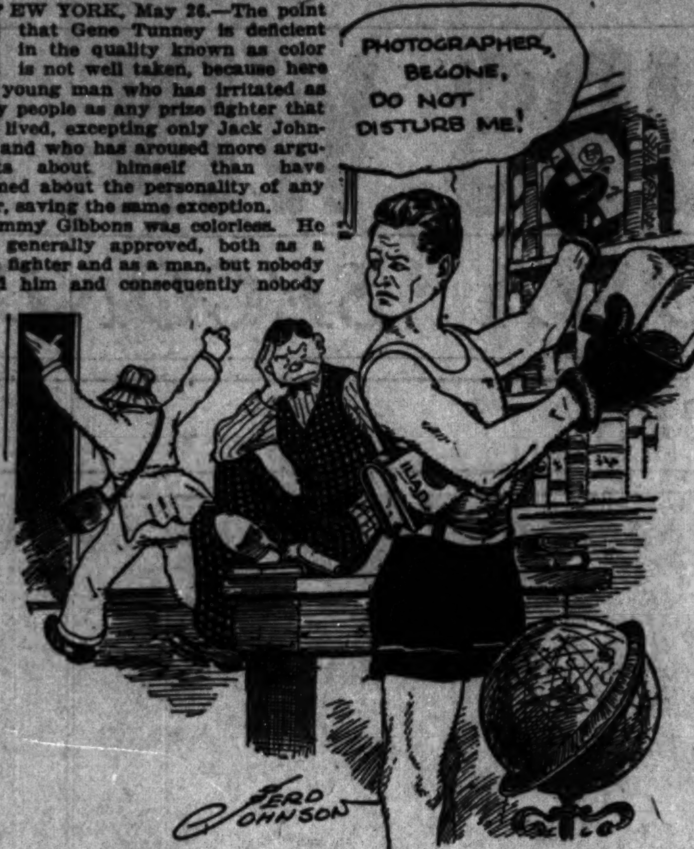
NOBODY'S BUSINESS

By Westbrook Pegler



PHOTOGRAPHER, BEGONE, DO NOT DISTURB ME!
ILIAD
FERD JOHNSON

NEW YORK, May 26.—The point that Gene Tunney is deficient in the quality known as color is not well taken, because here is a young man who has irritated as many people as any prize fighter that ever lived, excepting only Jack Johnson, and who has aroused more arguments about himself than have stormed about the personality of any other, saving the same exception.

Tommy Gibbons was colorless. He was generally approved, both as a prize fighter and as a man, but nobody hated him and consequently nobody ever felt called upon to wrap any furniture around the neck of anybody else in defense of Tom Gibbons.

I notice about Tunney, however, that whenever his name is mentioned there is a tendency to square off, to protect the chin to what is known as the belligerent line, and denounce him or challenge denunciation.

One newspaper photographer goes to Tunney's training camp to make pictures of him and comes bouncing back into the office, snorting and beefing about the supercilious treatment he has received. Another snapper goes out to relieve him and turns up in the shop at the end of the assignment cherishing a frayed sock or a split boxing glove that the great man has worn with the same fervor that an antiquarian would lavish on a lock from the tail of Mrs. Godiva's palfrey or the label of the bottle that Socrates took that drink from.

A special writer with a predisposition toward Tunney goes out to interview him and writes a piece that must be gone over by the office lawyer for libelous abuse. Another one, supposed to have a shamproof mind, will hear no criticism of Tunney and finds him intellectual, high minded, and a true aristocrat.

Newspaper writers who knew him as a pleasant and accommodating supplicant for mention which it lay within their prerogative to give or withhold in the days before he won the championship, now find him speaking of the newspapers as an undependable source of information. And, granting that he may not be entirely wrong about it, they think it doesn't become him to say this and so they call him an ingrate. Others admire his candor.

I don't believe I understand him. He gave me a naive explanation of his deal with Boo Boo Hoff, negotiated per Abe Attell, and became bitterly annoyed because I didn't believe him. If our positions had been reversed and he had believed such a story from me I would have had no respect for him.

For a man supposed to have a broad and well poised mind he is amazingly narrow and petty in many things. He gets very angry at writers who merely say they don't think he is the drawing card that Dempsey was. He sulks because Tex Rickard, in trying to build up a match and enhance the gate receipts in which he shares, happens to say that he thinks the challenger has a chance to win. Instead of disproving suspicions he prefers to suppress them and he is the first prize fighter in all the game to develop a social influence which can be exerted to this end.

Once he became indignant because I asked him if he had had any professional bouts before the war.

"I heard you had," I said.

"You can hear lots of things," said Tunney. "You probably have heard that I have been knocked down, too."

"Yes," I said. "Before you were champion you told me Johnny Risko had put you down in Cleveland."

We argued a moment and passed over that matter. A few weeks later his closest confidants in the newspaper business printed a series of stories telling all about Tunney's professional bouts fought before the war.

John McEntee Bowman, owner of great hotels, and a gentleman horseman, often to be seen bouncing over the Westchester hedge-rows in scarlet jacket pursuing the elusive yoick, once told me that his first line of vision on New York lay between the flopping ears of a jass-mule.

"I began my New York career driving a baggage dray," he said.

Yet, Tunney disavowed his early struggles in the dance hall and beer garden fight clubs.

Mr. Tunney's sense of humor is grim and uncompromising.

On the golf course at Miami Beach, with a tropical storm brewing, he and his partners dawdled and stalled, holding back the next game, which was mine. His strategy was perfect. When the storm broke he was only a step from the clubhouse. We were a quarter of a mile out, and as we walked in, drenched and chilly, Gene sat on the veranda smiling a Monte Cristo smile.

The Inquiring Reporter

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Tribune will pay $5 for each question accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter," Chicago Tribune. For today's question Mrs. J. Doran, 8010 South Eberhart avenue, was awarded $5.

The Question.

Which would you rather play, tennis or golf?

Where Asked.

Michigan avenue at Ohio street.

The Answers.

Miss Betty Berger, 3924 Wilcox street, stenographer—I have played tennis, but never took up golf, so I can't say much about the latter. However, I plan to take up golf this year. I like tennis. It's great exercise and there is more competition to it than golf and it takes up considerably less time.

J. P. Leven, 6452 Greenview avenue, attorney—I would rather play golf. It it more suitable for a fat man. It is a good game to pass the time and argue with your partners. It is the best game on earth to discuss your business problems, for perplexing questions.

Theodore Fisher, Highland Park, Ill., advertising — I would rather play golf. I never have played tennis and don't care to. Golf takes you out in the country for relaxation recreation. Tennis is a game in a pen where you are kept on the run.

Miss Marie Meyer, 6420 South Paulina street, comptometer operator — I would rather play tennis. Perhaps tennis is more of a game for girls than men. You don't have to travel so far and there is no load of heavy clubs to carry around.

E. J. Link, 3922 North Oakley avenue, draftsman—Golf. I play golf about once a week. I never played tennis and it doesn't appeal to me. The only objection I have to golf is that the courses usually are too far away.

CHICAGO'S YOUNG LINDBERGHS PREPARE FOR TEST FLIGHTS. More than 200 boys competed in the outdoor program of the All-Chicago model airplane meet at Washington park yesterday. Rain cut short the tests, but many good flights were made. Preparing a model for flight is a difficult job, the biggest task being winding the rubber strands which furnish the motive power. RACERS WHIZ TO NEW RECORDS IN 500 MILE TRIALS Front Drive Cars Show Superiority.

BY PUTNEY HAIGHT.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Indianapolis, Ind., May 26.—Leon Duray made a new mark in light automobile speed this afternoon when he turned the two and half mile oval of the Indianapolis speedway at the rate of 124.018 miles an hour in a front driver Miller Special.

Up until a few minutes before this remarkable record became official, the track record stood at 121.082. This record was made by Cliff Woodbury of Chicago, about fifteen minutes earlier.

Woodbury's performance destroyed the position of the late Frank Lockhard as record holder. Lockhart last year at the qualifying trials turned the track for a lap at the rate of 120.918 miles an hour.

The day's trials were marred by only one accident. This came toward the end of the day when Peter De Paola of Los Angeles, Cal., sustained several broken bones when his car overturned. At the hospital it was said that De Paola's injuries were not serious. De Paola is a nephew of Ralph De Palma, noted racing driver who holds the record for the 500 mile race, 101.13 miles per hour, established in 1925. De Paola's accident occurred at the same place where a few years ago he crashed into the wall and was injured. Several drivers have lost their lives at this spot.

Faster Than Last Year.

The result of the afternoon's qualifying spurts indicated that the 1928 International 500 mile race will produce generally faster time than ever before, on the basis of the increase demonstrated in the preliminaries. Last year the boys took the qualifying rounds at about an average rate of 105 miles an hour, keeping just inside the 90 mile minimum which permitted them to participate in the big finish.

While Duray established a record, he did so in a single lap, and quit the qualification trials in the second on account of tire trouble.

Later in the afternoon Duray went back on the track for his complete four laps, he concluded that performance at the rate of 122:391 miles an hour. This is almost five miles better than the track record for four preliminary laps.

Woodbury made a rather remarkable showing with his front drive Boyle Special, a Chicago product, going against the rate set by Cliff Bergere, the movie racing king, who had preceded him and delivered a complete four laps at an average rate of 119.956.

Souders, Keech Qualify.

The front drive cars in the afternoon showed a definite superiority. In the past no front drive has won a record at this track. If the indications which developed in the first day of the preliminaries stand up, the front drive car will take a dominant position in automobile construction in the future. It is admitted that, as it stands now in the process of development, the front drive is a rather complicated and unsatisfactory design for stock car use, but if such demonstrations as may be contained in the present contests mean anything to the automotive industry, it is obvious that the stock cars of the future will be flavored by this principle.

Other drivers who made the qualification limit during the afternoon were Lou Moore at 113 miles an hour; Deacon Litz, at 106; Ralph Hepburn, at 116; Buddie Marr, at 109; George Souders, last year's winner, at 111.44; Tony Gullota, 117, and Ray Keech, 113.

Tomorrow the track officials have arranged for the finishing of the qualifying trials, weather permitting.

Bucs Visit Penny Arcade; Then Can't Hit Worth a Cent

BY EDWARD BURNS.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 26.—Donie Bush, manager of the Pirates, has issued one of the most drastic orders in the history of big league baseball. He has informed his men that any one who is caught in a penny arcade peep show will be fined and indefinitely suspended.

The order followed the losing of four straight in Cincinnati and is said to have come after a complete survey by Bush's most trusted secret agents. The Pirates were reported to have become peep show addicts, a habit which wrought havoc with the batting eyes of some of the game's most able hitters.

Manager Bush has known all spring that something was wrong with some of his highest priced batting eyes, but he never had a clew to the cause until he got to reading in the newspapers about Mayor William Hale Thompson's patriotic peep show outings for Chicago's little school children.

"Could it be," Donie is reported to have said to himself, "that my athletes are straining their optics on them wicked pictures?"

Before putting his sleuths to work Mr. Bush, it is said, made a canvass of peep shows of every strata. He was a glutton. He went for the views of the Grand canyon just as assiduously as he did those with such titles as "The Morning After the Night Before," "Milady's Bath," and "Paris Night Life."

Mr. Bush discovered that not only was it necessary to strain the eyes to follow the continuity but that the illumination of even the best peep boxes flickered, causing him to squint.

Manager Bush knows full well that neither eye straining nor eye squinting is conducive to maximum efficiency in the basehitting art. Enter the secret agents.

It is not the purpose here to crusade, so we shall not reveal the names of those of the Pirate roster who were discovered to be the worst peep show victims. Suffice it to say that reports were so harrowing that Donie lost no time in calling a clubhouse meeting, if our informants are correct.

"Every man on this club who has been squandering his meal money around penny arcades is known to me and Mr. Dreyfuss," Mr. Bush is alleged to have said. "The waste of money is bad enough, and so is the tearing down of your moral fiber. But it wouldn't be so bad if that constant flicker-flicker-flicker wasn't knocking hell out of your batting eyes.

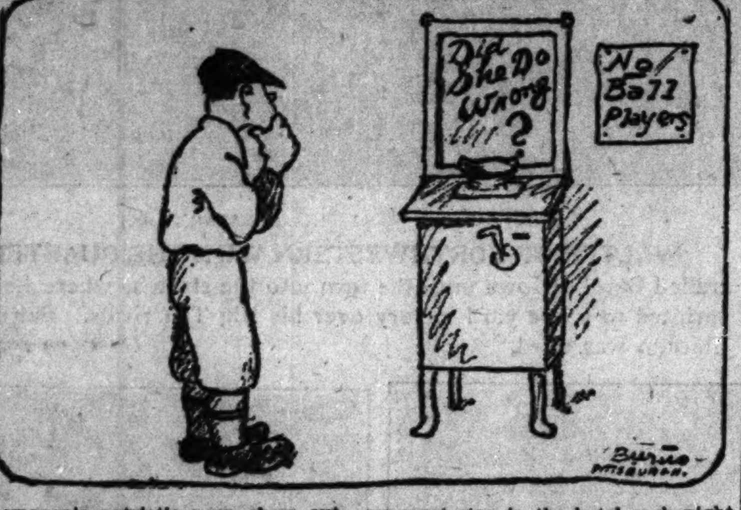
"From today until further notice all men must stay out of all classes of arcades and peep shows. In fact there will a curfew law from now till the time I abolish it. Pittsburgh players must stay in the hotel each night until such time as I am convinced you have got over the squints and we get more base hits and fewer errors.

"The curfew law may be lifted, but peep shows are out forever and I'm not so sure I won't put a perpetual ban even on the movies."

Of course there was much moaning among the Pirates, but the efficacy of the Bush ruling was almost instantaneous. After laying off the arcades for one night the Pirates returned here Thursday and in beating the Cubs made eleven hits and no errors.

There probably isn't a Pirate who would defy his manager by sneaking out to a public arcade, but it has been learned that there are such things as portable peep show boxes. It is now feared that stereopticon bootleggers will swing into action around hotels patronized by Pirate ball players.

But we guess Judge Landis will step in if the menace becomes too menacing.



Lake Forest Nine Whips Augustana College, 8 to 3

Lake Forest easily turned back the baseball team of Augustana college, 8 to 3, in the new students' day feature yesterday. The winners came from behind a two run lead in the second inning to win. Johnny Burk had a heavy day at bat for the Foresters, with a double and two singles in five trips to the plate. Score:

YOUNG AIRPLANE MECHANICS AGAIN TEST THEIR SKILL

Another opportunity to observe the progress being made by Chicago youth in aviation was afforded yesterday when makers of model planes sent their craft flying through the skies above the big meadow in Washington park. Planes of both the commercial and twin pusher models competed in the All-Chicago Model Airplane tournament being sponsored by THE TRIBUNE.

From the start of the contest until the interference of rain at the noon hour, enthusiasm among spectators, officials and the 225 lads who had made entries was at a high pitch.

V. K. Brown, superintendent of recreation of the south parks, who is director of the tournament, realizing that the wet grounds and humidity had spoiled conditions for the paper winged planes, decided that at the indoor meet to be held today the boys would be given a voice in choosing a date for the resumption of the outdoor flying events.

Meyers Wins Class A Race.

Ruick Meyers of the Illinois Model Airplane club led contestants in the class A twin pusher race, his "animated kite" remaining aloft longer than any plane of the day—one minute and 28 3-5 seconds. Meyers did well with his commercial model at the opening day of the tournament, and thus shows that he is to be reckoned with in both types of plane.

Close behind Meyers was Bud Budviritus whose twin pusher in its first flight registered one minute and 22 1-5 seconds. Others in the senior class who made good showings in the twin pusher contest were C. Krejci, D. Lockwood and E. Marconiween.

There were more entries in the class B twin pusher contest than in any other event, but a limited number had an opportunity yesterday to prove their skill. Frank Nekimken, aged 13, of Hamilton park made the best showing in this classification. His plane in its one official flight was up for 40 2-3 seconds. Cassimer Leja's twin pusher sailed above ground for 30 seconds. Other worthy efforts were made by planes belonging to Norman Galbreath, Hamilton park, 25 2-5 seconds; Harold Sinclair, Mark White square, 27 seconds; Don Lee, Hamilton park, 19 4-5 seconds.

Fillinsky Leads Commercial Models.

The best official flight in the commercial model contest, class A, boys of 16 or over, was made by the plane of Edward Fillinsky of Mark White square. His plane, on its second flight, stayed in the air for 51 3-5 seconds. John Rappold's plane, belonging to the same classification, soared for 37 3-5 seconds. Rappold also comes from Mark White square.

Carl V. Carlson of the Illinois Model Airplane club, whose commercial plane made an outstanding flight at the Soldiers' field meet the previous Saturday, came off with honors yesterday in the class B event for boys of 15 or younger. Yesterday Carlson's plane stayed up for 54 seconds.

Who Said It?

When, Where, and Why

The Tribune will pay $5 for each snappy quotation and $5 for each answer printed. Send your answers and quotations to the Who Said It editor, Chicago Tribune.

WHO SAID:

1. Make 'em be over?—Hugh McDonald, 2322 South Ashland avenue, Chicago.

2. The old flag never touched the ground, boys?—Carrie Brown, 318 Elm street, Findlay, O.

3. What is the constitution between friends? (This quotation was suggested in the office and the $5 award is given to THE TRIBUNE Free Ice fund.)

LAST WEEK'S ANSWERS

Quotation—Say it isn't true, Joe. Say it isn't true. And—Boys, I'm afraid it's true.

Answer—It was back in 1920. The world's series scandal of 1919 was just beginning to leak out. Joe Jackson, famous White Sox outfielder, one of the league's leading hitters, and idol of the small boys, had just told his story to the grand jury, amounting to a confession of helping throw games to the Cincinnati Reds. As he stepped from the Criminal courts building he was surrounded by a crowd of his young admirers. One of them, with tears in his eyes, said to his favorite: "Say it isn't true, Joe. Say it isn't true." And Joe, perhaps a baseball outcast but still the great kind hearted slugger, said with a sigh: "Boys, I'm afraid it's true."—Robert L. Buck, 5710 Roscoe street, Chicago.

NOTE—This incident was reported in the newspapers at the time.

Quotation—And there was I, chock full of soup.

Answer—That expression, or rather one nearly like it, was a favorite laugh getter 25 years ago when I was a schoolgirl near Wilkesbarre, Pa. It started when old Adolph Krueger on the farm next to ours came back from a trip to Philadelphia. Adolph had been to a big restaurant and in fear he would not get his money's worth had ordered his soup plate refilled two or three times before the rest of the dinner appeared. Then he could not do the other courses justice. His mournful face as he said: "Und there I wass, fool of zoop," convulsed the neighbors to whom he described his adventures.—Ruth Rottman, 204 Scott street, Joliet, Ill.

NOTE—A search of all available reference books fails to reveal the origin of the phrase but it seems likely to have come from some such incident.

Quotation—Let 'er go, Gallagher.

Answer—Joseph Chesterfield Mackin and William (Black Bill) Gallagher were charged with ballot frauds in the Chicago election of May 4, 1884. It was said that Mackin, when asked by Gallagher: "How many ballots in this box? Enough?" would reply: "Yes, let 'er go, Gallagher." After the election an information was filed in United States court by District Attorney Richard S. Tuthill and this expression was repeated so often during the resulting trial that it was taken up by the reporters and became a popular phrase.—Nona M. Schwarz, 7065 North Hilldale avenue, Chicago.

PYLE'S RUNNERS COME TO THE END OF LONG TRAIL

guarateeing to pay the prize money, and his commissary and housing arrangements all the way had been criticized with all the bitter severity of soldiers grousing in a campaign.

As Salo and Payne came off the track he greeted them affably, congratulated them in the name of the management, and reminded them in a gentle way that they were still under contract to perform under his management until the last dollar had been sweated out of their fame.

Red Grange, a hero of diminished stature after three seasons of the most efficient exploitation that a college athlete ever experienced, was at the track idling the last two hours away in his nominal capacity of referee. Red had merely lent his name to the race as an act of friendship for Pyle, he said, insisting that he had neither invested money in the promotion nor received a cent. He never was more than mildly interested in the runners and he was quite composed at the final moments when Salo brought the small crowd up cheering his sprint around the last lap and Payne broke into a hustle on his last circuit of the floor.

Finish After Midnight.

The runners had come over from Passaic, the last stop on the road, on an evening ferry and had jogged up through the heedless traffic of New York on a Saturday night to the Garden for their 20 mile indoor trial in the presence of cash customers. They arrived at the Garden at 8:19 and kept going until after midnight, Salo finishing at 10:46.

Sammy Robinson, a black boy from Atlantic City, who had not complained once in eighty-four days, sighed and sank down on the stone floor as he finished.

"Man," he said, "I'm going back to Atlantic City and stick my feet in the ocean and say, 'Dogs, drink your fill.' Out in the desert I didn't think I'd have to catch up the leaders. I thought they'd come back to me, but they never did. Well, we had a nice, long walk."

BAYVIEW HIGH OF MILWAUKEE WINS STATE TITLE

Madison, Wis., May 26.—[Special.]—Led by Kabat, weight star, who took two firsts, Bayview High school of Milwaukee today won the Wisconsin prep track championship with a total of 31¼ points. Kenosha finished second with 29¾ and Milwaukee East was third with 27½.

Other class A schools scored as follows: Milwaukee Washington, 19¾, Madison Central, 13½, Milwaukee South, 5, Wausau, 4½, Milwaukee West, 3, Milwaukee Boys Tech, 3, Racine, 2¾.

Yachts Hoist Sail; Prepare for Year's Racing Schedule

The shipyards along the Chicago river are almost deserted. The yachts, freshly painted and their keels highly polished and smooth, have been slowly wending their way to their respective yacht club harbors.

Memorial day will bring the first of the season's racing, which will continue almost every Saturday afternoon until late September. Besides these Saturday afternoon races, others have been scheduled on holidays and other special occasions.

The Chicago Yacht club, Sheridan road and Belmont avenue, has scheduled the heaviest racing card of the season. Other clubs which have planned extensive racing programs are the Sheridan Shores Yacht club, located on the lake where Evanston and Wilmette join; the Jackson Park Yacht club, and the Columbia Yacht club at the foot of Randolph street.

There will be five races held off Navy pier.

Race Over Triangular Course.

On the Chicago Yacht club's program of events to be held on the club course Saturday afternoons the R's and Eagles will have two series of six races and the Pups three series of four races, each to determine the season's champion in each class. The course is a six and one-half mile triangular one, and is sailed twice around by all but the Pups, who make one circuit and call it a day.

Then there are the three Yacht Racing union cup trial race to determine the boat that will go to Rochester, N. Y., to compete in the races to be held there for the championship of the Great Lakes in the R class.

Mackinac Race to Feature.

As usual the Mackinac race, the longest fresh water race in the world, 330 miles by steamer course, holds the center of interest. An added feature this year will be the race from Mackinac island to Sturgeon bay. As some yachts are not large enough to enter the Mackinac race, a race to Sturgeon bay has been scheduled for these. These two races are timed so that both divisions will arrive together at Sturgeon bay in time for the regatta to be held there Aug. 4.

The Columbia Yacht club has scheduled its annual Michigan City race for June 23 and its annual regatta for Aug. 25, which is to be one of the races held off Navy pier.

The annual Lake Michigan Yachting association regatta of the Navy pier is scheduled for July 4, at which time the Jackson Park Yacht club will hold its second race of a series of three for the Virginia trophy. The Lake Michigan Yachting association naval day race will be held Aug. 26 in celebration of the rechristening of the pier.

HELEN WINS FIRST MATCH IN PARIS SINGLES

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, May 26.—The far sighted burghers running the French tennis championship halted the quarter and semi-finals of the doubles play long enough today to allow Helen Wills to gallop through the opening round of the women's singles. The American champion picked on Mme. Marcou, a French unknown, winning by 6—0, 6—3, to the applause of 6,000 customers watching the center court.

Later in the afternoon, before as many as could be packed into the side court bleachers, Miss Wills and Francis T. Hunter trounced Mrs. Lycett and Turnbull of England by 6—4, 6—0, winning the right to meet Miss Boyd and Hawkes, the Australian pair, who advanced to the semi-finals today by defeating Jean Borota and Mme. Bordes, 6-4, 5-7, 3-6.

Other semi-finalists in the mixed doubles are Rene Lacoste and Mlle. Bourgeois, and Henri Cochet and Eileen Bennett, the latter defeating Mme. Lafaurie and Thurneysien, 6—4, 6—4, this afternoon.

Betty Nuthall, who was hailed last year as Suzanne Lenglen's successor, was almost eliminated in the first round of the singles, finally beating Mme. Lebesnerias, a mediocre French player, 9—7, 7—5.

INDIANA, IOWA RAINED OUT.

Bloomington, Ind., May 26.—[Special.]—At the start of the second inning the Indiana-Iowa game was called off here today on account of rain. The score stood 2 to 0 in Indiana's favor.

U. HIGH DOUBLE VICTOR IN SOUTH SUBURBAN TRACK

University High school yesterday took first place in both the senior and junior division of the first annual South Suburban league track meet at Stagg field. The Midway seniors scored 43 points and the junior 39½. The victors were represented by two well balanced teams, as neither depended on any one individual. High individual honors went to Meyers of Bloom, who scored 12 senior points, and Keevles of Thornton with 18 in the junior events. The table of points follows:

Senior—U. High, 43; Bloom, 32; Thornton, 26 3-5; Calumet City, 24½; Blue Island, 12 7-10; Kankakee, 4.
Junior—U. High, 39½; Thornton, 32; Kankakee, 18; Blue Island, 11; Bloom, 4½; Calumet City, 3.

SOCCER TEAMS BATTLE TODAY FOR PEEL CUP

Sparta and the Swedish-American soccer teams today again will try to settle which shall gain possession of the Peter J. Peel cup when they meet at De Paul field, Sheffield and Webster avenues, in the replay of the twentieth anniversary final.

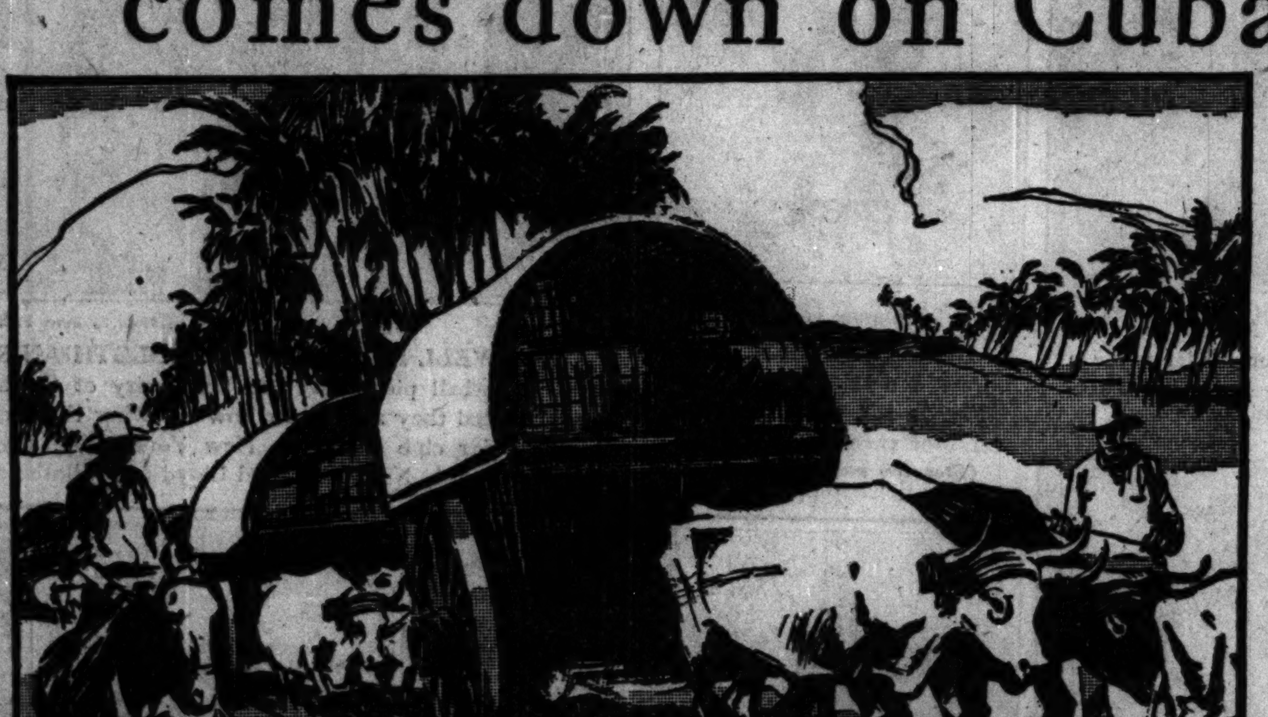
When the night comes down on Cuba



THROUGH the long, mellow days the tobacco plants have grown, taking mildness and flavor from the warm Caribbean sun, fragrance from the soft Cuban air. And now at harvest time, when the night comes down on Cuba, great caravans of tobacco move toward town.

The finest tobacco grown in Cuba never gets to the Havana market. It is purchased by the plantation riders of the makers of Robt Burns cigars, men who have watched the tobacco from the time the seed is planted until the leaves are stripped and cured.

They know the pedigree of every leaf they buy.

Only this pedigreed tobacco, selected leaves from selected Cuban fields, is used in the full Havana filler of Robt Burns cigars.

That is why in every Robt Burns, in whatever shape you prefer, Perfecto Grande, Staples, Panatela, you will always find the same mildness, the same fragrance, the same sweet flavor. When you smoke a Robt Burns you are smoking the finest tobacco in the world.

LOGAN SQUARES PLAY FIREMEN IN SEMI-PRO CLASH

Gibsons and Duffys Meet on South Side.

The Standings

	W.	L.	Pct.		W.	L.	Pct.
Mills	4	0	1.000	Gibsons	2	2	.500
Firemen	3	1	.750	Krutckoffs	1	3	.250

Duffys	2	1	.667	Litsingers	0	4	.000
Hammond	2	1	.667

Chester Sullivan's Firemen who are holding second place in the Chicago City Baseball league have three rivals in the circuit any one of whom may fill the runner-up shoes at the end of Sunday's contest. The Fireos face John Gallahan's nine at Logan Square with prospects for victory a tossup on either side. Should the Squares grab a victory they would be in second place next to the Mills, but the Duffys and Hammond La Vendors may share the same position should they down their opponents.

For that reason the battles at Duffy park and at Turner field will be vital in the league race, the fifth round of which is to be played tomorrow. Of the nine clubs in the circuit, six have a percentage of .500 or better and any may be in a position to head the Mills should their present winning streak break.

Dave Black and Dick Vaughn will pitch for the Gibsons against John Duffy's Florals in the south side encounter. Fallon and Steines are a Lefty Sullivan's Le Vendors of Hammond will be hosts to the Krutckoffs. Nagle has signed a new center fielder reputed to be one of the hardest hitters from the Wisconsin woods.

Bill Niesen's Litsingers will play at Aurora. Neither club has struck a winning stride, indicating an even contest for the Fox river town.

The double header between the Cubans and Mills nine at Mill stadium will start at 1:30. The teams were scheduled to play yesterday but were rained out. Paddock and Overlock will pitch for the Mills team.

RACING COLONY STARTS TREK TO ARLINGTON PARK

The racing colony is beginning to move into Arlington park, the newest of Chicago's tracks, where a June meeting of 24 days opens one week from tomorrow.

This meeting, which is the first in the Chicago zone proper to be held this year and which brings a renewal of the famous American Derby on June 9, opens under the most promising conditions. Famous horses from all sections of the country are eligible to its rich array of stakes. Their efforts will attract Chicago's leading citizens in such large numbers that the crowds, it is believed, will overshadow even the gatherings at old Washington park in the halcyon days of 25 years ago.

The stake program wil have its beginning on opening day, when the American National Premier handicap, a $5,000 race at a mile, features the program. Among the likely starters are Chicago and Flat Iron in a renewal of their feud which broke out repeatedly in these parts last season. Others likely to go to the post are Sir Harry and Crystal Pennant, both Coffroth handicap winners; Solace, Jock, Sandy Man, Hot Time, Sun God II., and possibly Buddy Bauer.

This race also may serve as a final American Derby prep for Misstep, Reigh Olga, Blackwood, Jack Higgins, and a number of other 3 year olds which are coming here to start in the $25,000 race on June 9. There are many other eligibles including Toro, Grey Lag, Ruane, Rurik, and Bulletin, any of which may carry away the prize.

PERKINS WHIPS WETHERED IN BRITISH GOLF

PRESTWICK, Eng., May 26.—Roger Wethered, former titleholder, was beaten in the thirty-six hole final play for the British amateur golf championship today by Thomas Philip Perkins of Castle Bromwich club, Birmingham, by 6 to 4.

Wethered, whose showing was pathetic as compared to previous exhibitions, didn't even make a close fight of it, and but for his world famous iron shots would have been beaten by an oven heavier margin. It might have been expected that Wethered would have been the more amenable of the pair to championship final conditions, but Perkins, who just recovered from a serious illness, piled up a lead of four holes at the start. The Midlander was dormie 5 later in the day, and it came almost as a relief when at the thirty-fourth hole Wethered resignedly knocked his opponent's ball away in token of defeat.

The Victory of Value

WHIPPET sales each month have been establishing new high records. February was 91% higher than January. March was 44% higher than February, and April 17% ahead of March.

The perfected Whippet four is one of the amazing achievements in automobile history. It not only offers high quality at a new low price, but it has completely revolutionized all light car designs.

The Whippet four was the first four-cylinder car with 4-wheel brakes, full forced-feed lubrication, silent timing chain, and many other fine car superiorities.

Its liveliness, its speed, its smoothness, and its remarkable fuel economy are a revelation to the motorist not familiar with this new standard of light car excellence.

Why not come in and drive it yourself? We will gladly put it at your disposal.

COUCH AND CASEY OUTRUN FIELD IN DERBY GOLF PLAY

296 Players Brave Rain at Midlothian.

BY HARLAND ROHM.

Midlothian's twenty-fourth annual Derby began in a downpour, continued through intermittent showers to sunshine, and the first day's round came to an end after the sun had set in a blaze of red. Seventy-four foursomes drove from the first tee—296 golfers—the largest field ever to start in a Chicago district invitational tournament, and every one of them finished, though the last three had a tough time.

While yesterday's play was more or less of a gallop in preparation for the dinner last night and the real Derby today, it developed some mighty good golf. Rain naturally made the course slow, so a drive went no farther than it carried; pitches to the green stopped where they dropped, and three putt greens were common.

Couch and Casey Low.

Ira L. Couch Jr. of Glen View and J. Douglas Casey of Riverside sprinted under the wire in front with gross totals of 74. Casey was out in 38, against a par of 35, but came home in even par, 36, while Couch had 36 out and 38 in. Couch lost a shot on the short second and another on the sixth, but dropped a putt for a birdie on the 533 yard seventh. Coming back he wasted two shots on the 117 yard twelfth and another on the seventeenth, but pitched close for a birdie on the home hole.

Casey had more trouble on his first nine, putting his drive in the creek and taking a 6 on the par 4 first hole, but then steadied down to even par for the nine, excepting the eighth, 214 yards, where he failed to make the green with his tee shot. On the home nine he played every hole in exact par.

D. D. Keating of Calumet led the low net sharpshooters with 70, scoring 90 with a handicap of 20. A stroke behind him was H. J. Bradley of the home club, who breezed over the sodden fairways in 77, with a handicap of 6, for a 71.

Whitton's Foursome Low.

The visitors scored heavily in the foursome event, for West Virginia and New York guests of R. L. Whitton of Midlothian helped him to first place in the low net foursomes. Whitton, 87—12—75; H. A. Bloch, Wheeling, W. Va., 81—5—76; J. A. Bloch, Wheeling, W. Va., 85—8—77, and C. H. Jennings of New York, 81—6—75, arrived at a total of 303, which won with three strokes to spare.

In second place, with a total of 306, were Leo Cummings, 94—16—78; R. P. Tennes, Edgewater, 93—20—73; Dr. A. C. Baur, Park Ridge, 93—14—79, and C. T. Preschern, Edgewood Valley, 98—22—76. The United States Golf association moved into the competition for third low gross foursomes with a total of 308. Melvin A. Traylor of Glen View, president of the U. S. G. A., was highest in the foursome with 95—12—83.

The "Won Tyme" trophy, the award that is played for each Saturday at Sunset Ridge and may be won but once each season by any one golfer, was put up for the first time in 1928 yesterday. Eight men, each netting pars of 70, tied for it. D. F. Wiley won on the draw. His score was 92—23—(69)—70. Other sharpshooters were H. R. Walton, 73—4—(69)—70; E. F. McNally, 84—15—(69)—70; Ralph L. Phelan, 78—8—70; R. Wolcott, 84—14—70; H. E. Oviatt, 85—15—70; W. H. Furst, 88—22—(66)—70, and J. H. Lindeman, 100—30—70.

Walton, McNally, Phelan, Wolcott, and Oviatt tied for ball sweepstakes honors in the combined classes A and B. G. Burnham, 86—15—71, was next high. Furst, Wiley and Lindeman swept sweepstakes honors in the classes C and D.

RIDGEMOOR.

John H. Victor, club champion, established a new course record at Ridgemoor yesterday when he played around in 37—37—74. Because the course was recently lengthened, two short holes being abandoned in favor of two longer ones, the old lower mark has been abandoned. Victor's 74 is the lowest this year on the 6,542 yard, par 72 play pasture. A trio of 86s tied for the ball sweepstakes honors. They were Frank Mesce, R. J. Russell, and Richard Puhl.

The first third of the fifty-four hole medal play Memorial day tournament was played yesterday. The second eighteen holes will be played today, with the windup Wednesday. The leading scores: Victor, 74—0—74; Mesce, 86—9—77; R. Lowrey, 92—15—77; Puhl, 91—11—80; E. A. Thornton, 92—10—82; J. M. Quinlan, 100—17—83; Dr. H. Langsdale, 95—12—83; Ted Letsche, 95—11—84; Harry Radix, 92—6—86; D. W. Cairns, 94—8—86; A. H. Kroeck, 98—10—88, and A. H. Gunnerson, 101—13—88.

MEDINAH.

Ray Eckersall topped the ball sweepstakes field by virtue of his high handicap allowance. He shot 87—16—71. Carl Devol, 79—4—75, was the runnerup and H. D. Weed, 103—23—80, was third.

ACACIA.

Hulseberg, 89—18—71; O. Drewer, 92—21—71; J. Wessol, 96—23—73; Ray Smith, 97—23—74; Leo Drollinger, 85—10—75; S. Wilkins, 92—17—75; E. Hammersmith, 98—23—75; C. Salvaty, 94—19—75; J. O. Armstrong, 88—12—76; Dr. Campbell, 97—20—77; H. Rossiter, 93—15—78; C. D. Mastrud, 91—10—81; H. Roefer, 111—30—81; Wade White, 104—22—82; S. E. George, 109—27—82, and R. W. McGarry, 105—22—83.

The first round of the tournament will be held today as will also the first round of the President's trophy play.

EDGEWOOD VALLEY.

Tom Frainey, whose name is no stranger to these columns, equaled the course record at Edgewood Valley yesterday when he went around in 36—36—72. Besides this giving him a share of the record, which is divided among several, and low gross honors, combined with his four stroke handicap, it also gave him low net honors for the day on his 68.

RAVISLOE.

Having survived yesterday' grueling qualifying play, twenty-four Ravisloe sharpshooters were paired last night for the spring tournaments in three classes. First round play in scheduled for today. More than 150 shot in the preliminary round. The class A pairings, all players shooting from scratch, together with the qualifying scores, follow: M. Collak [77] vs. H. Kaufmann [92]; W. MOTORS — TRAFFIC — HIGHWAYS

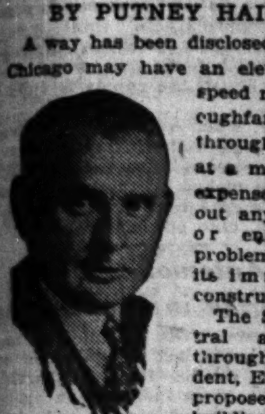
DOUBLE LEVEL PROPOSED FOR ROOSEVELT ROAD

Elmer Rich Points Out Need at Once.

BY PUTNEY HAIGHT.

A way has been disclosed by which Chicago may have an elevated high speed motor thoroughfare straight through the city at a minimum of expense and without any property or engineering problems to delay its immediate construction.



ELMER RICH.
[Moffett Photo.]

The South Central association, through its president, Elmer Rich, proposes the building of a wide upper level, unintersected highway on existing Roosevelt road through the city.

Such a high speed motor way would extend west from Clark street and Roosevelt road to Des Plaines avenue, Forest Park, a distance of approximately eight miles. At the east the street is to be connected with the Grant park drives.

Only Question of Time.

"The building of elevated highways through the city is only a question of time," Mr. Rich said, "and a start must be made where the enterprise can most easily be carried out. When one of these is completed the others will follow, immutably.

"Here is an opportunity to take the first step in modern metropolitan street development at the smallest possible expense. The city owns this street at a width of 120 feet for part of the way, 108 feet for much of the rest of the way, in conjunction with the park system, and can introduce the two level street idea without the cost of a dollar for condemnation or acquisition of property.

"While the South Central association exists for the purpose of disposing of problems in the 22d street neighborhood, I think I am safe in announcing that our organization will be unanimous in deciding to get behind this enterprise and help carry it to completion. It is not a strictly local problem, but our locality, like all others in the city, will be benefited greatly by such an artery."

World's Fair Problem.

Mr. Rich, who is a vice president of the enrollment campaign of the citizenry in support of the world's fair in 1933, is deeply interested in the problem of meeting the demands of motor traffic at that time as well as at present.

"The world's fair will never enjoy its fullest success if the city fails to make motor traffic to the exposition easy by creating facilities for the movement of vast numbers of cars into and out of the city at that time.

"If the problem is left untouched for another year or so, it will be found, I am confident, an impossibility to provide necessary arteries within the time left. We have about all we can do now to provide rather unsatisfactory facilities for the existing traffic. Within five years the local traffic of the Chicago area will have increased perhaps by half as much as the present volume. So we have this increase to look out for, even if the greatest motor traffic movement in the history of the world did not impend during the summer of 1933.

Sees Vast Caravans.

"Add to what the normal traffic will be in 1933 at Chicago a few million cars which will bring patrons of the exposition, and one may have a faint idea of what we have to face in the way of traffic organization and facilities."

Mr. Rich pointed out that the recent election indicated little possibility of bond issues passing which would finance a city-wide system of elevated or other high speed motor ways, in one group.

He is of the opinion that a fortunate opportunity to get the two-level street system under way exists on Roosevelt road as it stands. The cost of eight miles of elevated structure is casually estimated to be about $500,000 a mile, or a total of $4,000,000. This is less than the annual amount paid in to the city as vehicle tax by Chicago motorists.

"Not only will the South Central association make vigorous efforts to get this improvement under way," he said, "but the civic bodies associated with us undoubtedly will take a similar stand at once.

Seeks Rapid Action.

"Within a few days I believe I am safe in saying, this proposal will be moving along in the regular channels of city government. If effort can bring rapid action about, the enterprise should be well in form within a year."

Roosevelt road soon is to be connected through to the outer drive through Grant park, crossing Michigan avenue at grade in all probability. From Michigan avenue westward the street is now 120 feet wide for a part of the distance, 108 feet wide for another portion, and at points where it fronts the west park's system, can be further widened without expense.

At Crawford avenue the street comes down to a bottle neck. For about a mile this portion is only 66 feet wide. Petitions have been secured and may be filed any day starting proceedings for the condemnation of frontage to a depth sufficient to make the street 100 feet wide to the Cicero line.

West Suburbs Ned It.

"The whole western area suburban to Chicago is crying for such a motor traffic way," Mr. Rich continued. "It will cut the time for motor travel from Des Plaines avenue to the lake from over an hour to twenty minutes and do something as yet undone, for Chicago—create one artery which runs from central downtown to the wide county roads at the city limits in a straight line.

"Every division of the city should be actively in favor of such an improvement, and I think that when the plan is laid out in a comprehensive way they will be."

RECALLS INITIAL JOURNEY TO GRAND ARIZONA CANYON

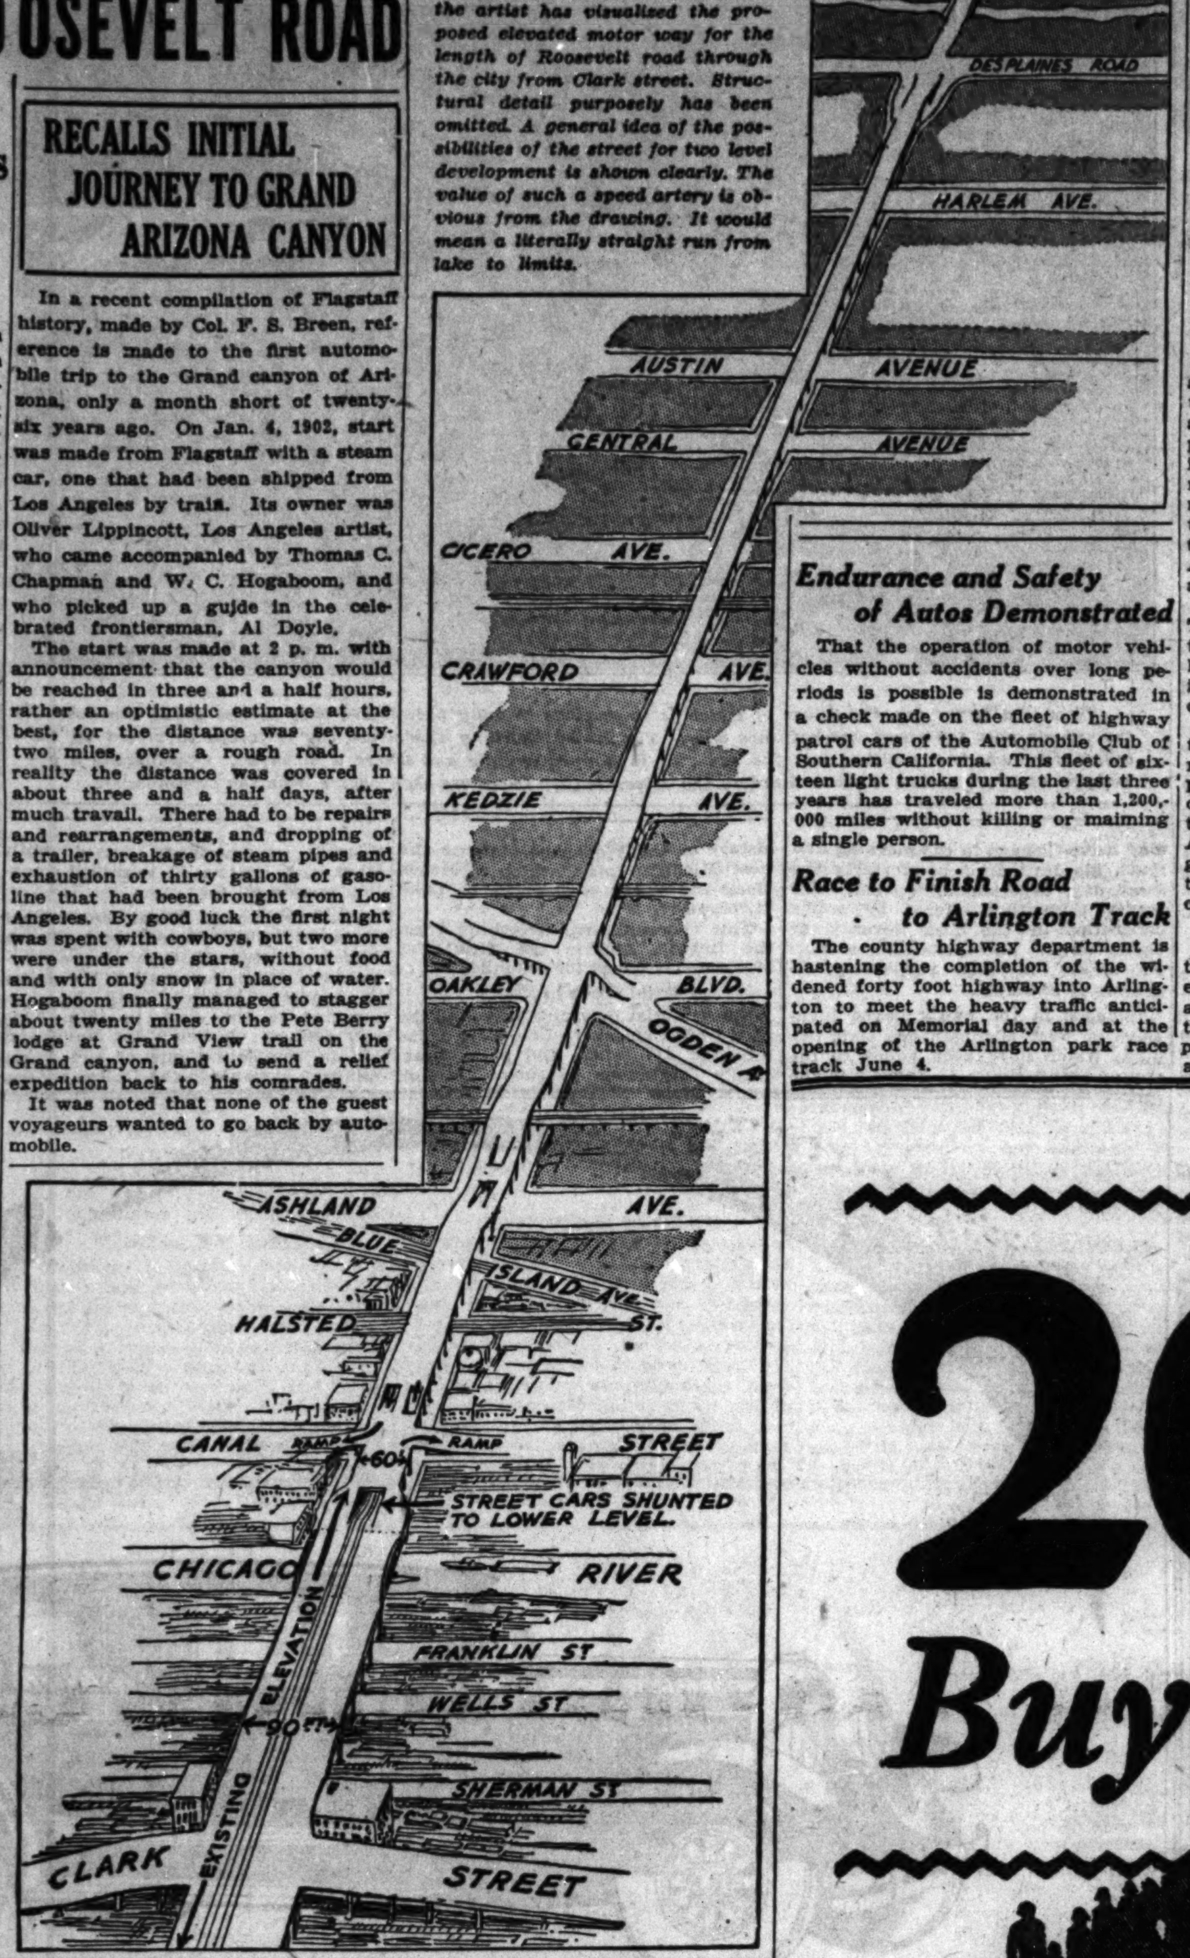
In a recent compilation of Flagstaff history, made by Col. F. S. Breen, reference is made to the first automobile trip to the Grand canyon of Arizona, only a month short of twenty-six years ago. On Jan. 4, 1902, start was made from Flagstaff with a steam car, one that had been shipped from Los Angeles by train. Its owner was Oliver Lippincott, Los Angeles artist, who came accompanied by Thomas C. Chapman and W. C. Hogaboom, and who picked up a guide in the celebrated frontiersman, Al Doyle.

The start was made at 2 p. m. with announcement that the canyon would be reached in three and a half hours, rather an optimistic estimate at the best, for the distance was seventy-two miles, over a rough road. In reality the distance was covered in about three and a half days, after much travail. There had to be repairs and rearrangements, and dropping of a trailer, breakage of steam pipes and exhaustion of thirty gallons of gasoline that had been brought from Los Angeles. By good luck the first night was spent with cowboys, but two more were under the stars, without food and with only snow in place of water. Hogaboom finally managed to stagger about twenty miles to the Pete Berry lodge at Grand View trail on the Grand canyon, and to send a relief expedition back to his comrades.

It was noted that none of the guest voyageurs wanted to go back by automobile.

Sketch of Two-Level Roosevelt Road

In the accompanying drawing the artist has visualized the proposed elevated motor way for the length of Roosevelt road through the city from Clark street. Structural detail purposely has been omitted. A general idea of the possibilities of the street for two level development is shown clearly. The value of such a speed artery is obvious from the drawing. It would mean a literally straight run from lake to limits.



PASSENGER CAR DEMAND STAYS AT HIGH LEVEL

Detroit Builders Report No Seasonal Slump.

Detroit, May 26.—[Special.]—For the last few weeks the automobile industry has maintained a better than normal condition with but little change noticeable. Although there is a weakening tendency noted in some directions, the demand for passenger cars continues higher than usual compared with corresponding periods of former years, and manufacturers and dealers are of the opinion that sales throughout the entire month of June will be good for most lines.

Some manufacturers who were expected to announce new lines before the first of June have deferred doing so because of the steady demand for cars now in the hands of their dealers.

Some of these announcements, it is officially stated, will be withheld until next fall, and in at least one case until next January during the annual automobile show.

This will be a line of cars that is being changed to eight cylinder types from sixes.

Other producers say the present demand makes it impossible to close down their plants to change models, while in one case a new car with front wheel drive is unavoidably delayed while engineers are experimenting.

Trucks and bus output continues to keep pace with the passenger division of the industry, with a slow but steady increase. This is particularly noticeable in the light commercial vehicles so commonly used by retail houses throughout the country.

That the motor truck is continuing to find an ever increasing sphere of usefulness as a chief agency of commercial transportation is shown by the increased demand in 1927, and 1928 promises an even greater expansion if the months that have already passed are an indication of what the year will produce.

For the third successive year truck production has been in excess of 450,000 units. This record of success in the manufacturing field means success in the operating field, is the belief of truck builders.

CONGRESS PASSES THREE MEASURES AIDING AUTOISTS

Three measures of importance to automobile users were favorably acted upon last week by congress, it is announced by the American Motorists' association.

The three per cent excise tax on automobiles was repealed, which will save the motorists of the country $66,000,000 this year. The tax became operative Oct. 4, 1917, and has yielded $1,145,786,000.

The federal aid bill which guarantees for the fiscal years of 1930 and 1931 continuance of the $75,000,000 annually appropriated for federal highway aid was passed.

The George Washington Memorial highway bill, appropriating $4,500,000 for the construction of the nation's finest boulevard, running from Washington via Arlington National cemetery to Mount Vernon, was also passed.

Find Safeguards Fail to Immunize Reckless

With the United States Supreme court decision placing on motorists the burden of protecting themselves at unguarded railroad grade crossings statistics of the accident toll throughout the nation take on a new significance. Of 5,862 grade crossing accidents in a year, more than 1,100 were caused by vehicles colliding with the side of a train. There was one accident for every 16 protected crossings.

A FAST GROWING INDUSTRY.

The automobile business is the fastest growing industry in the United States, based on export business done during the last eighteen years. In its volume of foreign sales the industry increased its business during 1927 by 1,925.7 per cent.

Endurance and Safety of Autos Demonstrated

That the operation of motor vehicles without accidents over long periods is possible is demonstrated in a check made on the fleet of highway patrol cars of the Automobile Club of Southern California. This fleet of sixteen light trucks during the last three years has traveled more than 1,200,000 miles without killing or maiming a single person.

Race to Finish Road to Arlington Track

The county highway department is hastening the completion of the widened forty foot highway into Arlington to meet the heavy traffic anticipated on Memorial day and at the opening of the Arlington park race track June 4.

MEXICO REACHES OUT WITH ROADS FOR U. S. TOURIST

Land of Manana Shows World Its Highways.

The republic of Mexico has begun a serious effort to attract American automobile tourists. Quite sensibly, it appears, the Mexican government has prepared for its invitation to motorists by building long distance through routes which penetrate some of the most picturesque regions of the historic lands which lured the Spanish treasure seekers into the Central American wildernesses four centuries ago.

In the rotogravure section of today's TRIBUNE there are printed reproductions of scenes along the Acapulco highway, a road 285 miles long extending from Mexico, D. F., to the port of Acapulco on the Pacific side.

The evidence of serious intention on the part of Mexico to build modern roads stands out in all of the views presented. In connection with the completion of this road next month, the Association of Commerce of San Antonio, Tex., has joined the Mexican government in an effort to stir up interest among the motorists of this country.

Will Aid Tourists.

According to W. H. Furlong, of that organization, a bureau has been established at San Antonio which will attend to the wants of prospective tourists to Mexico. As might be suspected, there is considerable red tape and formality of the character that irritates average Americans existing through Mexico. The Mexican government officials expend a great deal of time in arguing, debating, browbeating and discommoding strangers, usually with the idea that to escape further unpleasantness a traveler will be willing to let go of some small gratuity.

The San Antonio people have made arrangements with the government to bill tourists straight through with association credentials, and if this plan proves successful it is likely that a considerable tourist travel will be developed.

jective of wits is passing down the corridors of yesterday.

Lazy, dreamy, pathetic old Mexico, civilized before the United States was born, immured in peonage and exploited by despots, torn by civil strife and foolish misunderstandings, is gathering force for a stride which may change its national traits within the next two decades.

Most of the actual work is being done in south Mexico, but thousands of peons have been put into action on the road from Laredo to Monterey within the last few weeks, and a highway of entrance from the Texas border is promised within the next three months.

Building Second Road.

Mr. Furlong, who recently has made the journey by car from Texas to Acapulco, reports ideal conditions from a point just north of Mexico City.

"It is yet impossible to drive a car straight through from Laredo to the capital," he said, "but by August one may drive from Laredo to Monterey. From that point the Mexican National railways will carry automobiles up to the city. Beyond the city the Acapulco highway offers one of the finest motor drives, I think, in the whole world. The highway has been built with exceeding care and is capable of maintaining heavy mass traffic.

"A second great road is being built from Mexico City to Oaxaca, a distance of 180 miles, and will be completed within the year, I am told.

"Tourists will not invade Mexico in numbers, I do not think, until the highway from the Texas line to Mexico City is finished, though one may now ship by ocean steamship from New Orleans and by railway from Vera Cruz to the capital without inconvenience.

"The main necessity is for a clear understanding between tourists and Mexican government agents at customs and border posts, or gendarmes at the local police establishments. Once these elements get on a good footing motor touring in Mexico will be a pleasure, indeed."

News and Views of the Auto Trade

John Driscoll, for eighteen years in the advertising profession, has joined the Vogue Rubber company organization and will devote his future to getting across the message this concern has determined shall reach the public. The Vogue plant at La Porte, Ind., is being operated on a 24 hour schedule and the service station at 24th street and Indiana avenue has become a hive of activity in the tire world.

One of the most successful demonstration weeks ever staged in the automobile industry ended here May 13, resulting in the sale of 142 cars and the lining up of many more prospects. It was known as "show me" week and was an elaboration of the Auburn sales policy laid down by E. L. Cord four years ago—that of making a car so good that it would sell itself. He states as his belief that the public has become motor wise and that it is using the same business acumen in buying automobiles that it uses in buying real estate or bonds. In other words, the public wants to be "shown" as to values.

T. S. Johnston, assistant to W. C. Durant, announces the consolidation of Durant and Locomobile interests in Chicago in general charge of Zac D. Dunlap, manager of the Durant branch, 6631 South Western boulevard. Wholesale operations will all come under the Durant Motor company of Chicago, of which Mr. Dunlap is now appointed general manager.

Light reflected into a driver's eyes is a danger attending night driving. As a means of eliminating these reflections, the aluminum spider of the new Oldsmobile steering wheels are enameled black.

More than a half million new 1928 Chevrolets were on the road by the end of the fourth week in May, H. J. Klingler, general sales manager of Chevrolet, announced. This establishes a record high figure for the public acceptance of a new model, since never before in the history of the industry has such a volume of new models been delivered in a similarly short space of time.

Another automobile manufacturer, the Marmon Motor Car company of Indianapolis, through its vice president and general manager, H. L. Purdy, has added its indorsement to the campaign launched by the arts division of the General Federation of Women's clubs to save the rural landscapes of America by restricting billboard advertising to commercial centers. Mr. Purdy points out that "even to the most casual observer it is apparent that our highways have become motor slums."

The Lincoln division of the Ford Motor company will hold an open car salon all this week in the display room at 2440 South Michigan avenue. The models on exhibition include the Lincoln's entire open car line—sport phaetons, sport tourings, convertible coupes, sport roadsters, etc. The salon will close next Saturday night.

200,000 Buyers Can't Be Wrong

When the Pontiac Six was first introduced less than two and a half years ago, immediate buying enthusiasm was aroused. The public accepted the statement of General Motors and Oakland that here was a new car offering six-cylinder value never before enjoyed at such low price. 75,000 Pontiac Sixes sold in 1926 established a world's record for a new make of car. Sales for 1927 carried the total of satisfied Pontiac owners beyond the 200,000 mark.

And now, even if its unrivaled value could not be proved by comparison with other cars in its field—even if its superiority could not be demonstrated by scores of advanced features combined in no other low-priced six—even if all its claims to leadership were based on generalities—you could still buy the Pontiac Six with complete confidence . . . for 200,000 buyers can't be wrong!

The wonderful enthusiasm of Pontiac owners for their cars seems actually to increase with every passing day. These owners have established its enviable reputation for long life and unfaltering reliability. They are the final judges of its smoothness, snap, style and speed.

If you want to know the truth about the Pontiac Six, go to any owner in town. And if you hear praise almost too enthusiastic to believe, remember that 200,000 owners will tell you substantially the same story!

SABATH POINTS BENEFITS FROM 40 FOOT RADIALS

Safety as Well as Utility Involved, Judge Says.

Judge Joseph Sabath of the Superior court is the latest public official to declare himself unreservedly in favor of the widening of seven arterial highways outside of Cook county. Judge Sabath was one of the pioneer speeders' court judges and has been for years an expert observer and adviser on traffic problems.

In a conference with Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club, the judge made it plain that he regards the plan of widening these highways as an essential safety project, and even on that basis worthy of serious thought and zealous backing of all civic organizations in Illinois.

Wider Roads Safer.

The Superior court judge, who created and was the first president of the Chicago safety traffic commission, said:

"When I read in THE TRIBUNE of the plan to widen highways outside Cook county to forty feet for a distance of 100 miles my mind jumped from the benefits that would result in the way of relieving congestion to another aspect of the situation. That is, the added safety that would come to the users of our highways when such a plan was put into operation.

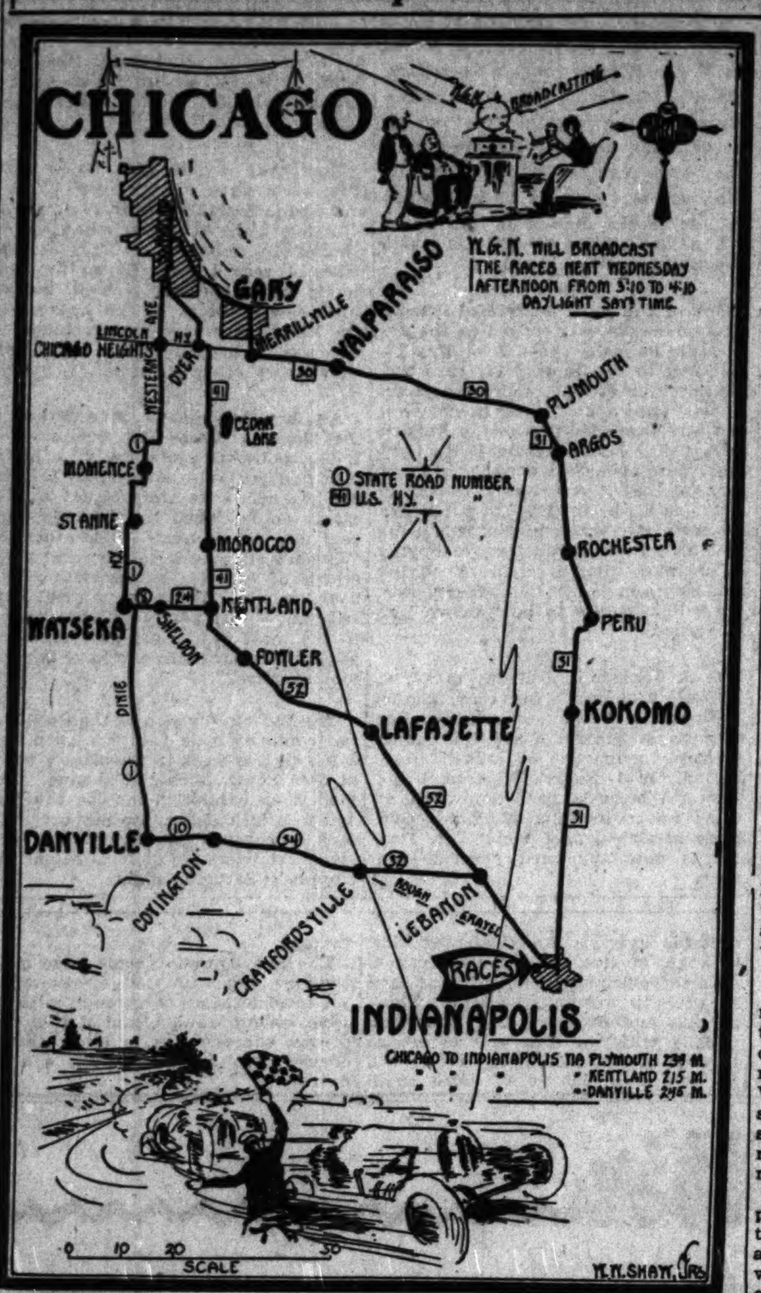
"My experience in safety work has made me realize fully that safety can shooting across the main highway This plan will do just that. How often we read of serious and fatal accidents caused by glaring headlights. Narrow roads make this danger an ever present reality, but with forty foot roads this menace will be greatly reduced, if not, indeed, entirely eliminated.

"Another evil of country driving on our narrow highways is the constant cutting in and out of cars. This menace is the direct result of narrow roads. Slow moving cars or trucks block the path of faster moving vehicles, and weaving of traffic is inevitable. Surely this menace would be abolished, or at least reduced to the minimum on roads of adequate width.

Problem of Downstate.

"Although properly speaking this is not a Cook county project, yet Cook county motorists will receive fully as much benefit from the work as our downstate friends and for that reason I believe it is well for all our Cook county officials to lend their good offices to the popularization of this work here in the county."

Roads to Indianapolis Motor Races



Vast caravans from all parts of the middle states will be awheel by Tuesday on their way to the 500 mile motor race at Indianapolis. Quite at variance with the conditions in early days, when enthusiasts jockeyed their cars through mud and clay and ruts and gullies to get to the Indiana center, will be found the highways of today.

NEW HIGHWAYS MOVE MICHIGAN CLOSE TO CHICAGO

South Peninsula Resorts Now at City's Door.

A concrete illustration of the money return from highway improvements exists in a clearly defined form in the case of the northern part of the southern peninsula of Michigan.

Since last year the finishing touches have been put on the paving projects that link up Chicago with Mackinaw City. There is still a portion of the pavement lacking above Traverse City, but to that point it is now possible to drive the entire distance on concrete from Chicago, with the exception of six miles at Beulah, Mich. At this point a relocation of the highway to avoid railroads has delayed 100 per cent completion.

From the trunk highway, which west Michigan business men now hope to widen out to 40 feet between the Indiana state line and Muskegon, east and west connections are going in rapidly, and the wild regions of cutover growth, dotted by hundreds of lakes and intersected by numerous trout streams—with trout in them—are being made accessible to Chicago vacationists.

Shadows of Prosperity.

In this territory property values are rising and new resorts are being established in large numbers. A party of newspaper people who visited the region last week as guests of the West Michigan Tourist and Resort association, was shown concrete instances of tangible increase in values resulting from the building of the modern highways.

Nearly 500 miles of new paved roads put into use since a year ago were traveled by the party, and there was also exhibited about 1,500 miles of well cared for gravel road throughout the area. Five years ago all roads in this area were merely sand trails. A visit into the region meant hardships for the traveler. The journey from Chicago to the port cities could be made by rail or boat, but the motorist had a hard time if he attempted to go inland. As practically all vacationists are now motorists, the region began to feel the loss of patronage.

As things stand today a motorist may leave Chicago in the morning and reach his destination comfortably the same day, experiencing no more difficulty than that offered by traffic congestion in the first seventy or eighty miles. The outlook for a tourist season in 1928 surpassing all dreams is excellent.

Included in the newly paved highways of west Michigan are sixty-two miles which have been added to the United States Route 31, famous in the history of the Wolverine state as the west Michigan pike, which stretches along the scenic west shore of Lake Michigan.

Build Much in 1928.

The motorist may now travel all the way from Chicago to Petoskey, a distance of 417 miles, and enjoy practically continuous pavement through alluring summerland, dotted with lakes and inlets and beautiful vacation resorts all the way.

According to an official report from State Highway Commissioner Frank Rogers, to Hugh J. Gray of the tourist association, more than 500 miles of concrete highway will be constructed in the state in 1928. This will connect up important links and aid in completing one of the finest highway systems in the United States.

GOOD MANNERS FOR MOTORISTS

Here is a motor car, the driver of which is so anxious to bully pedestrians that he has poked the nose of the vehicle past the street car entrance door. The crowd boarding the street car is forced to crowd by the automobile, which is waiting just the same as if stopped politely and where it belonged. Occasionally a policeman observes such a move and orders the driver back. There are then cheers from the straphangers.

TOURISTS ASKED TO HELP PRESERVE WILD FLOWERS

Coöperation of all motorists is asked by the national park service this year in preserving the wild flowers which, near the hotels, lodges and public camps in the national domain, are threatened with extinction.

In aiding in the preservation of natural beauties of these recreation centers of the public, automobile clubs are requesting the thousands of tourists they direct into the national parks to do their part in conserving the native wild life.

There is a natural tendency to pick flowers unsparingly in these great stretches of open country, because the individual feels that where nature is so lavish the supply is unlimited.

However, when hundreds of thousands of park visitors have this attitude it becomes apparent that the flowers are picked by the millions, or at a faster rate than nature can replace them, club officials say.

Fewer Automobile Deaths Reported in Los Angeles

The present year is showing improvement over last in reduction of automobile deaths in Los Angeles county, Cal., it is indicated in public safety department reports compiled for the first four months of 1928. These show that the total fatalities up to May 1 attributable to motor vehicle accidents were 191, while for the first four months of 1927 they totaled 199.

A central bus terminal to cost around $100,000 and to serve ten bus companies operating busses in and out of Louisville will be built. It is probable the terminal will serve one direct line to Chicago and another to St. Louis. Approximately 140 busses operate in and out of Louisville.

LACK OF ROADS MAROONS BRIDGE OVER MISSISSIPPI

Illinois Approach Unpaved to $1,000,000 Span.

The new Champ Clark bridge over the Mississippi river at Louisiana, Mo., is to be dedicated with much formal ceremony on June 9. It was opened for casual traffic on May 12, and cars are let to pass now and will be permitted to henceforth, excepting at the time of the dedication ceremonies.

The new span cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 and was built to meet Illinois highway 36 after the last state bond issue law had provided for the paving of route 107 from Pittsfield to the bridge site and the construction of a bridge across the Illinois river at Florence on route 36.

The Clark bridge is now complete, but the approaches on the Illinois side have failed to materialize.

Lacks Convenient Approach.

Thus the elaborate structure erected to facilitate the crossing of the Mississippi river at a point that would cut 85 miles off the distance between Chicago and Kansas City stands ready for service, but with no convenient way to reach it.

Work on the Florence bridge, the state highway department reports, is proceeding rapidly after a wait of two years before getting construction under way. Just what point of construction the span over the Illinois river has reached is not made known in detail, but in a general way state officials assert things are going along nicely and its completion may be looked for by late this fall or early winter. This statement is construed to mean that the bridge will be open for traffic in 1929, bar weather and water conditions which might slow up work.

Uncertain as to Road.

The road from Pittsfield to the new Louisiana bridge is in an uncertain state. Highway officials previous to election stated that surveys and right of way obstacles had delayed the project, but that it would be pushed through rapidly.

The distance is only nine or ten miles and would amount to ten or twelve weeks' work if the state highway department let a bid for it and put contractors to work. These details the state has not attended to.

During summer, traffic crossing the state on paved route 36, which is also a federal highway, may reach Pittsfield by ferrying over the Illinois river, and from Pittsfield may reach the new bridge over dirt roads which at that season are usually passable.

Facilities Not Reliable.

Reliable facilities, however, are lacking, and bad weather is likely to make the new over river route a hard job. On the Missouri side, also, a detour is reported as existing, though at the bridge approach and for a score of miles westward the paving is continuous. With the completion of the current project the paving in Missouri will be continuous to Kansas City.

VOICE OF THE TRAFFIC

WOODSTOCK INTERESTED.

Woodstock, Ill., May 22.—The Northwest highway should be widened to 40 feet, and the people whom this highway serves are highly pleased that a movement has been started to widen this road all the way to Madison, Wis. I believe our highways are comparatively free from speed traps but it is necessary that we keep them so. Traffic officers should be on this route for the purpose of regulating traffic, not for the purpose of arresting an occasional speeder. When our 40 foot roads are completed, we should have good traffic regulation. All officers should be in uniform, and should ride for the purpose of keeping traffic moving or untangling traffic snarls, rather than for the purpose of trying to catch the man who is driving one or two miles over the so-called speed limit. While working for wider highways, do not neglect to work for intelligent regulation of the highways. HARTLEY E. RARDIN.

DIXON ENCOURAGING.

Dixon, Ill., May 25.—Ever since the campaign of last summer, motorists in Dixon and the surrounding country have taken a great deal of interest in the proposal to widen Route 6 to 40 feet. Our neighbors to the east in De Kalb county have shown their interest, and now we believe it is possible that much can be done in our neighboring cities to the west. I believe all the towns from here to Clinton will be as much interested in the project as are those towns from Dixon east to Chicago. The Lincoln highway is a great route. It passes through some beautiful and historic spots.

J. CLARK HESS.

SENTIMENT IN ELGIN.

Elgin, Ill., May 19.—This age of rapid transit and congested highways demands that we have relief, and as soon as possible, over our highways. I am appealing to you to urge a bold stand to widen all the main arteries, some of them to a hundred feet. As a manufacturer, running many business cars and trucks, I am not asking it just for the tourists to speed, but because the rest of us should have better facilities. No one wants to lessen the sale or use of the automobile. If it is not lessened it certainly must be assisted. I trust you will find it possible to encourage those who believe in permanent wider highways.

B. S. PEARSALL.

OTTAWA BOOSTS.

Ottawa, Ill., May 24.—We are particularly interested in the proposed road widening projects into the Chicago district, and as soon as the matter has been taken up with our directors we will advise you regarding the appointment of a committee to work upon these projects.

Ottawa Chamber of Commerce.
L. C. CARROLL, Secretary.

INTEREST IS SHOWN.

Rockford, Ill., May 21.—An article in the issue of THE TRIBUNE of May 10 concerning the building of seven radial highways throughout the state to a width of 40 feet, is a story of great interest to car owners. The motorists in this territory are deeply interested in this movement.

C. M. WELLER.

POPULAR WITH MOTORISTS.

Elgin, Ill., May 20.—Every town situated on the seven arteries of travel suggested to be widened to forty feet will reap a great deal of benefit from such improvement. I cannot see why the plan should not get the wholehearted endorsement of every motorist in the territory. I do not suppose the plan is rigid, but that it can be extended to take in other highways that need widening. We have a great investment in roads built by the sixty million and hundred million dollar bond issues. I think it is necessary we make this investment produce its maximum return, and for that reason the plan for forty foot roads will meet with the approval of motorists everywhere in the state.

R. F. McCLASKY.

SEEKS LIGHT ON FINANCING.

La Salle, Ill., May 18.—A resolution relative to the increasing of seven state highways to a maximum of forty feet width, has been referred to the board of directors of the La Salle Chamber of Commerce. There is desired further information concerning method of payment for these extensions.

La Salle Chamber of Commerce,
W. A. SHIELDS, Secretary.

BELIEVES IN CURBING.

Chicago, May 22.—Your paper is to be congratulated in taking note of the court's decision in the matter of liability in passing other cars.

It has always been my contention that the "all hog" should be carbed in some way, rather than be permitted recklessly to speed by cars at the risk of colliding with an approaching car, or pushing the car he is speeding to pass by off the pavement.

I should like to suggest that you call the attention of the public frequently to this matter, as undoubtedly by so doing it will prevent frequent accidents. M. K. NORTHAM.

American Design Cars Are Increasing Abroad

An advance of 40 per cent for March in consumption of automobiles of American design in the markets of the world is reported by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

The March world consumption figure was 71,251, while the total for the first quarter was 163,653.

The total for the entire year 1927 was 640,500. The first quarter of 1927 was 180,195, but the strong showing of March this year leads to the expectation in the industry that the first half of 1928 will register a marked increase over last year.

ELEVATED ROADS HURTFUL, VIEW OF WEST SIDER

Holds Motor Ways Should Be on Ground.

To build elevated highways over the railroad tracks to permit uninterrupted automobile traffic from the suburbs into the loop, as recommended recently in a report submitted to the city council's committee on traffic regulation and public safety, might, according to Otto Kaspar, west side banker, do more harm than good to Chicago.

"Broad highways coming into the city over the railroad tracks from all directions are practical and there is an immediate need for them," Mr. Kaspar commented, "but instead of elevating the highways and adding more height to the 'Chinese Walls' that cut one section of the city off from another and lower real estate values for miles along their dark barriers, it is suggested that the railroads be depressed and turned into electrified subways and the highways be built as broad, beautiful boulevards.

"It is true that some engineers declare that track depressions are not practicable, but we know they exist in other cities," Mr. Kaspar continued. "Less than twenty years ago Park avenue in New York City was a shabby lane of squat red brick buildings. Since the New York Central and New Haven tracks were depressed from about 100th street to 42d street this right of way has grown to two and a half miles of towering apartments.

"The increased realty values are many times the total cost of tracking improvements.

"Electrified passenger trains underground free from all climatic changes are highly practical for Chicago and would result in stores and homes being built along light, airy streets above the tracks where now there are blackened deserted areas abutting all railroad rights of way entering our city."

Mr. Kaspar points out that Chicago has an opportunity of being the most beautiful city in the world by the time of the World's Fair in 1933 if unified improvements are carried on in a systematic manner during the next five years.

HOLDS SEPARATION OF GRADES COUNTRY'S BIGGEST NECESSITY

The elimination of grade crossing hazards is urged in a brief filed with the interstate commerce commission by the American Motorists' association in connection with the commission's hearings on the adequacy of automatic train control. The motoring association urged that there is a greater need at the present time for safety at grade crossings than there is for automatic block signals or train control devices. Many representatives of the leading railroads have likewise urged upon the commission the necessity for the elimination of the grade crossing hazard.

WOULD ASSIST TRAFFIC.

Traffic signals conveying the same meaning everywhere would assist the driver and the pedestrian.

PROVED BY A MILLION MILES

Before the new Oldsmobile was presented to the public more than a million miles of testing were put behind it. For two years it was threading the traffic of street and highway . . . running the gauntlet of exacting tests on the General Motors Proving Ground . . . 1,177,000 miles of wearing, tearing use!

As a result, the new Oldsmobile brings to buyers those fine car qualities which have in the past been available only at higher prices—

—high speed combined with steadiness . . . true smoothness combined with rugged power . . . quietness combined with ease of operation—

—All in a six whose stamina is a matter of engineering record!

Naturally, it has emphasized the brilliant styling achievement represented in the new Oldsmobile-Fisher bodies. Naturally, it has caused amazement that a car of so many basic superiorities could offer in addition so many items of equipment.

Find out for yourself the reasons for the new vogue that has caused thousands and thousands of buyers to choose the new Oldsmobile.

A real estate man looks at an Oldsmobile

"Undoubtedly I am unreasonable in my demands," said this real estate man when he came in. "I want the performance, comfort and appearance of an expensive car—and I want the fine quality of materials and construction that will make these advantages lasting. Yet I don't want to invest a lot of money."

When informed that the two door sedan sold for $925 f. o. b. Lansing he lifted his eyebrows. "Hmm," he said, "nice lines. "What kind of body construction?"

"Fisher construction," he was informed. "Selected hardwood and steel that—"

"Yes, I know," he interrupted. "I've read Fisher advertising and know what that means."

In a few minutes he was at the wheel of an Oldsmobile headed toward one of his subdivisions. The road was far from good. "I have never ridden in a more comfortable car," he exclaimed. "I thought that only the biggest cars could ride like this."

When he was told that a set of four Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers came with the car as standard equipment, he was quite surprised.

Returning through traffic he tucked the car into a scant parking space at the curb, stepped out and said, "I never thought I'd find it—but I have. This car meets every requirement I need and want. I'm sold!" Come take that drive today.

THE FINE CAR OF LOW PRICE

AIRMAN Series
Coupe
7-passenger De Luxe Sedan

The only cooling system you can run forever . . . .
without a cent for upkeep or repairs

YOU simply forget the cooling system of your Airman! With air-cooling, there is nothing—and never will be anything—to fill, drain, mix, tighten, lubricate, replace or repair; no water to boil, freeze or leak.

In Aviation, where only modern and proven principles are used, air-cooling has made water-cooling obsolete and impractical.

In the automobile, air-cooling makes possible equally important advances—in supremely fine motor performance and a most unusual degree of riding comfort. It is because of air-cooling—together with a dozen other exclusive Franklin features—that the Airman is today enjoying its great increase in both sales and popularity.

Nothing equals an air-cooled motor for smooth, quiet unrelenting power to meet any road emergency.

The rapid acceleration immediately wins the acclaim of all who ride in the Airman. Equally rapid deceleration is always the positive response from the Airman's synchronized, 4-wheel brakes. And the Airman stands alone in affording sustained high speed with comfort.

We invite you to have a demonstration today. Convince yourself that the Airman is America's most modern motor car. Convenient terms of payment may be arranged.

"Never mind the costs" we told the Engineers

THE TIREMASTER

P. W. Litchfield, President of The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Inc.; President, Chairman, or Advisory Board Member of twenty-four affiliated or subsidiary corporations. Under Mr. Litchfield's direct charge, Goodyear has made more than 115,000,000 tires, and now crowns that unequaled record with the Goodyear Double Eagle Tire

THREE HUNDRED Goodyear engineers and development men listened intently while we told them our plan.

It was to build a super-tire, to honor the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of this company in 1898.

We sketched it in broad outline, emphasizing that above all things we wanted it to be almost wastefully good.

"Never mind the costs!" we told the engineers. "Give us such a tire as the world has never seen."

And now, after a year crowded with experiment and trial, we have made this tire, and we call it the GOODYEAR DOUBLE EAGLE.

We are proud to offer it as representative of the mature experience and youthful aspiration of the largest rubber company in the world.

It is definitely and intentionally non-competitive — there is no existing tire to which it may properly be compared.

We expect it to have a very limited production, on account of its higher price and because it frankly is a much better tire than the average person needs.

THE Goodyear Double Eagle Tire is not to be classed as a "heavy duty" tire — it is much more than that.

Important Features of the "Goodyear Double Eagle" —the Tire of Tires

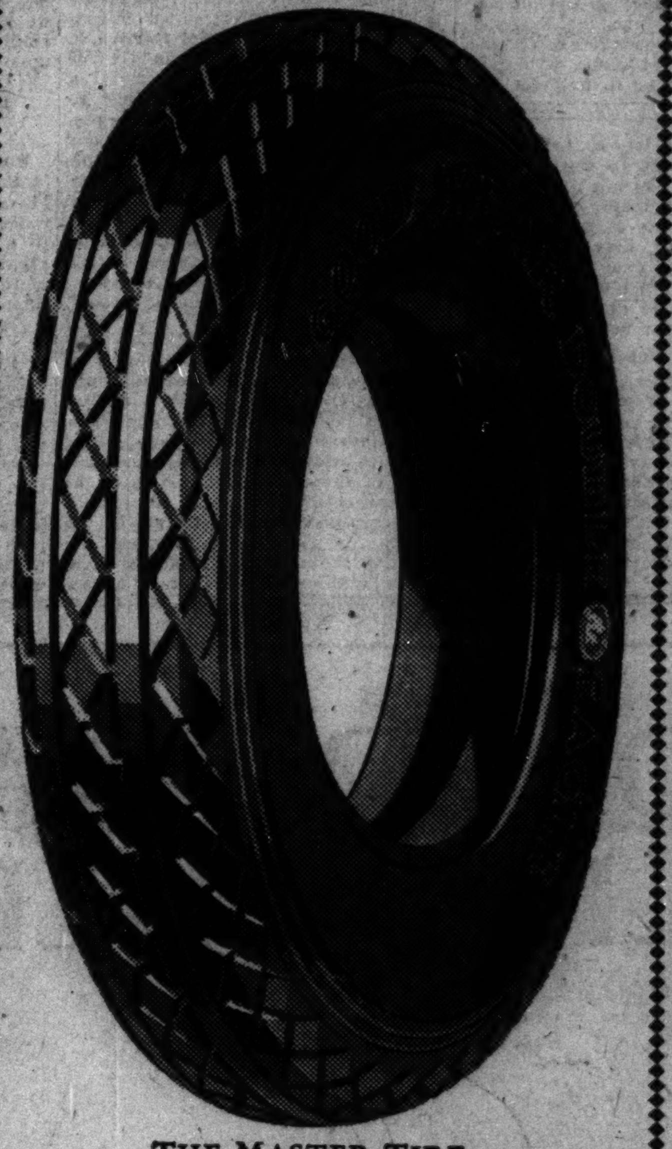
1. The finest, strongest, handsomest tire that money can buy.
2. The deep-cut, tractive All-Weather Tread is practically double-thick.
3. The toughest and longest-wearing rubber compound in this tread Goodyear has yet developed.
4. The body of the tire built extra-heavy of SUPERTWIST cord fabric, to a new oversize dimension both in cross-section and overall diameter.
5. More plies of cord fabric; more rubber between the plies.
6. Heavy friction and coating of rubber to protect cords from moisture.
7. Special low temperature cure.
8. The finest materials, the finest construction, regardless of cost.

It is in every sense a luxury tire — for those few people to whom price is secondary, or whose service demands something extraordinarily fine.

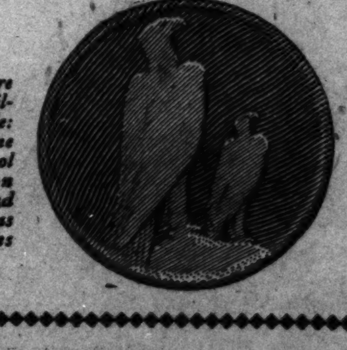
It does not conflict with any tire — not even with the veteran Goodyear All-Weather Balloon, which in the popular sense remains the world's standard.

Its place is apart and alone, and it occupies that place in princely solitude.

To tell you how many miles this new tire might deliver under ordinary usage would be to affront your credulity.



THE MASTER TIRE



IDENTIFICATION:

On the sidewall of this tire you will find in silver silhouette the Double Eagle: world mark of superfine quality and value, symbol of that Goodyear union of seasoned experience and youthful progress which has produced the tire of tires

You ought never to have a puncture with it, because of its extreme thickness of tough tread and body.

You ought never to experience a blowout or any similar trouble; the chances against it should be about 1000 to 1.

You ought to be able to forget completely that there are such things as tires on your car.

WE believe no tire has ever endured such tests as were imposed on the Goodyear Double Eagle Tire before offering it to Goodyear Dealers and to the public.

Not merely speed and endurance tests, but the harshest sort of abusive service on improved and unimproved roads.

No tire has ever emerged from like tests with an equally flawless showing.

We think you are safe under anything like normal conditions in expecting it to last as long as you keep your car.

Goodyear has made for the Double Eagle Tire an equally superior and enduring inner tube — and calls this distinguished buff-color tube also the Double Eagle

Horatio Alger Sextet Turns $1,000 Into $1,500,000 Flats

SIX HUGUELET BROTHERS IN 'RISE TO RICHES'

Plan 18 Story Suites in Walton Place.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

MR. AND MRS. JAMES HUGUELET.

Mr. Horatio Alger's most promising juvenile heroes in "Sink or Swim," "Do and Dare," and other stories of boy wonders who waded through trouble without disturbing a hair of their ungreased heads, hadn't a thing on a sextet of Chicago brothers, leading characters in a modern serial of success. If the late lamented Mr. Alger were only here and could be persuaded to write a story around these six as heroes, he'd probably call it "Garage to Greatness" or "Gas to Grandeur," or "Liverying Into Luxury."

The six are familiarly known as Gene, Jim, Joe, Bill, Dave, and Jack. More formally they are Mr. Eugene H. Huguelet, Mr. James B. Huguelet, Mr. Joseph E. Huguelet, Mr. William P. Huguelet, Mr. David M. Huguelet, and Mr. John T. Huguelet. James is the oldest and John T. is the baby of the family. The latter, by the way, is [illegible]7. There originally was a seventh Huguelet brother, but he died forty-seven years ago.

All of the Huguelet boys were born in Chicago, and in old Chicago they've stuck, and, like Mr. Alger's faultless dictionaries, they've made good. So good, in fact, that from a start back in the mauve decade, with a hard scraped together $1,000, they're going to build a $1,500,000 eighteen story apartment building at 63 to 67 East Walton place.

An Alger-Like Coincidence.

This site, with an Alger-like coincidence, is only about a block from the site where they invested that first and tremendous one thousand dollars. Now, as we believe their life story is more interesting than the details of the skyscraper, we'll tell it first.

Jules Huguelet came to America from Berne, Switzerland. Here in Chicago he met and married Susanne Marx, who was born at La Salle and Goethe in 1848. Jules, who afterwards Americanized his name to James, and Susanne, had seven boys. There are also two daughters but they don't figure in this story.

Along in 1905 when there were only six of the boys left and the oldest of the sextet was thirty and the youngest only fourteen, they discussed long and earnestly the question of starting a garage. Chicago had no traffic problems then and loops streets were as safe for pedestrians as a suburban garden.

Pick Out Likely Corner.

They picked out as a likely site the Chicago Varnish company's plant at the southwest corner of Delaware and Pine [now Boul Mich], the present site of the Fourth Presbyterian church. Mr. Potwin of Potwin & Morgan, the owner of the corner, just didn't like these here new fangled autymobiles and didn't believe a livery stable for such contraptions would pay. So he said he'd only rent the six boys space on condition that they guarantee him five years' rent.

The six got busy and at last scraped together $1,000. Mr. Potwin decided he'd let them have it when he saw the actual cash and so without a cent of active capital on hand the sextet opened for business on Sept. 20, 1905—an historical day for the Huguelet clan.

For they made good. H. H. Hopkins, of Lord & Thomas, was the first customer. Other Gold Coast millionaires decided it was a good place to keep their cars, and business grew. It grew slowly, however, and the sextet had their struggles to keep afloat. It was the first garage in town [so 'tis claimed]. Gasoline [they didn't call it "gas" in those days] was kept in barrels. The imposing array of modern conveniences was entirely lacking.

Build with Garage Profits.

But they made enough to build their own garage in 1910 on a site fronting on Gary place [now called Huguelet place], a tiny thoroughfare running from Walton to Delaware. They paid $12,000 for this 68x200 parcel extending west to Ernst court, another block long street.

A two story garage, designed by Marshall & Fox, was built. It accommodates 400 cars and there are more Broll-Sloyces, Slinkums, Braddilics, Crackards and Slearce-Parrows than there are Fjords, Chellovrays and Crickets. The names of the owners of these cars make an imposing list.

Now, along with erecting the eighteen story apartments, the six Huguelet success-boys are going to remodel the present garage into a four story affair, with runways. Part of the roof will be used by tenants of the tall flats for a playground and putting green.

Perpetual South Exposure.

The architects of both apartments and garage are Schmidt, Garden & Erikson. Their plans call for two stores and an entrance lobby on the first floor of the eighteen story building. The second and third floors will have shops or maids' rooms. From the 4th to the 8th inclusive there'll be two four room suites to each floor. From the 9th to the 18th inclusive, there'll be five six room duplex suites, and four and five room apartments.

The cost is placed at $1,500,000. The garage will be finished in the fall and the apartments by next spring. The eighteen story building will be of red, brown, and purple face brick on all sides with terra cotta trim. It will, of course, have a perpetual south exposure over the landscaped roof of Huguelet Bros. garage.

Mr. J. W. Kiser of Gotham, who owns the southwest corner of Halsted and Fulton streets, recently decided it would be a good idea to improve this bit of vacant and unproductive real estate with a printers' building. As a result of this New Yorker's decision to improve his Chicago realty holdings, plans have just been completed by W. Gibbons Uffendell for a twelve story fireproof structure, which will represent a reported cost of $750,000.

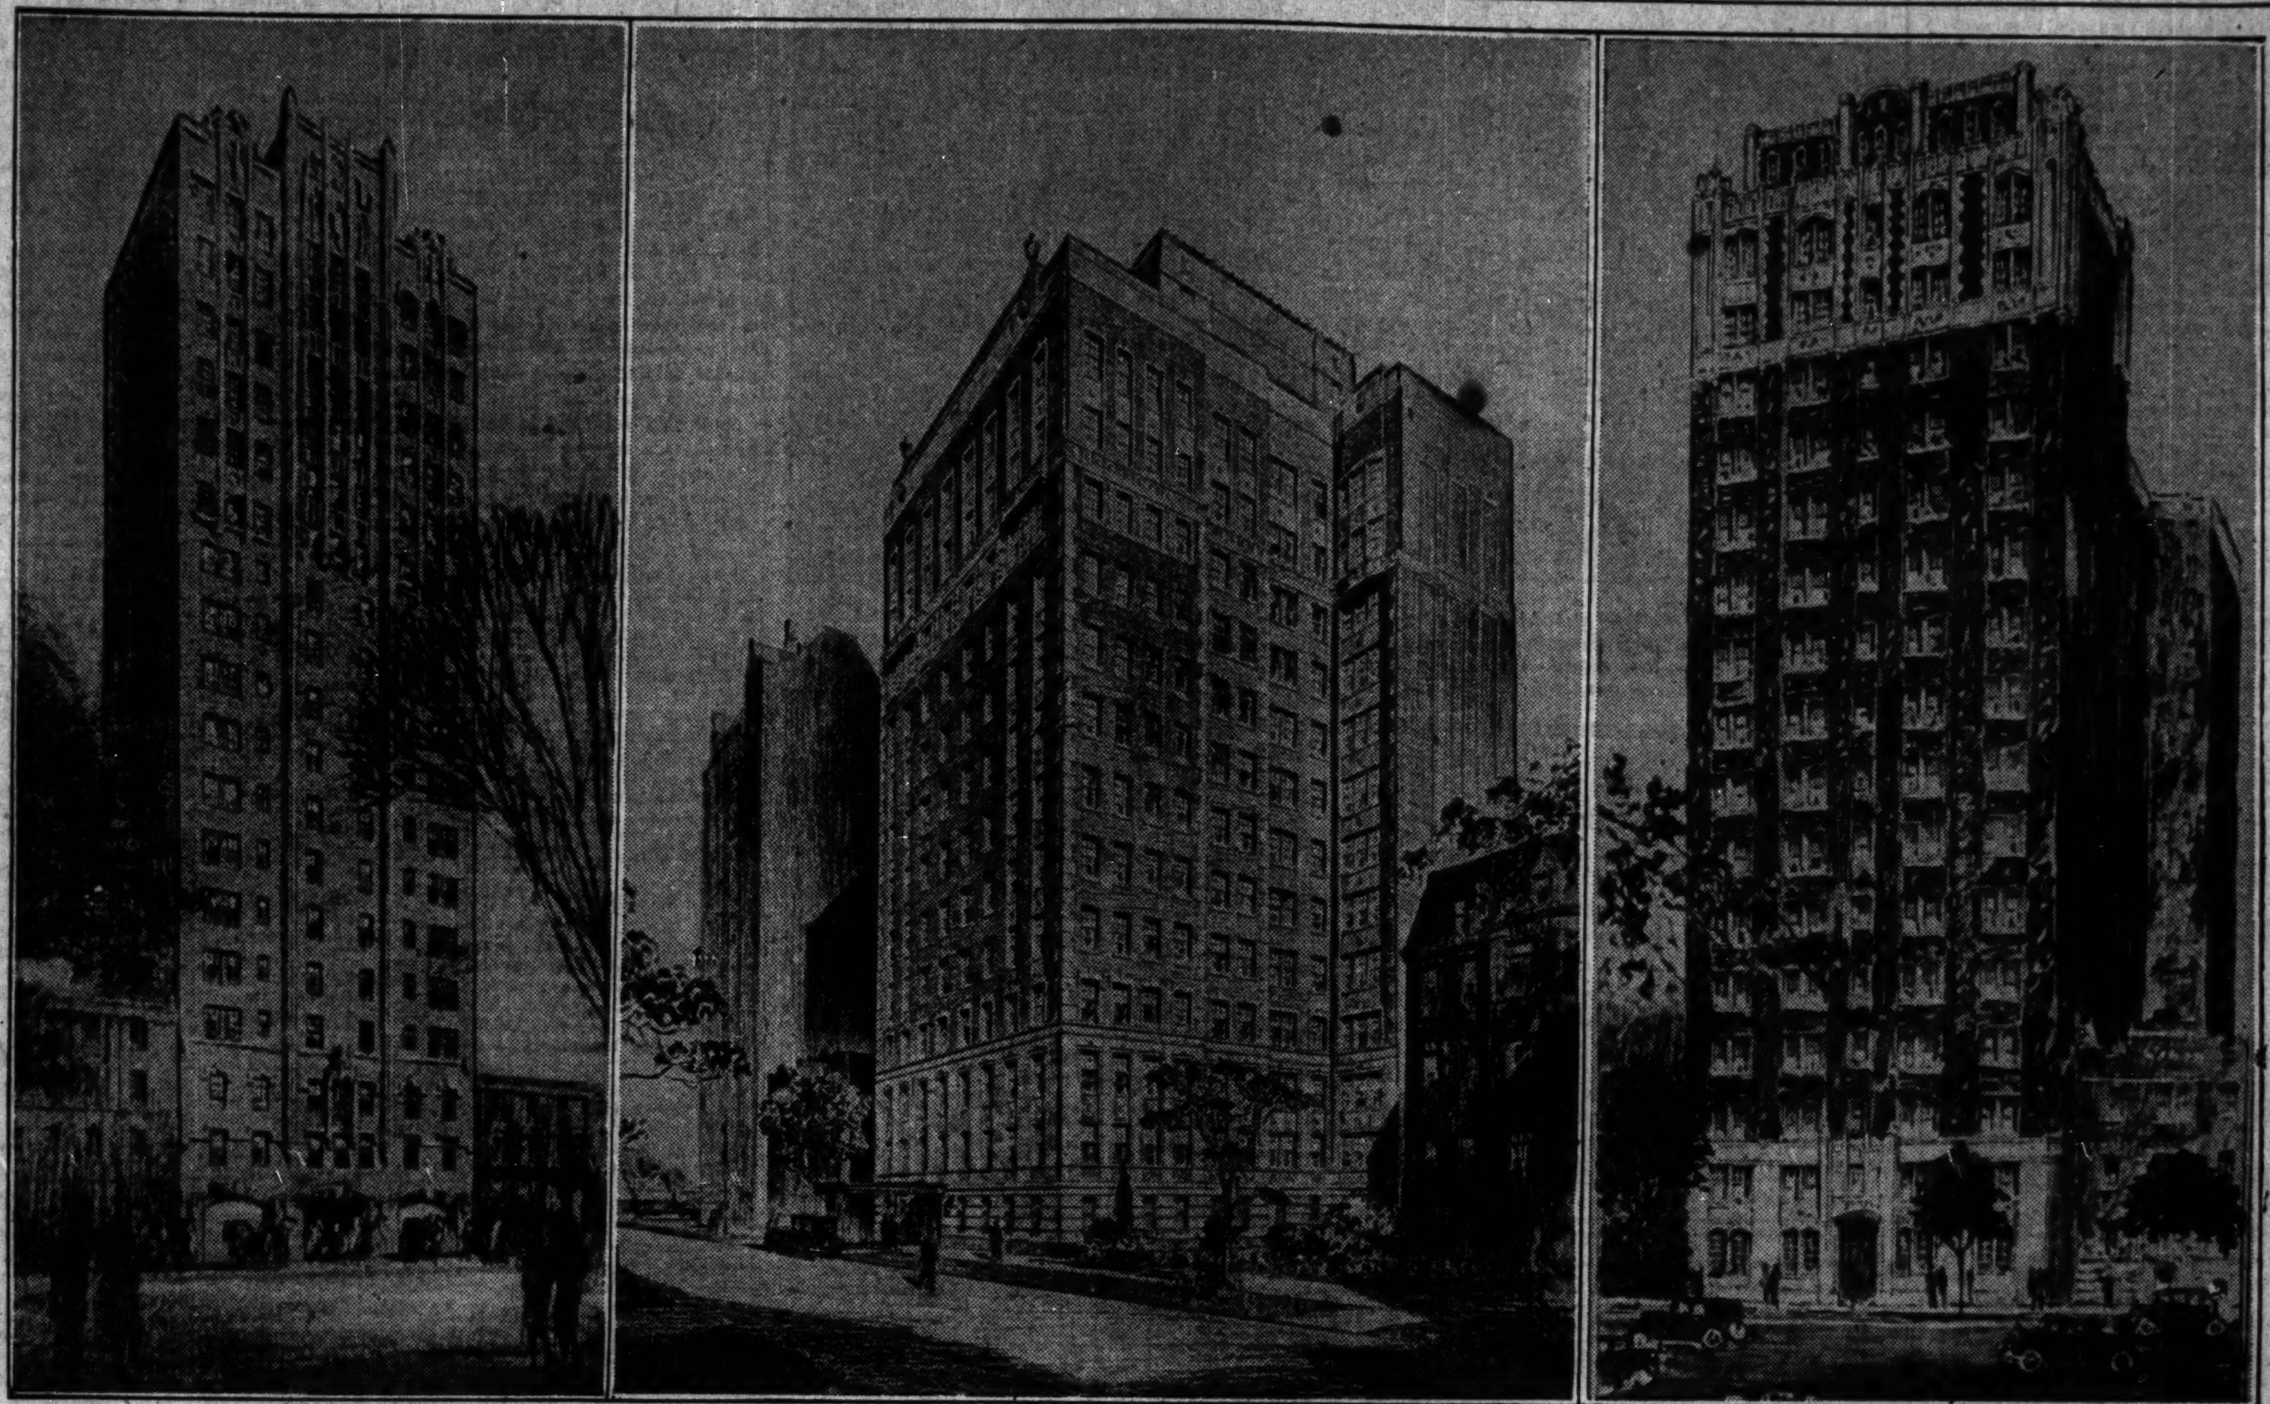
The proposed building will front 108 feet on Halsted and 220 on Fulton, and will be one of the first modern structures set back for the future widening of Halsted street. It will have a total floor area of approximately 234,000 square feet. A majority of this space it is expected will be occupied by printers and allied lines. James J. Harrington & Co. are to have the management of the new building.

Mr. Uffendell's plans call for a light colored face brick on the north, east and south walls. The west wall, on the lot line, will be paneled to harmonize with the architectural design. The usual roof tank landscape blemish will be hidden in an attractive tower. Construction will start in August, with the building expected to be completed by May 1, 1929.

Q. R. S. COMPANY LEASES SPACE IN 333 BUILDING

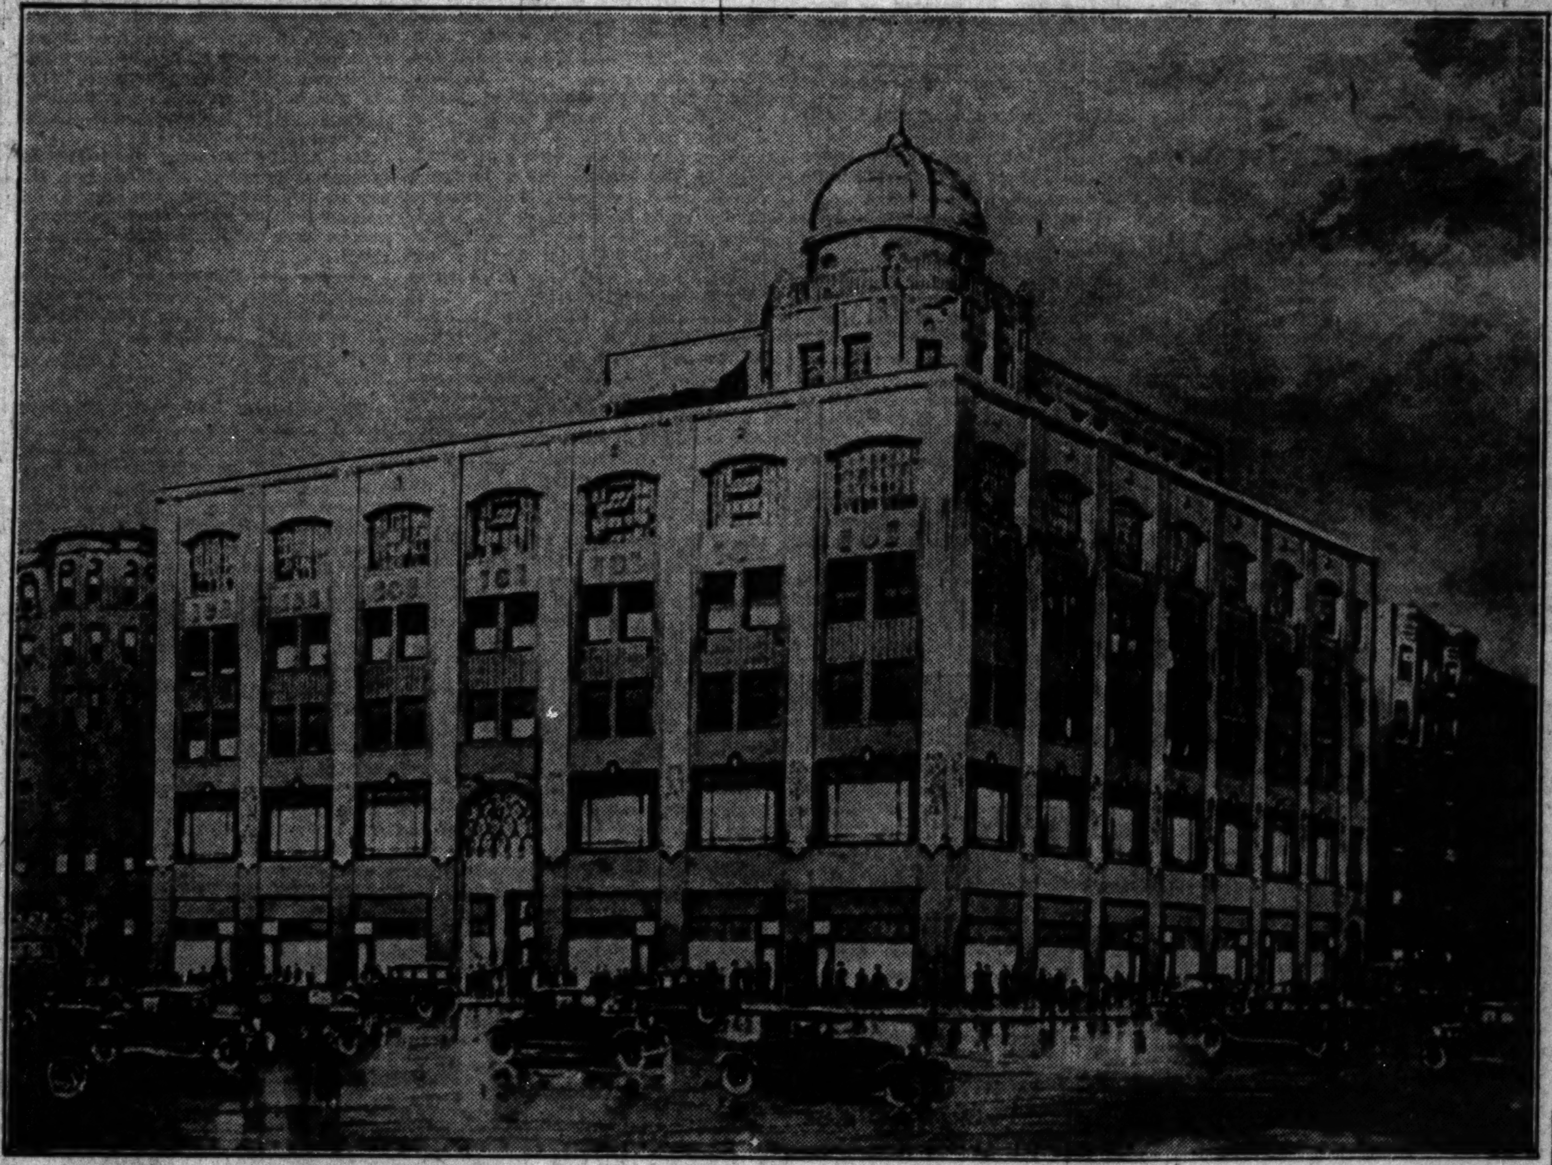
The Q. R. S. company, makers of music rolls, movie cameras, Neon sign tubing, talking machines, etc., has leased space for an undisclosed term in the new 333 North Michigan building and will move its general executive offices from the Kimball building on June 1st. According to a director of the company the move is made because of expanding business bringing about a need for larger quarters.

A TRIO OF CHICAGO'S NEWEST APARTMENT SKYSCRAPERS



The building on your left is an eighteen story apartment building designed by Schmidt, Garden & Erikson, to be erected by the six Huguelet brothers, Eugene, James, Joseph, William, David, and John. Details are given in the adjoining column. The middle building is being erected at 75 East Elm street from plans by McNally & Quinn. B. C. Greengard made the picture. You'll find more about this in another column in this section. Robert S. De Golyer & Co. designed the sixteen story Shorelake shown on your right, which W. C. Bannerman & Co. will erect on the lake shore just south of 74th street. Details are given elsewhere in this section.

UPPER BOUL MICH AND SUPERIOR



A. N. Rebori of Rebori, Wentworth, Dewey & McCormick is architect of the above structure to be erected at the northeast corner of Upper Michigan avenue and Superior street by the Charles A. Chapin estate, which owns the Fine Arts building. Details are given in another column.

STEAMSHIP ROW SPREADS WEST TO WACKER DRIVE

Steamship Row, Chicago's newest grouping of allied interests, which has developed almost overnight along upper Michigan avenue, just south of the boulevard bridge, is to spread westward and include Wacker drive. The Norwegian-America Line Agency, Inc., formerly at 109 North Dearborn street, is the newest trans-Atlantic company to quit the loop for a more atmospheric location overlooking a waterway.

It has leased one of the ground floor stores in the new Mather tower, in Wacker drive, for an undisclosed term, and will move in at once. For the uninformed, we might add that ocean going craft occasionally steam by in the neighboring river, taking Chicago goods to Europe and bringing foreign freight to local docks. J. J. Robinson of Baird & Warner, manager of the Mather tower, represented the lessor, and Carl E. Olin of John R. Magill & Co. was broker for the steamship line.

IRVING BERLIN RENTS SHOP ON UPPER MICHIGAN

Irving Berlin [not the tin-pan alley czar] who at present operates three women's ready-to-wear shops on the north side, has subleased for eighteen years the store at 208 North Michigan avenue, from A. Kroch. It adjoins Mr. Kroch's bookshop. Edward F. Karr, of Willoughby & Co., was only broker.

CRANE COMPANY BUILDS $389,000 FACTORY UNIT

The Crane company is erecting another large unit to its main manufacturing center at 41st and Kedzie. The latest is a two story structure to house its testing and engineering products departments, together with offices for this division. The building will measure 80x500 feet and will cost $389,000. Graham, Anderson, Probst & White are architects.

Postmaster Lueder Buys North Side Flat Building

Postmaster Arthur C. Lueder has bought the nine apartment building at 439-45 Melrose street, lot 87x165, from Benjamin Schneewind for a reported $175,000, through the E. E. Stults Realty company.

WORK TO START TOMORROW ON SHAWNEE CLUB

Work is to start tomorrow for the construction of the new $400,000 home of the Shawnee Country club on the site of the famous old Ouilmette club at the foot of Lake street, Wilmette. This project was told about in detail in this department last fall. It's to be completed in time for a New Year's eve party. D. H. Burnham & Co. are the architects for the structure, which is to contain a glass inclosed swimming pool, a ballroom, restaurant, and all the other necessities of a club. The Shawnee club was formed by the merging of the Ouilmette and Century clubs and its roll is limited to 800 members. J. B. French & Co. are builders.

New 16 Story Hostelry for South Shore

Announcement is made that the Bannerman Hotels, Inc., a subsidiary of W. C. Bannerman & Co., will erect shortly the first unit of the extensive chain of hotels which it proposes to build and operate as told about in this department some time ago. The first of this group will be called the Shorelake and it will be put up back of South Shore drive at 7443 and the lake.

It will face on the lake and eventually on the boulevard, which will form a part of the new system proposed by the south park.

Anyhow, the Shorelake will be sixteen stories high and will contain 180 apartments divided into one, two, and three room suites. A hundred of the apartments will be furnished and all will have kitchenettes in the approved fashion of the new type of hostelry.

The enthusiastic promoters assert that eighty-five per cent of the apartments in the structure will have a view either of the lake or the South Shore Country club. The first floor will contain the lobby, a lounge, dining rooms, and the office where the rent man makes his headquarters. Also there's to be a swimming pool of regulation size which will be operated by Norman Ross.

All the apartments will have mechanical refrigeration, forced ventilation in the kitchens, cross ventilation in the bedrooms and other features which will make living pleasant for the occupants. The windows are to have the new type of glass which permits the ultra violet rays of the sun to enter and they say these ultra violet rays are great little curers provided one has anything to cure.

Robert De Golyer designed the Shorelake which is to be faced with variegated red brick trimmed with white terra cotta. It's to occupy a lot 50x200 feet and when completed it's said will represent an investment of $1,200,000. It is stated work will start sometime next fall with completion scheduled for the spring of 1929.

W. C. Bannerman & Co. also have plans under way for the construction of a hotel in Edgewater to represent an investment of $700,000; one in the Lake View district to cost $750,000; one in the Lincoln park section to cost $1,000,000, and one in Hyde Park to cost $650,000.

The firm now operates the Lincoln Park West, the Belmont Harbor, the Commodore, the Kenmore Beach, and the Nautilus, all on the north shore.

REALTORS' GOLF CONTEST TO BE HELD JUNE 6TH

Realtors will hold their annual golfing contest this year ahead of the regular Chicago Real Estate board outing. It was announced last night that it will be at Glen Acres Golf club, near Glen View, on June 7. This year more prizes will be offered for low net scores and fewer awards for low gross.

LEGAL TANGLE HIDES FUTURE OF AUDITORIUM

New Building Plans Off for Present.

BY PHILIP HAMPSON.

What is to be the fate of the Auditorium hotel and theater—a topic long discussed in realty circles—remains more uncertain than ever following the recent refusal of the United States Supreme court to take any hand in the litigation between the owners of the land and the Auditorium association which operates the property under a 198 year lease.

And so glowing descriptions of a $15,000,000 improvement for the site will have to mean nothing until such time as the various lawyers, who are now getting out their legal weapons for a fresh assault on each other, declare an armistice.

Here is the lay of the land so far as the battle is concerned:

The Henry J. Willing estate, represented by Mr. Willing's son, Mark, owns eighty per cent of the land; the Chapin estate owns ten per cent, with Michigan avenue frontage, and the Sears-Slater interests of Boston own ten per cent, with frontage at the corner of Congress and Wabash.

A 198 Year Lease.

Then the Auditorium association operates the property under a lease running 198 years from 1887, paying rent to the aforementioned estates. The association contends that the present structures on the land are antiquated and cannot be operated at a profit, and it wants to raze them and erect a modern building. One plan was for a huge hotel.

Back in the '80s Chicago was in the midst of an expansion period much like the one in which it now finds itself. It was decided to give the city a theater and a hotel to be unsurpassed by any in the world. The structure was to stand for all time.

The project was to be civic to a large extent, and stock in it was sold partly by popular subscription.

And now we'll let a spokesman for the Willing interests do some explaining.

Clause Stricken Out.

"After the Auditorium project was completed it did not become the financial success expected of it. When financial difficulties developed members of the association came to Henry Willing and told him that because of a clause calling for revaluation of the land at 6 per cent every ten years it was impossible for them to float a second mortgage to tide them over.

"Because the improvement was civic in its scope, Mr. Willing consented to strike out this clause. The estate makes no objection to the building of a modern structure but it does feel there ought to be revaluation of the land which would give it a return commensurate with the present value of the fee."

It is understood the original lease called for the payment of approximately $21,000 annually. When the revaluation clause was struck out the rental was raised to $30,000. Now the estate feels that it should receive $250,000 to $300,000 in accordance with revaluation every ten years at six per cent and the more so as the entire project is losing its civic aspect with the forthcoming removal in 1929 of the Civic Opera company to its new home on Wacker drive.

Clinch Declines to Talk.

Floyd Clinch, president of the Auditorium association, declined to make any comment on the matter. However, from persons connected with the organization, it was learned that the association's position is that inasmuch as, with the exception of possibly one year, no dividends have been paid the stockholders feel that they should not be taxed with the expense of putting up a new building and paying increased rent when they have received nothing in the past.

The association is seeking by court action to compel the Willing estate to permit the razing of the Auditorium and the construction of a new improvement. The case has been fought in the federal court here before Judge Wilkerson and was taken to the Supreme court.

Here is the comment of Homer H. Cooper of Hamlin, Topliff & Cooper on the Supreme court's decision:

"Study of the opinion of the Supreme court of the United States in the case brought by the Auditorium association against Mark S. Willing and others of its landlords, decided adversely to the association May 21, reveals that the first reports to the effect that the Supreme court had ordered the case to the Circuit court of Cook county were erroneous. The Supreme court decided that the bill of complaint filed by the association failed entirely to present any cause for action, thereby ending the litigation as at present standing."

Fisher Gives Side.

Walter L. Fisher of Fisher, Boyden, Kales & Bell, representing the association, gives his understanding of the decision:

"My understanding of the opinion of the Supreme court and of the practice of the federal courts is that the formal order will reverse the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and will remand the case for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme court. Inasmuch as the Supreme court has held that there was no federal jurisdiction, the case must be remanded to the state court either by the Circuit Court of Appeals or by the United States District court."

And so the matter stands at a deadlock.

There is a romance to spring which makes a strong emotional appeal to the average human being. Men and women living in crowded city haunts set forth with the first mild days of May, adventuring with their families into the suburbs and countrysides.

Often these excursions have a deeper meaning behind them than the mere desire to enjoy the fresh air and woods, the open sky and first wild flowers. There may be, secretly or avowedly, the intention on the part of the family to keep their eyes open for attractive houses; a hope that somewhere along the journey, some appealing home may present itself—a future possibility for their own long dreamed of dwelling.

In the Indian Hills estate section of Wilmette, the eight room home pictured today, stands on a lot 106x208. A home for persons of comfortable circumstances, it is a fascinating composition of light toned face brick and roof of slate. Of particular interest is the dominating chimney which lends strength and beauty to the gracefully rendered exterior.

Is Purely American.

Differing from most homes of the present time, this dwelling claims no allegiance to an European past. It adheres to no period, descends from no specific architectural type; it is a design which is American in its outward simplicity and grace as well as American in its interior layout and planning.

A copper hood above the entrance doorway invites the passing friend, and the floor of the front vestibule is tiled, with a large coat closet directly opposite.

To the left, one reaches the living room and dining room. The living room and hall are finished in soft ivory with soffits to all the arches painted a light green. There are also light green panels over the fireplace.

In the dining room one finds plastered walls of a delicate rose tan with ceiling stippled in blue.

Between the kitchen and the dining room are the breakfast nook and service closet. The kitchen walls and woodwork are ivory, decorated with red, and the flooring is green and ivory rubber tiling.

Arrangement Is Deft.

Observation should be made of the deft placing of the service hall and lavatory so that they may be easily reached from any point of the house. This service hall also connects with stairs to the basement and to the large two car garage. The garage is lighted on three sides and is so designed as to be an integral architectural part of the house.

The lighting fixtures throughout are a handsome combination of copper, steel and brass, unusual and artistic in design.

The master bedroom over the living room has a private bath, two large closets and fireplace of ivory and russet red tile. The bath has tiled floor, and walls in checkerboard tile of rose and ivory. The ceiling is rose and the bedroom walls and woodwork are ivory.

The second bedroom has warm gray walls and woodwork and the third bedroom is finished in soft green walls and woodwork. The bath for these two rooms is a sage green tile with inserts of white tile decorated in red and blue.

Basement Lounging Room.

The two maid's bedrooms, with separate bath, are finished in tan.

One practical and enjoyable feature of the basement is the large lounging room with its rough brick and stone fireplace. The walls are of rough plaster, done in rich cream, the ceiling is rough beamed wood and the floor is of cement tile. There is a toilet adjoining the room.

Insulating Lumber Makes Storm Door of Screen

Panels of insulating lumber can now be installed in the screen doors when fall comes, so as to make them serviceable through the winter as storm doors. Then, when summer returns, the panels may be removed and the screen doors employed again in their original capacity.

Casement Windows Are Effective on Sun Porch

Those intending to build a sun porch on their home this summer can install the effective outswung casement windows, even though the rest of the house has double hung windows. They add to the general appearance of the house, both from the exterior as well as the interior point of view.

Insulated Cellar Storage Ideal for Keeping Foods

An insulated storage place in the basement for canned fruits and vegetables and jellies is one of the best means of protecting them from cold, heat, and moisture. Even uncooked fruit is much better protected in an insulated storage room.

CUTS BUILDING COSTS.

The recent introduction of short length and end matched lumber are two forward movements which have cut the cost of building without reducing the quality.

PLASTERING OF HOME DESERVES MUCH THOUGHT

Poor Workmanship Is Often Costly.

To the home builder with whom construction problems are new problems, enough importance cannot be laid on the selection of a plastering contractor. Nearly 85 per cent of the visible interior of one's home is made of walls and ceilings, and plaster and the effects that go with it can make or mar every home interior, whether it be simple or costly.

Just because a contractor gives a lower bid than any other contractor does not mean that he should be accepted for that merit alone. One should find out or know in advance all the particulars concerning him, his reputation, etc.

For, no matter how expensive your wall finish, or how attractive, whatever it is—textured finish, paint, wallpaper, or fabric—none of these can cover a poor plastering job. Cracks and streaks, discoloration, and falling plaster all come in the wake of poor plastering.

Older than Pyramids.

Plastering is older than the pyramids. Its art dates some 5,000 years ago!

The work of the ancients was not subject to the vibration and jarring which much of our modern work is, and, furthermore, it was done in a much more leisurely fashion.

There are two types of lath plaster bases—wood and metal lath manufactured from steel sheets.

The plaster crack is caused for a variety of reasons—a "skinned" plastering job, the warping or buckling of the plaster base, or undue settlement or shrinkage of the timbers in the building.

The home owner does not need to face any of these situations. He should be assured by his builder or architect that the home has ample foundations and is well braced and heavily constructed.

Dangers Are Eliminated.

By the used metal lath as a plaster base the warping or buckling danger is eliminated. If there should be a settlement or timber shrinkage metal lath assists greatly in withstanding this condition. A full thickness of plaster over metal lath costs more in the beginning, but this original cost is offset by protection against future dangers.

As for falling plaster, this is usually an aggravated cracking condition which is caused by similar constructional faults. And metal lath again can be considered as a protection against this condition.

Metal lath also aids materially in making the house fire resistive.

Something like two minutes of each day in a year some home catches fire. Not to mention lives lost, the residence property loss annually is around $80,000,000 or $90,000,000. By building fire safety into the interior of a residence, many fire losses would be prevented, as the greater number of all fires start inside the building.

One Hour Fire Rating.

The Underwriters Laboratories, testing materials for insurance companies, have awarded a one hour fire rating to ordinary lumber construction with ¾ inch hard plaster and metal lathing ceilings and on both sides of partitions. This means that if the fire should start in the basement or kitchen it would take the fire more than an hour to break through to other floors or through the partitions into another room.

Considering these advantages accruing from the use of metal lath, its rapidly increasing use by small home owners as well as large is not surprising.

STAIRS WHICH DISAPPEAR ADD TO ATTIC UTILITY

Provision for future rooms in the attic provides against future shortage of space. There are a number of excellent disappearing types of stairways now available which can be easily installed and which are not expensive.

Families that seem stationary in size often find themselves unexpectedly enlarged. An aged relative is taken into the household. Or some uncle or aunt comes to town and wants a home. Or perhaps it becomes advisable for financial reasons to take a boarder.

If the attic is so planned that it can be easily finished off, the problem of extra space is solved without being forced to the expense of adding an extra wing on the house.

Gas Fired Furnace Takes Over Job of Stove of Old

A gas fired furnace which takes over the rôle of the stove is now an actuality in the small home or bungalow.

There is a special stove or heater with a casing around it. Cool air enters at the bottom and goes out at the top of the room. No ashes! No trouble!

Here's a Garbage Can That Is Placed in the Ground

Place your refuse in the ground—another type of refuse disposal now on the market. It is a container of galvanized iron, insulated and placed in the ground. The cover can be lifted by merely touching a lever with the foot. It closes when the foot is removed.

WALL MIRROR POPULAR.

The wall mirror with console cabinet is popular now for the dining room.

Ideal When the Living Room Is at the Rear.

There seems at the present time to be a revival of interest in the picturesque wall or fence around the house.

For generations in this country we have been landscaping our gardens and lawns and leaving them open to the view of the passerby. The average house, sitting midway in a long, narrow lot, has its lawn stretching to the street, its living room facing the front, and its dining room and kitchen either at the side or the rear.

Now, however, the vogue is for the living room at the rear, overlooking a landscaped area, which should be more or less private. The chances are that the homes will be built rather closely on each side of the moderate priced house in the city or suburban community, and seclusion from the back of other homes, perhaps not so attractively landscaped, is imperative.

When one thinks of an enclosure for a home the New England stone wall comes first to mind. But unless one happens to live in a region where field stone is plentiful, and accordingly not expensive, the stone wall is not for general use.

Reasons for Fences.

It may be broadly stated that a fence or wall has two major "raisons d'etre," or excuses for existence.

The first is to afford privacy and screen the home site from the eyes of passersby.

The second is for decorative purposes.

It must meet one or the other of these requirements if it is to be a legitimate feature of the home exterior.

Wooden fences always have been and probably always will be popular. There are the plain wooden fences of heavy timbers whose purpose is distinctly utilitarian. And as they possess a certain dignity of design, they are not unornamental.

Then there are the woven wooden fences with special wrought iron hinges. These fences, artistic and reminiscent of French countrysides, where they have been used for centuries, are practical in the extreme. Split live chestnut saplings are bound with wire which is rustproof, and there is practically no upkeep expense in connection with these fences. They come in sections and are easily erected, and quaint gates are manufactured to match.

Pergolas of Steel.

Pergolas of steel are also being manufactured for use for trellises, tennis shelters, and garden features. No decay or rot affects them, despite the moisture and shade of the foliage they support.

For the Spanish or Italian house which is a distinct type there should be a correspondingly distinct type of wall. Roughened stucco walls with the surface whitewashed are suitable.

The brick wall, in use for centuries, might well be considered a wall everlasting. With the now popular whitewashed common brick homes, whitewashed common brick walls, which soon take on a weathered, interesting look, are harmonious and appropriate.

Sometimes a fence is employed to heighten a vista and add to the particular beauties of the house setting. This fence is often a wood fence with alternate open panels.

Where a home owner wishes merely to have a wall which suggests the boundary lines of his land it does not need to be very sturdy or very tall.

A fascinating subject, this of fences and walls around one's home. A subject, too, which shows signs of interesting a growing number of home owners each year.

CHEAP COTTAGE ADDS TO THE JOYS OF YOUR VACATION

Planning to go away for the week ends this summer—or perhaps for a few weeks' vacation? If so, you may be interested in inexpensive summer cottages and the fact that they can be built for low cost from insulating lumber material now on the market.

By applying the broad sheets of this building board to the exterior and interior of wooden studding, one has a weather proof cottage. If desired the exterior may be painted or stuccoed, though the material may be used in its natural condition.

Skillful Painter, Good Paint Make an Unbeatable Team

A skillful painter and good paint are great partners when it comes to putting a paint film on your house—one which is tough, durable, weatherproof and proof also against cracking and scaling.

Bit of Forged Ironware Provides Artistic Touch

A bit of forged iron hardware in the home gives a touch of old world romance, a suggestion of old time artisanship, which is unfailingly delightful.

TOOLS FOR GARDENING.

There are special tools for each kind of gardening operation, and as special tools save time in automobile repairing, so in garden work they lighten and speed it up and are well worth the investment.

Answers to Questions on Home Owning

Regarding Plumbing.

Dear Mrs. Bargelt: I have had a number of bids on the plumbing job for the house I am going to build. One of them is much cheaper than the others. There are two medium priced bids and one that is quite high. I read warnings everywhere against taking the cheapest bid given. Just what could go wrong if I took the cut price bid? D. A.

Ans.: You might get inferior plumbing. The piping might be too thin, the joints not caulked up tight, or the pipes pitched improperly to drain. Or again the enamel finish on your fixtures could be rough and uneven and you could be prepared for leaks, spotted decorations, and frequent calls, even, for the plumber to rod out stopped piping. Plumbing is a mighty important part of house building. If you can possibly afford it you had better take one of the medium priced bids anyway—that is unless you are very sure of the man who makes you the cheapest bid. When your house is finished is the time you want to start enjoying it—not start worrying over it.

Painting Wall Paper.

Dear Mrs. Bargelt: Is it possible to paint wall paper? I would like to paint the walls of a room a different shade this spring and wonder if it is advisable painting over the old wallpaper? T. C.

Answer—One can never be sure that the weight of the coats of paint might not prove too great and cause the paper to strip from the wall. If one wanted to be sure of a satisfactory painting job it would be better to remove the paper altogether. Hot water, freely applied, makes the loosened wall paper easy to remove, and the walls can then be painted.

BATHROOM, UGLY DUCKLING OF OLD, IN SWAN'S ROLE

Beauty and Convenience Replace Drabness.

BY HOMER GRANT.

Sometimes it seems as if the modern bathroom had been touched by a wizard's wand, so completely has it been transformed from a state of drabness to the show place of the home. A few years ago and it was no more regarded than the ill-fated stepchild of the fairy tale story.

Today its plumbing is perfected, its technique a marvel of efficiency, and the array of bathroom fixtures and features on the market cater triumphantly to its usefulness, sanitation and beauty.

In the building of the new house, however, the inexperienced home owner too often lets the plumbing contract go over without sufficiently detailed specifications.

Naturally, as in all lines of building and equipment, there are many too-cheap articles on the market which can be substituted for the better ones. And certainly in the bathroom, which is one of the busiest rooms in the house, one wants the exposed fixtures as well as the hidden plumbing to be of substantial, excellent grade; as good a grade as can possibly be afforded.

Specify Type of Piping.

For this reason the home builder will find it to his interest to specify by name and description just what type of piping he wants, what sort of lavatory, tub, faucets, shutoff, soap trays, cabinet, clothes hooks, etc.

Otherwise he may find himself the possessor of a much cheaper grade than he anticipated.

Of course he can give the plumber a little latitude by adding after the detailed specifications "just as good." In this way the plumber has a wider choice.

The selection of the plumber is almost, if not quite, as important as the selection of the materials to be installed. For he must not only be competent and reliable, but honest if the installations are to be satisfactory.

Considerable judgment and skill must be exercised by the plumber and upon his integrity depends the home owner's guarantee for the excellence and fitness of those vitally important "hidden parts."

Brass or Wrought Iron.

The need of good water piping cannot be overemphasized. Pipings should be of brass or wrought iron of the best grade that there may be no danger of corrosion.

Another point is the concealed bathroom construction which should not be overloked. That is the proper framing of the bathroom when the house is under construction. The floor beams must be firm enough to allow concrete to be used and strong enough to carry the weight of the bathroom fixtures, tiling, perhaps, and 500 or 600 pounds of water in the tub.

The leading thought in bathroom decoration is color. Fixtures even are bright, and lavatories are seen in enameled iron or vitreous china in soft greens and blues, lavender and old ivory.

Shower curtains can be installed in charming array of colors, water proof of course, rivaling in attractiveness and durability, the other curtainings of the home.

Tinted Marble Walls.

The bathroom walls may range from tinted marble and glazed canvas to tile or tile board or painted and enameled walls. The wainscots may be of tile, paneled wood, colored cement. The flooring possibilities are many, among them mosaic tile or colorful marble, tile or rubber tile, composition flooring of various kinds and linoleum in a wealth of shadings and design.

Nor should there be any stinting in the supply of electrical outlets, for lighting and conveniences. This factor of adequate electric wiring is one which most people realize fully at the present time.

The position and type of the bathtub should be given due consideration. Probably its ideal position is against one wall, and with the two ends built into the adjacent walls. Certainly the old style tub with legs and standing away from the wall has lost its popularity except where expense must be watched at every point and every possible economy practiced. In the same degree the pedestal lavatory has come to be accepted as most desirable as against the old wall type.

Helps Sell House.

Many a house has been sold through the sheer delight of the woman who first inspected it and became enthused over the conveniences and charm of the bathroom. Money spent in this room means money enjoyed by some member of the family every hour out of 18 hours during the day and night.

The design of the bathroom, its window placement and fixture placement are also important but these features will be discussed at a later time.

DEVISE A FAUCET WHICH, IT'S SAID, REDUCES LEAKS

Any guarantee to the housewife against a leaking faucet is welcome as many women have experiences with faucets which leak and require frequent attention.

Sometimes, where the hot water is kept near to the boiling point for any length of time, this same hot water, along with sand and other debris, is swept along through the water mains, becomes lodged in the faucet valves and destroying the washers, causes leaks. These leaks must be stopped at once or the valve seat becomes damaged.

Faucets may now be obtained, which, it is claimed, solve the difficulty. These faucets have a standardized working unit which can be removed from the faucet for a leak repair as easily as one removes a burned out electric bulb from its socket.

Another feature of this new type of faucet is the fact that the seat is replaceable—as is the washer. This seat in the form of a little metal cap can be taken off and replaced with a new one in a few minutes. The standardized units fit any fixture and are all interchangeable with a similar unit of the self closing type.

METAL ADJUSTER HOLDS CASEMENT OPEN AT ANGLE

Casement adjusters make it possible to hold your casement window open at any angle. Made of solid brass or galvanized steel or iron, the tubular mechanism operates silently with a minimum of physical effort. If the wind is heavy the mechanism will adjust enough to prevent broken window panes. Screens can be used with this adjustor and the window may be manipulated without disturbing the screen.

New Plastic Paints in Use for Textured Walls

With the renaissance of textured walls in the modern period homes, the new plastic paints are playing an interesting part in the textures and finishes which they make possible. Their color combinations are many, their textures varied in the extreme. Application is a simple matter and the cost is not high.

URGES CAUTION IN GIVING CASH TO MINE RELIEF

Green Warns of Radical Activity in Fields.

BY THOMAS WREN.

WILLIAM GREEN.
[H. & E. Photo.]

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor has sent out a warning to associated labor organizations not to contribute any money to the so called miners' relief committee which has been soliciting donations under the name of the Ohio-Pennsylvania committee.

Mr. Green said the committee has no standing with the organized labor movement or with the miners' organization. He pointed out that the executive council of the American Federation of Labor has been informed the so-called relief committee is a self-constituted body and is communistic in character.

Get Communist Support.

"In all the official appeals of the executive council of the federation for contributions to assist the United Mine Workers who are on strike in western and central Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia and elsewhere, you are requested to send all contributions to Secretary Frank Morrison of the A. F. of L.," Mr. Green advises.

"None of the funds collected by the so-called Ohio-Pennsylvania relief committee have been turned over to the agencies created by the United Mine Workers of America for the distribution of relief.

Officials of the Cook County Wage Earners' league, the organization which is supposed to represent wage earners in the political field, have started to outline plans for the coming fall election.

Candidates Take Count.

At the April primary the league endorsed all the America First candidates, most of whom hit the canvass with one of those dull and resounding thuds. The Wage Earners' league is the white elephant left by the late William Quesse, founder of the Flat Janitors' union.

With the election of Mayor Thompson the directors of the league became dominant factors in controlling some of the strongest units in the local labor movement. Several of these directors, it may be said, just muscled their way into control of the unions they are said to represent. One of the directors is a former bartender while another one is a former member of the police department.

To date the league, it is said, has been used as a vehicle for its officialdom to procure high salaried political jobs at the expense of the union members they are said to represent.

PARKER A. JENKS JR.

Parker A. Jenks Jr., son of the late Parker A. Jenks, for thirty-seven years a loop haberdasher, believing selling lots or houses would be more intriguing than purveying pants and pajamas, has sold out his business at 138 North La Salle and joined the sales force of the Metropolitan Realty company in the capacity of general sales manager. By a coincidence Mr Jenks will not have to leave the building to make his change, as both haberdasher shop and realty office are in the same structure, the Metropolitan.

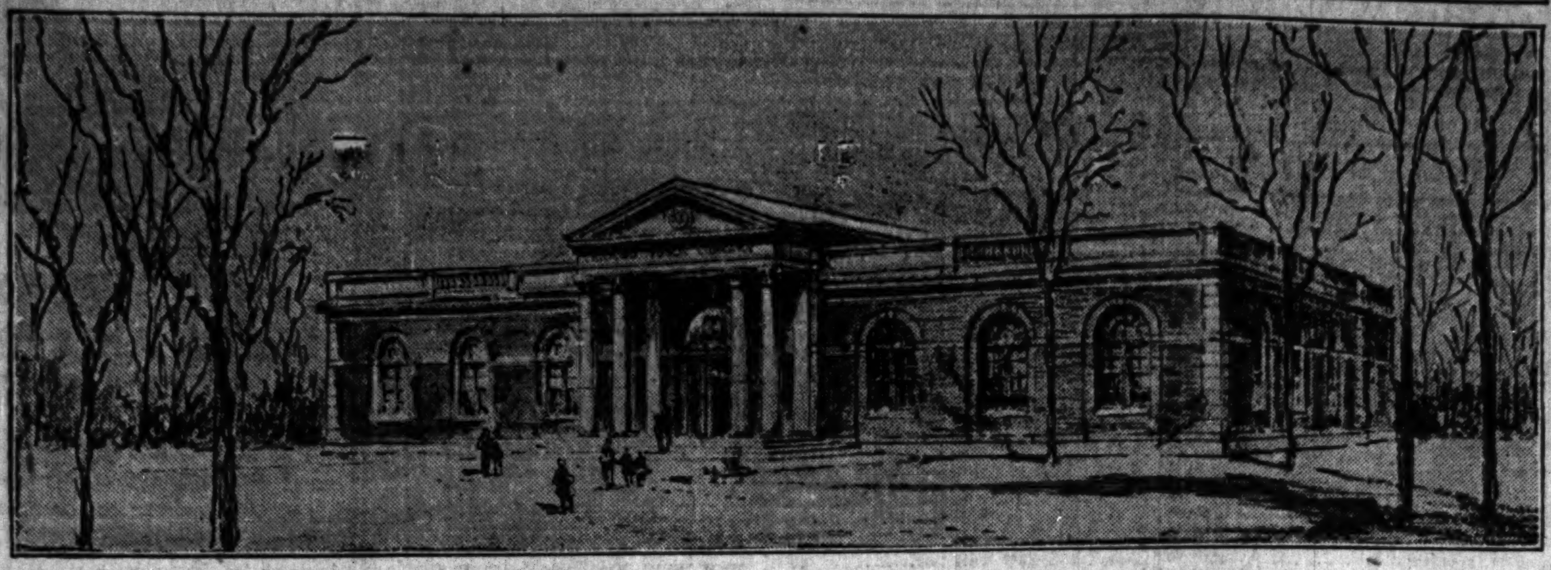
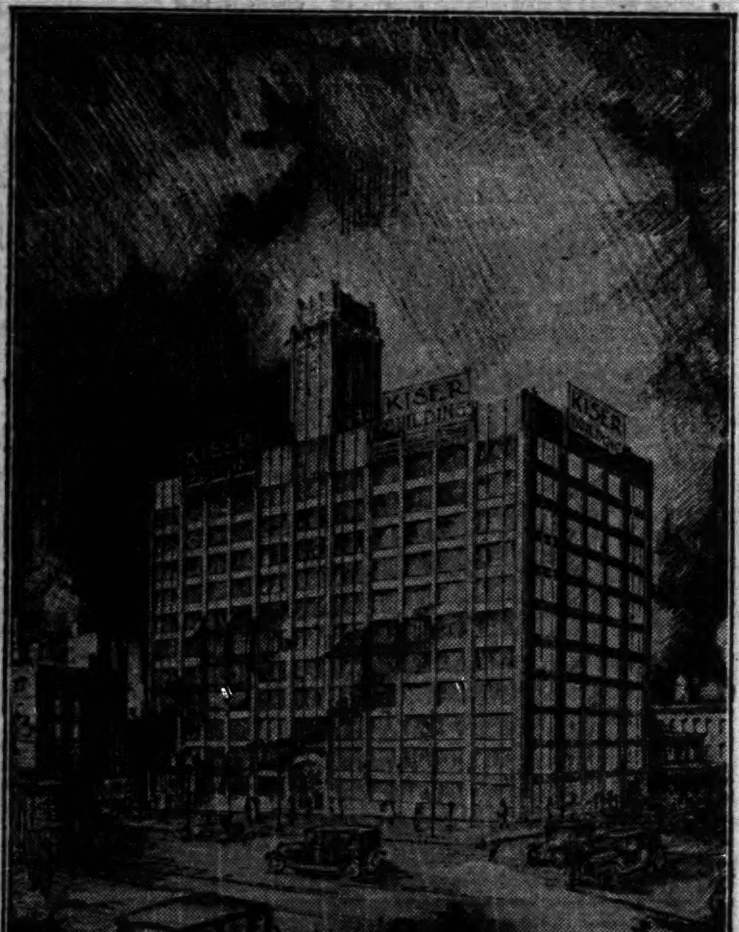
BRANCH LIBRARY FOR HOLDEN PARK, AUSTIN



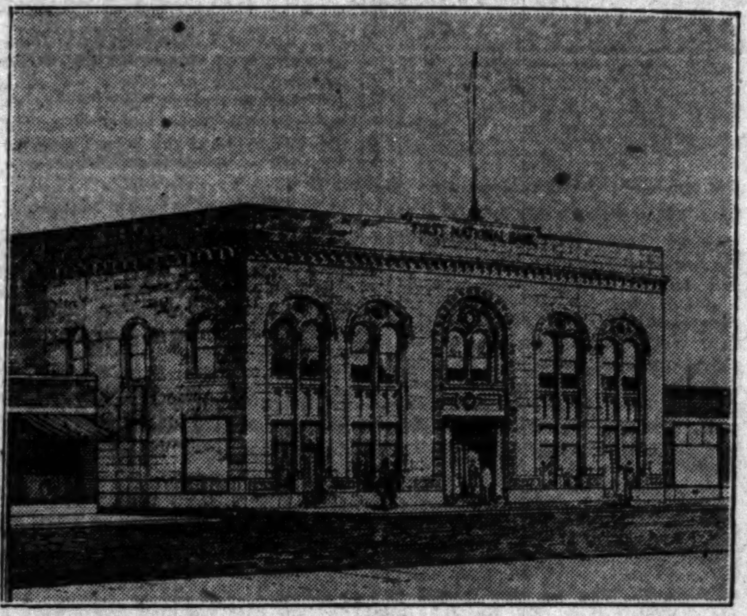
Picture of the accepted design for a branch of the public library to be erected in Holden park, Austin, from plans by Alfred S. Alschuler, Inc. The structure is to contain two reading rooms, two smaller reference rooms, a children's story hour room, and a mezzanine floor. It will have an initial capacity of 24,000 books. It will harmonize in design and material with the community house now under construction in the same square.

FOR WEST SIDE PRINTERS



W. Gibbons Uffendell designed the above twelve story Kiser building (yes you'll probably count only eleven stories, but since O. M. Grimsgaard made this picture another floor has been added) to be rented to printers. It's to be built at the southwest corner of Halsted and Fulton by J. W. Kiser of New York City at a cost of $750,000. Details are given on page 1 of this section.

MOVIE ROLES TO ROLLS OF BILLS



Here is how the Village theater of Wilmette, formerly the town cinema, will look after it has been reconstructed into the First National Bank of Wilmette. Hamilton, Fellows & Hamilton are the architects. It is estimated the cost will be $100,000.

OLD FASHIONED FLAT BUILDING FOR GOLD COAST

We nominate for the hall of fame, as they say in some of our high brow magazines, the building which is now under construction at 73 East Elm street—the reasons being that here is a structure for old fashioned persons who like to rent a flat of moderate size with a real kitchen instead of a trick box and who like to have their own furniture.

In view of the foregoing one may deduce that the above building is neither a coöperative apartment building nor a kitchenette apartment hotel and the deduction is correct. There are to be twenty-four apartments of four rooms and a like number of five room flats.

None of the apartments will have maid's rooms but the rear portion of the lower two stories will be set aside for domestics' chambers which may be rented by the tenants. This, so it's said, is an arrangement popular in Park avenue, New York, which means that the denizens of this far off part of the country ought to be properly receptive.

McNally & Quinn designed the structure which is being erected for the 73 East Elm Building corporation. The architecture is a modern adaptation of the Italian renaissance.

A handsome lounge done in marble, walnut and other components of the de luxe establishment will be located on the ground floor. All the apartments will be equipped with that bane of the iceman, mechanical refrigeration, and there will be the other customary conveniences.

It is stated the investment will be $1,250,000. Completion is scheduled for Jan. 1, 1929. W. F. Mayer of 10 South La Salle street is president of the building corporation. Financing is by the Equitable Bond and Mortgage company.

CLAIMS NEW RECORD IN ERECTING "1430" LAKE SHORE DRIVE

B. R. Klehamp, supervising architect for W. C. Bannerman & Co., writes the following letter to this department:

"A couple of weeks ago the writer noticed a news item in your section covering the record made by structural steel contractors and erectors in connection with a couple of loop buildings. It is not my intention to open up a discussion, but merely to supply you with up to the minute news.

"Our twenty-five story building at 1430 Lake Shore drive, designed to have a structural steel frame, was erected in thirty-one days from base plates to the penthouse. As you know, this amounts to five and six-tenths elapsed weeks and is unquestionably a record that surpasses any previous performances that have come to my knowledge.

"W. C. Bannerman & Co. were the builders, Duffin Iron company, structural steel fabricators, and Oscar Daniels company, erecting contractors."

TURN WILMETTE PLAYHOUSE INTO BANK STRUCTURE

Bankers' New Home to Cost $100,000.

Bank notes are to replace movie fans in the structure at 1150 Wilmette avenue, Wilmette, which is being reconstructed to provide a home for the First National Bank of Wilmette. For years the site was occupied by the Village theater, which was erected largely at the expense of wealthy residents of the suburb to provide some amusement for their neighbors who were unable to get into Chicago. The advent of large cinemas along the north shore forced the Village theater to close last winter.

About $100,000 is being expended by the bank on the reconstruction and when the work is finished the bank's quarters will bear no resemblance to the old movie building.

Architects Hamilton, Fellows & Wilkinson designed the new home for dollars in the Italian Romanesque style. The front elevation will be of terra cotta. There's to be a large banking room, without columns and lighted by skylight. And there will be a safety deposit vault where Wilmette folk may keep their stocks and bonds.

Officers of the institution say their new home will be one of the most attractive banks on the north shore. It's to be ready for occupancy early in the fall.

CHAPIN ESTATE PUTTING UP BOUL MICH ART CENTER

Structure Will Have 350 Seat Auditorium.

Wreckers are now clearing the site for the five story and basement art center which the estate of Charles A. Chapin, owner of the Fine Arts building and other loop property, is erecting at the northeast corner of Michigan avenue and Superior street. This improvement, which was first mentioned in this department some weeks ago, will prove an important addition to the Boul Mich's ever increasing number of exclusive shops.

The new structure was designed especially to provide space for jewel workers, painters, interior decorators, workers in fabrics, objects of art dealers, etc. And there will be a number of display rooms and studios.

The entire ground floor will be used for shops, twenty having entrances both from the street and from an arcade which will traverse the structure. Each shop will be treated in modern design, expressive of the wares on sale, and each will be different from the other.

On the second floor there will be shops and a hall seating 350, which may be used for musicales, lectures, club meetings, etc. The third and fourth floors will have their floors deadened so that musicians can dispense their products without fear of reprisals. And the top floor will have skylights to meet the light needs of artists and sculptors. On the roof will be a bungalow which it is understood will be occupied by one of the Chapins.

A. N. Rebori of Rebori, Wentworth, Dewey & McCormick, Inc., designed the art center which is to be of Indiana limestone. A feature is to be a sysetem of exterior lighting. Luminous bowls will be placed in the base of each pier at the second floor to throw a vertical shaft of light at night. The idea is to emphasize the perpendicular lines of the exterior without interfering with the brilliant window lighting of the shops.

The site fronts 121 feet on Michigan and 130 on Superior, and was formerly occupied by the Winston homestead. The Dahl-Stedman company are the contractors. Baird & Warner will be the renting agents. Occupancy is promised for Oct. 1.

LEASES CICERO BUILDING.

George P. Cullen has leased to Combustioneer, Inc., maker of automatic coal burners, the one story building at 1829-33 South 55th avenue, Cicero, for a term of years at an annual rental of $75,000, and also given an option on 30,000 square feet of vacant adjoining on the north at $22,000. Hart & Whetson were brokers.

Edward J. Lehmann has sold to Grace Aull Sorg Brixley a tract of 143 acres of manufacturing property at Summit. A nominal consideration was given, but stamps on the transfer indicate a consideration of $215,000. The property has a frontage of 2,300 feet on Archer avenue, 3,730 feet on the right of way of the Chicago and Alton, and 2,377 feet on the B. & O. Chicago Terminal road and the Indiana Belt. It is just north of the Elgin Motor company's plant and that of the Corn Products Refining company. It is proposed to divide the land into small industrial sites. J. F. Wallace will have charge of the development.

Charles H. Wallace, chairman of the Chicago plan commission, during the week issued a statement urging the improvement of South Water street to help relieve the city's traffic congestion.

John M. Hoffman conveyed to Tracy C. Drake the property at the northeast corner of 49th and Wentworth, 42x174½ feet of ground, improved with a four story brick building with stores, flats, and hall, for $50,000, subject to $25,000.

The Johnson Chair company and Louis Hanson, manufacturer of barbers' furniture, will erect what, it is said, will be the two largest furniture factories in Chicago, on a tract of thirty acres at the southwest corner of North 44th and North avenues and the tracks of the Chicago and North Western, which they purchased from I. C. Elston of Crawfordsville, Ind., for $100,000. The property will be divided equally. It is stated the two plants will cost about $400,000. The deal was negotiated by Walter Mills of S. B. Mills & Co.

[From painting by Frank A. Werner.]

Schlesinger & Mayer [now Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co.] have had plans drawn by Architect Louis H. Sullivan for a store building at the southeast corner of State and Madison streets to cost $1,000,000. The lower two stories will consist of two story bay window show rooms, making a display of plate glass, framed in statuary bronze work of beautiful design. From this to the top of the cornice the material will be of pure white marble from the Georgia quarries—the same as that used in the Corcoran Art gallery at Washington.

FARM and GARDEN

WINTER KILLED ALFALFA, CLOVER CAUSE SHORTAGE

Farmers Forced to Plant Substitute Crops.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

Set back by the winter killing of alfalfa and clover, growers of legumes, as well as dairymen and fat stock feeders, are faced with a shortage of protein feeds that come from these crops so heavily damaged. Farmers not only lost their seed and labor but they must find emergency crops that will help make up for the loss of the crc. they had expected to harvest from their clover and alfalfa fields. Then, too, they have their work and expense of reseeding the alfalfa and clover fields that were killed out during the winter and spring.

Crop reports indicate that the heaviest damage to clover and alfalfa occurred in the north central states where half the hay acreage in the country is located. The damaged region blankets the sections heavily populated with beef cattle, hogs, dairy cows, and poultry where there is the heaviest demand for protein feeds that come, to a great extent, from legumes.

Agronomists Anxious.

Agronomists are becoming anxious over the situation facing the farmers who are having to plant such crops as soy beans and cow peas to furnish feed for the coming fall and winter and are up against the problem of sowing alfalfa and clover for more permanent crops. The freezing out of alfalfa and clovers was also accompanied by the heaviest winter killing of fall sown wheat that has occurred in many years.

Two-thirds of the winter wheat crop has been abandoned in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky. This has thrown upon the shoulders of farmers the added work of preparing these abandoned acres for other crops, including corn, soy beans, and cow peas.

Extension men of the agricultural colleges in the midwest states are alert to the situation and are intensifying their efforts in keeping up their regular campaigns to increase the legume acreage and to coöperate with the farmers in an effort to get back in clover and alfalfa the acreage that was frozen out during the winter.

In Missouri and Illinois.

A. J. Meyer, director of the extension work at the college of agriculture, University of Missouri, Columbia, says that 30 per cent of the clover and alfalfa in that state was damaged. An extensive campaign is being carried on in Missouri year after year and Mr. Meyer says that the extension forces will continue up to their maximum capacity.

The Illinois crop specialists are upon their toes and are doing all they can to help farmers get legumes planted this season to take the place of the winter killed crops. Fred H. Rankin, assistant dean of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill., says that 35 per cent of the alfalfa and sweet clover in Illinois was damaged by the weather conditions during the winter.

Extension workers and officials of the college of agriculture, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis., are throwing their forces into the big legume campaign now on among the Badger farmers. In that state, as in many others, young alfalfa and clover suffered during the winter. Many acres were so severely damaged that farmers are getting ready to reseed the crops.

Progressive Wisconsin farmers, like the farmers in practically all of the midwest states, are being so thoroughly schooled in the sowing of legumes that many of them know just what to do and are doing it. There are many who do not realize, perhaps, the widespread damage that has been done to legumes and the resulting shortage of protein feeds that must be taken care of through the growing of more clover, alfalfa, soy beans, and similar crops.

Progress Made in Experiments.

Great progress has been made by the experiment stations in testing of the best ways and means of getting good stands of alfalfa. Farmers now know that it is necessary to use limestone to sweeten sour soil, inoculate the seeds before they are sown, and to see that their land contains the right kind of plant foods. In addition investigators and practical farmers are learning that there is a difference in the hardiness of the different varieties of alfalfa.

The unfavorable winter weather has put alfalfa to a test in this part of the country. Some varieties were killed while others pulled through safely. At the Iowa station, for example, Grimm, Cossack, and Canadian Variegated were the only varieties of alfalfa in tests on the agronomy farm to withstand the bad weather during this last winter.

In discussing the test H. D. Hughes, head agronomist of the station at Ames, said that the common domestic and regional strains of alfalfa were practically 100 per cent winter killed. Since no serious winter killing has occurred during the last several years, Mr. Hughes thinks the winter which has just passed was a good test for the different varieties.

He pointed out that for many years Utah grown alfalfa seed has been used in Iowa but the weather conditions were not right to give it a real test. This year, however, the test came and the Utah seed was found wanting; it was winter killed completely at Ames. Of the common strains, Hughes found, the northern were most hardy, although none were anywhere near as satisfactory as the Grimm, Cossack and Canadian Variegated.

He reports also that in the tests sweet clover weathered through the season in good shape, while domestic red clover suffered about sixty per cent damage. None of the imported varieties of red clover stood the test, all being practically 100 per cent winter killed.

Faced with a Shortage.

J. W. Nicolson, a Chicago agronomist, in emphasizing the seriousness of the feed situation that has followed the widespread winter killing of crops, said: "Clover, alfalfa, and wheat are the crops that form the foundation of our home grown protein feeds. With hundreds of thousands of acres of these crops killed out entirely, and with most of the remaining acreage damaged, it looks as if we are faced with a real shortage of protein feeds.

"The winter injury was caused mostly by alternate periods of unseasonably warm weather followed by severe cold. It has not been an uncommon sight this spring in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan to see sweet clover and alfalfa plants heaved completely out of the ground, exposing eight to ten inches of root. Nearly every spring there are sections here and there that have a little spring damage from heaving, but I have never known of such extensive and widespread winter heaving as the midwest has suffered this last winter."

Mr. Nicolson urges farmers to sow alfalfa this season. He says that it is the one crop that can be sown from now until the middle of August to insure the best hay crop for next year. Many state experiment stations—Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, and others—recommend summer planting of alfalfa in preference to spring planting, he finds.

Instead of following the general trend this year, which seems to be to increase the acreage of corn and other cultivated crops, Mr. Nicolson thinks farmers would be wise in sowing five or ten acres of alfalfa in June. Then after wheat or oats have been taken from a field, plow the land immediately and sow more alfalfa between the first and the middle of August, he advises.

Illinois Uses Thousands of Tons of Limestone

J. R. Bent's recent survey of Illinois shows that farmers in this state used more limestone to sweeten their soils last year than in any other previous year except 1925. In 1927 there were 717,615 tons of limestone used in Illinois. This figure was exceeded in the United States only by Illinois' own figure of 800,000 tons in 1925, according to Mr. Bent of the Illinois agricultural association.

The Bent survey shows that eight counties, all of which have farm bureaus, exceeded 20,000 tons each. The tonnage figures for these eight counties are as follows: St. Clair, 36,140; Madison, 26,832; Winnebago, 24,013; Randolph, 22,835; Whitesides, 22,668; Clinton, 21,140; Washington, 20,893, and Monroe, 20,082.

JOE WORRY GIVES SOME HINTS TO GARDEN MAKERS

"Get Busy or You'll Lose a Prize."

"Little Joe Worry" has been out lately picking the flower gardeners he intends to put on his 1928 list. Joe is having a great time visiting gardens entered in The Tribune's home flower garden contest. He has a world of secrets.

LI'L' JOE WORRY

LITTLE JOE WORRY.

In a survey to get a few clients to fuss over, the well known Mr. Worry found some of the contestants logical material to worry about. Like Jack Frost and Santa Claus, Little Joe slips into the gardens and out again when everybody is asleep or away from home. You should hear some of the secrets he has to tell. The garden contest editor is getting daily reports from Joe, who is doing an excellent piece of reportorial work among the hundreds of men, women, and children competing for the $6,000 cash awards offered by The Tribune for the best midsummer flower gardens in the Chicago territory.

Inside Stuff From Joe.

Over the contest editor's shoulder he is daily whispering such innocent secrets as these:

"You know a lot of these gardeners entered in your contest don't realize how good the gardens are going to be this year. I'm terribly worried about these fellows who call themselves old timers at the gardening game. They haven't the slightest idea what fine gardens some of these beginners are making this year. I tell you we're going to have some of the finest baby gardens ever made in one season.

"I know a man up on the north side who thinks that about all he'll have to do this summer is to stick a few seeds and plants in the ground and wait for the judges to come along and give him a prize. That's the kind of fellow I'm worried about.

It's No Laughing Matter.

"Laugh all you want to, it is a serious thing for a man as old as I am to see some of these people loafing along and taking the chance of losing out on a prize. Five hundred dollars isn't to be picked up every day. The cocksureness of some of these fellows may cause them to lose 500 simoleons.

"I try hard to keep from fretting over these contestants, for it really makes no difference to me who wins. But when I see some of these boys and girls out on the west side pulling weeds and petting the flower plants and bushes like they were babies, I'm human enough that I can't keep from being anxious about the innocent gardener who thinks it is a snap to win.

"I know you're busy, but you couldn't spend your time any better than to listen to me for a few minutes and then write a piece for your paper, warning these gardeners that if they expect to get a prize this summer they had better keep the old hoe and sprinkler going. Alibis won't count with the judges.

"So long. Say, wait a minute. You know what I've told you isn't exactly a secret, and I'd really like the contestants to know about it.

Hogs were erratic again on the week-end session, but averaged steady at $9.75, which was also the average the previous Saturday. Light butchers were held off of the market and prime 250 lb averages topped at $9.95, against $10.15 for 225 pounders Friday. Only 3,000 were left at the close. Chicago hog prices have been relatively higher than other western markets all week and with the market closed next Wednesday, traders look for a fair increase in supplies Monday and Tuesday.

Set Record for Month.

The expected happened last week when hog receipts increased to 149,800, the largest in a month, which is usual at this time of year when most farmers are through corn planting. With only one exception since 1920, the June total marketing has been larger than May of the same year. Weights this year at Chicago have been lighter than a year ago, last week's average at 230 lbs, comparing with 244 lbs a year ago. Three months ago hogs in 1928 and 1927 were averaging the same.

Conservative marketing of cattle supplies last week failed to prevent the drastic price cut which carried the week's general average down to $12.95, the lowest since middle of April. Heavy beeves were pounded hardest and sold below yearlings for the first time of the season. Long yearlings reached $14.65 and best heavy steers sold at $14.25. Only 475 head sold at $14.00 and above against 1,567 a week ago. Prevailing quotations on better grades are $4.50@5.00 under the year's peak, while common steers show losses of only 25@50c. Top steers have been up to $15.00 less than a dozen times since early in March.

Lamb Supply Below Normal.

Following some of the largest receipts of the year, with California springers comprising 65 per cent of total offerings, supplies dropped below normal when shipments from the coast state stopped almost completely after the middle of last week. Receipts at 47,900 were second smallest since last July and compare with 77,887 the preceding week, and 78,624 two weeks ago, the largest supplies since January. Prices finished at the highest point since May 1, shorn lambs at $16.85, and native springers at $18.50. California springers last Tuesday reached $18.90.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 17,000 cattle, 53,000 hogs, and 12,000 sheep, against 22,426 cattle, 50,970 hogs, and 13,385 sheep a week ago and a holiday the corresponding day a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 42,000 cattle, 145,000 hogs, and 55,000 sheep, against 49,828 cattle, 141,619 hogs, and 47,702 sheep a year ago.

Canadian Wheat Poolers Will Hold Meet in June

Canadians are making big preparations for the third international wheat pool conference to be held in Canada this year. According to the "Scoop Shovel," a Canadian Coöperative publication, the meeting will be held at Regina, Sask., June 5, 6 and 7.

PRODUCE MARKETS

Strawberries were in larger supply and prices lower. Arrivals were 49 cars, and 40 cars were on track. Klondikes sold at $1.00@3.00, and other varieties $3.00@5.00 per 24 quart cases.

Larger supplies depressed prices for potatoes 5c per 100 lbs on old, and 25@35c per bri on new Louisianas.

Business in butter, eggs and poultry was fair at unchanged prices.

DRY GOODS.

NEW YORK, May 26.—(AP)—Active speculation was evident in the Yokohama raw silk market today but prices were steady here. A number of fair print cloth sales were made with the situation generally quiet. Prices have shown an easier tendency. Exports of coarse yarn cotton were somewhat better, although inquiries for millions of yards failed to materialize into orders. The primary burlap market was slightly firmer and locally the situation was featureless. Woolen piece goods activity was of limited proportions.

Why do we sell at these ridiculously low prices? you ask! We are not crazy! But ask your grocer, painter, hardwareman, shoeman, or clothier, and they tell you that their profit outside of their actual wages is on their shelves. Well, friends, it is the same with us; our year's profit is in these three cars of nursery stock and we are just making this sacrifice to get this from our stock ledger to our bank book. No, not crazy at all, just horse sense. Now this is all off our minds, let us all get to business. We will give you the buy of your life.

LISTEN HERE, FOLKS:
Do you know values? Do you know a real Bargain when you see one?

This is a year in the Seed and Nursery business of general overproduction which occurs, according to statistics, only once in twenty years. Never since the war have prices been so low as right now on Grass Seeds, Bulbs and Nursery Stock; and with the present increase in raw material and the price of labor, they will never be this cheap again.

If you contemplate using any Grass Seed, Bulbs, or Shrubs, buy right now because the market is your way and we will be glad to sell.

Dear Friends and Customers:

It has been a real pleasure to me that you have come to our special sales every Spring and Fall in such great numbers, so that we were often not able to wait on you right away. This has created a number of peddler wagons and fly-by-night stores to open and squat within the radius of a block or so, telling you that theirs is a branch store, just helping us out in the rush, but charging you more and giving you less for your money, while we pay for the advertising. I just want my friends, customers and prospective customers to be informed that we have only one store and have no affiliation with peddler wagons or other stores near here, and that we will be prepared to handle any kind of a rush as fast as you can come and as often as you can come.

The quality of our merchandise cannot be beaten; and I am sure that these very low prices cannot be beaten either, but they will do these four things:
1. Save you a lot of money on your garden purchases.
2. Move our tremendous surplus quickly.
3. Call your attention to the fact that ours is a good house to buy from.
4. Bring in a lot of new friends and flower lovers.
Thanking you so much for your past favors and looking forward to your continued patronage, we remain, sincerely yours,

WRIGLEY DRAWS CIVIC PARABLE FROM HIS CUBS

BY HARPER LEECH.

WILLIAM WRIGLEY JR.

"Of course I am in baseball, primarily because I love it," William Wrigley Jr. said when I talked with him the other day about Chicago's future, Chicago as a money market, and Chicago in the rôle of world's host again, at another and Greater World's Fair, this time in 1933.

So, of course, we talked about the Cubs, just as everybody else is talking about the Cubs. And out of the baseball talk emerged some civic ideas.

"I think baseball is much more than a sport," Mr. Wrigley declared. "In the first place it's the real red blooded American game. It takes quick thinking to play it, it takes quick thinking to enjoy it. It calls for teamwork—and it demands the highest development of individual talent.

Like American business the game is played to win, and a game is nothing until it's won.

"Chicago needs more of the morale and team work of a successful ball team —the spontaneous common action which springs from a community sense and community emotion, something which cannot be supplied by the mere mechanics of organization.

"Here we are growing up like a weed, growing as fast as a weed, and to the jealous east we appear to be a weed. We know that we are on the way to becoming the greatest city in the world, and those who are jealous of Chicago know it too, subconsciously if in no other way.

Diamond Victory Civic Spur.

"It will do us good to realize the jealousies of others, because that will inspire us with the will to win. I have the idea that a winning ball team is no small factor in creating such an esprit de corps in a city, and if the Cubs continue to contribute to that, as they are doing, I will prove my point that good baseball is a prime mover of good business."

Anyhow we know this much, as Mr. Wrigley pointed out—baseball is played very little outside America, and American business is like no other.

When Europe sends deputations over here to find out how we do things, they go home and write reports. When an American reads the report, he gets the impression that the visitors have seen the trees and missed the forest.

Finding Intangible Values.

They get the details but somehow they all miss the intangible something that made the details possible. Even if we cannot ourselves put our fingers right on it and define it exactly, nevertheless we know its there.

Whatever that American something is —most of us will admit that in sport it has flowered as baseball and in business it has flowered into that unique balance of individualism and collectivism we call American business.

In the days of the Columbian exposition of 1893, Chicago certainly had "it." The city was far less organized than today, but it proved capable of the most effective and extensive coöperative effort. Chicago then was dominated by successful individual enterprisers. Marshall Field, Philip D. Armour, N. K. Fairbanks, Potter Palmer, and scores of other great trade and industrial captains were in the prime of their lives. Cyrus McCormick I. was dead only a few years, and the great agrarian implement business was still strongly personalized and running on the momentum of a founder.

An Outstanding Example.

In casting about for modern representatives of this type it struck me that William Wrigley Jr. is way out in front in this generation. So many of the great Chicago businesses have been institutionalized and are under the direction of nonowning management and institutional public finance, that an expression from him would be very pertinent in this period of inventory and forecast that Chicago is now undergoing.

There has been evidence here and there of civic inertia—of over organization—of getting in each other's way. I have often wondered whether or not Detroit's phenomenal strides, and her energetic bid for new things like the airplane industry, were not in part due to the presence there of a very large number of individual entrepreneurs—men who have just "arrived"—such as the Fisher brothers, who are now making an impress on the national financial scene.

We have such men in Chicago in many lines—and we should search them out and make their abilities available for community service.

Germans Plan to Float Loan in U.S. in Week

BY GEORGE HAMMOND.

German financing will again be a feature of new bond offerings scheduled for this week. The city of Berlin will sell through a syndicate headed by Brown Bros. & Co. an issue of $15,000,000 six per cent bonds.

The municipality of Saloniki, Greece, is seeking to make a $5,000,000 loan of 40 years' duration in this country, the proceeds of which will go in part for the consolidation of certain existing loans. The remainder will be used for road construction and other city necessities.

A new issue of $2,000,000 first [closed] mortgage 6½ per cent bonds with detachable stock purchase warrants will be offered this week by the Prudential Refining company through a syndicate headed by Stein Bros. & Boyce. The Michigan Trust company and the Detroit company will offer tomorrow an issue of $2,217,000 Calaveras Timber company first mortgage 6 per cent bonds at par and accrued interest. The bonds are due May 1, 1938.

Abitibi Power Will Refinance.

The Dallas Joint Stock Land bank will come into the market tomorrow with an issue of $2,000,000 farm loan 5 per cent bonds which will be offered by a syndicate headed by Halsey, Stuart & Co. The bonds mature May 1, 1968, are optional May 1, 1938, and will be priced at 102¾ and interest, yielding about 4.65 per cent to the optional maturity and 5 per cent thereafter.

Reduction of fixed charges, along with dividend requirements on outstanding bonds and preferred stocks of subsidiary companies, will be effected through refinancing to be started tomorrow by the Abitibi Power and Paper Company, Ltd. The company will offer through a syndicate headed by the National City company an issue of $10,000,000 6 per cent cumulative preferred stock at $102 a share. A bond issue will follow later.

State and municipal financing scheduled for this week is the fourth largest of any week this year. The total comes to $45,007,803, as compared with $18,814,611 last week and $24,112,833 in the period ended May 19. The largest is $10,550,000 of Nova Scotia 4s.

Few New Issues Last Week.

The second smallest total of bond offerings this year entered the new security market last week, the total being $56,408,332, the fourth time this year that new bond offerings have fallen below the $100,000,000 mark. This compares with $121,312,000 in the previous week and $120,818,000 in the corresponding period of last year.

Weakness in both the stock and listed bond markets was given as the cause, and many investment bankers withheld new issues from the market until they could decide whether a definite break in the big bull market had arrived.

The offerings, by groups, of the last and the previous week, follow:

	Last week.	Prev. week.
Foreign	$21,250,000	$ 2,000,000
Industrial	12,000,000	16,850,000
Public Utility	10,950,000	86,010,000
State and Municip.	8,257,332	10,377,000
Railroad	3,951,000
Invest. corporations		2,500,000
Farm loan		2,000,000
Insular possessions.		1,575,000
Total	$56,408,332	$121,312,000

Youngstown Sheet & Tube Plans New Preferred Issue

Youngstown, O., May 26.—(AP)—Stockholders of Youngstown Sheet and Tube company will vote June 25 to authorize the issue of $25,000,000 in 5½ per cent preferred stock, officials announced today. Of this issue, $15,000,000 will be used to retire at 105 the present seven per cent issue, while $10,000,000 will be at the disposal of the company. Present holders of the preferred stock are entitled to subscribe at par to the new stock. Subscription rights expire June 12.

Business Failures Fewer Than Week and Year Ago

New York, May 26.—Further improvement appears in the insolvency record this week, failures in the United States numbering 426. This is 16 less than last week's total reported to R. G. Dun & Co. and is 91 below the number two weeks ago. Comparing with the 449 defaults a year ago, there is a decrease of 23. The reduction this week from last week's figures is mainly in the east, while all sections except the Pacific coast show fewer insolvencies than a year ago.

Bank Clearings Last Week Were 26% Above Year Ago

New York, May 26. — Settlements through the banks continue very heavy, according to Dun's Review. Total bank clearings this week at leading cities in the United States amounted to $11,740,191,000, or 26.9 per cent in excess of the aggregate for the same period of last year, with the New York City clearings of $8,083,000,000 showing a gain of 38.5 per cent. At outside centers, this week's clearings of $3,657,191,000 are 7.1 per cent above those of a year ago.

LONDON STOCKS' PRICES DECLINE ON PROFIT TAKING

BY SIDNEY CAVE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1928: By The Chicago Tribune].

LONDON, May 26.—Although the eve of the holiday closing saw more cheerful conditions prevailing, with an encouraging display of rallying power, the atmosphere of financial circles here still is in marked contrast to the unbridled enthusiasm in force for so long.

It would be incorrect, however, to talk of a "slump," although heavy adverse conditions have had to be met in many of the more speculative securities.

Rush to Take Profits.

The check in the recent abnormal buying movement originated in the break in Wall street and Paris. Prospects that American capital used in operations here largely would be withdrawn led to an immediate bout of profit taking. This, however, had no direct adverse effect on the gilt edged section.

Fears that the introduction of British funds and war bonds into the American market would lay the British funds "open to the influence of American gambling" have proved unjustified. The market, however, certainly is due for a period of rest and recuperation.

London's money position can momentarily be regarded as almost unique. Considerable excitement was caused by the mid-week announcement that the National City Bank of New York issued $5,000,000 in gold to London. There is authoritative evidence that funds were being taken from England to New York, probably due to the high money rates ruling on the American side. This may raise the bank rate here, an unpopular move, for in recent years the London bank rates has averaged one-half per cent above the American, but now they are equal.

Foreign Bonds Fare Better.

With a diminution of the recent political fears, the Roumanian, Chinese, and Japanese issues all recovered.

Turkish Unified, however, fell sharply with proposals of the Angora government to suspend ratification of the debt agreement. Peruvian corporation issues fluctuated somewhat erratically, mostly downward, while Mexicans reacted under the influence of Wall street. French currency loans also moved narrowly and Brazilian loans benefited from good support.

British rails continued depressed by poor traffic reports, which did not show improvement in any respect in the twentieth week of the year. Foreign rails were depressed because of labor troubles, but Argentines showed a good recovery the end of the week.

Hit by Profit Taking.

Selling pressure in leading gramophone shares assumed serious proportions early in the week, with a rally later. Columbias dropped two points to 3½. Victor at one time down to 90, closed at 96, while Gramophones H. M. V. recovered a couple of points from the worst. British and American Celanese dropped but later good buying by professional interests caused a sharp rally. Other textiles were held in check by the uncertain position of the industry.

Cable and wireless issues weakened on uncertainty regarding the future, most of the cables losing the rises accorded earlier in the month.

Oils generally were irregular with a brighter tone at closing. Rubber shares remained idle. Cement descriptions were outstandingly active; newspapers were dull; catering, iron and steel were uncertain, and mines generally were quiet, with the exception of a fair demand for Australian leaders.

Profit Taking Hits Paris.

PARIS, May 26.—The artificial price level of recent weeks was laid directly to the expansion of credit in the United States and the resultant circuit of capital between New York, London, and Paris. The warning note struck in America reached here the first of the week, with a regular "black Monday," when the bears, apparently acting from virtuous motives, attacked the list, selling short.

Banking stocks went tumbling, and leading shares slumped an average of 20 per cent. Tuesday buying orders from Belgium and Germany helped steady the situation, and Wednesday a desperate rally was seen when it was found that foreign and provincial enthusiasm could not be dampened seriously by the local movement.

Rentes held firm through the flurry, banking shares eventually recovered, and it is believed the market now technically is strong, and the investors have been adequately warned. Wednesday's advance was consolidated Thursday, and Friday on the eve of the three day Pentecostal holiday, the firmness as a whole was maintained.

TOPICS OF FINANCE AND TRADE

Projects in which electrical apparatus will hold an important place show marked activity throughout the country and the outlook for business in the summer months is encouraging, says Electrical World. Inquiries for heavy equipment from industrials are numerous and much electric railway business is in sight. Sales of electric refrigerators are gaining, especially in the east and south.

State banks of Minnesota will be prohibited from paying an interest rate of more than 4 per cent on savings deposits after July 1, or on certificates issued or renewed after that date, according to an order issued by A. J. Veigal, state commissioner of banks. This action is taken, he said, to aid the public in fulfilling its demand for safe banks to protect its savings.

S. H. Kress, president of S. H. Kress & Co., sailed from New York for Europe yesterday. Before his departure he said: "The company plans to open twelve to fifteen store this year. At the current rate of business company's earnings for 1928 should show improvement over 1927. Due to closer competition, earnings of chain stores can hardly continue to show the same advances as in former years."

All departments of the Baldwin Locomotive works will be housed in the new administration building at Eddystone about the middle of June. No steps have been taken, it is said, for disposal of the Philadelphia property.

The business outlook of Paramount Famous Lasky corporation in 1928 is the best ever, said Jesse Lasky, vice president of the corporation, before sailing on S. S. Leviathan. "Our business and prospects point to the best year in the history of the company. Earnings in 1928 should be better than in 1927."

Irving T. Bush, president of the Bush Terminal company, sailing on the Homeric, says business has shown surprising strength, and he does not look for any great recession from now on, although not convinced that 1928 will be a banner year. He added that the Bush Terminal company's second quarter will probably reflect the slowing up of freight traffic.

Bernard F. Gimbel, president of Gimbel Brothers, the largest department store system in the country, makes it clear that the election of Julius Rosenwald to the board of his company does not mean any corporate alignment with Sears, Roebuck & Co. Mr. Rosenwald has been a large stockholder of Gimball Brothers for some years.

Stockholders of the Manufacturers Trust company approved a stock split-up, four shares for one and an increase in capital stock from 122,500 shares, $100 par, to 700,000 shares, $25 par. Directors were increased from 20 to 26.

Industrial employment in Toledo reached a new high in the week ended May 25 at 40,434, an increase of 342 over the preceding week and comparing with 29,916 in the corresponding week last year.

Spicer Manufacturing has called for redemption on July 1 at $110 plus accrued dividend of $2 all of the outstanding preferred stock.

Bargain Hunting on the Stock Market.

Our mail indicates that many people go bargain hunting on the stock market.

They look over the list and pick out a number of the cheap stocks with no apparent reason except that they are cheap.

A good many shares can be bought with comparatively little money so they buy them.

When a stock is very low on the market there is usually a good reason.

It is low because intrinsically it is not worth much.

Because a stock is selling far below its par or nominal value does not mean that it is a bargain or that it must eventually sell higher.

In fact, many of the very cheap stocks are selling in the present market at far more than they are really worth.

In the market of recent months the prices of most stocks are not indications of their real values.

The market price, in fact, is never a true indication of a stock's real worth.

If it were stocks would not fluctuate from hour to hour.

Values should be gauged by what a stock is paying and earning or may reasonably be expected to pay in the future.

The basis for determining this value is an analysis of the company's history, condition, earnings and prospects.

Such an analysis of a company whose stock is picked up as a bargain would show why it was cheap and would frequently convince the prospective purchaser that it really was no bargain.

If one buys a high grade dividend paying stock where the earnings justify the continuance of the dividend, even though he pays a high price for it he at least has an income from his investment whether the price advances or declines.

With a non-dividend paying stock where the prospects of future dividends are remote he has no return from his investment while he holds it and can realize anything on it only through an advance in price which may never come.

We do not mean to imply that there are not many low priced stocks that have merit.

There are a good many which have a low par or nominal value which makes them appear cheap, but which are good stocks.

An analysis will bring this out.

But there are a lot of stocks that have little, if any, intrinsic worth, that are hopeless speculations and that have no normal prospect of ever being worth more and such stocks are too often the ones that are picked up by the bargain hunters who buy stocks for their cheap prices with no further investigation.

In buying stocks as in buying any commodity one should endeavor to know what he is getting.

GRAIN MEN SAY CHICAGO NEEDS 2 STOCK MARTS

Trading in stocks and bonds on the Chicago Board of Trade is considered by grain men as the best move that the officials of that institution have made. The membership is in full sympathy with the officials in their efforts to arrange for the new business.

Decline in grain speculation for the last few years has weakened leaders on the board of trade to the necessity of a broader policy and they have confidence that in time it will become a most important factor and possibly compete with the Chicago stock exchange which is now doing the largest business in its history. Its memberships are around $45,000 while those on the board of trade have advanced recently and are around $16,000.

Seek Another Trading Outlet.

One of the chief reasons for favoring trading in securities on the grain board is that constant hostile legislation with possible passage of a bill similar to the McNary-Haugen bill that has been vetoed by President Coolidge, might, it is argued by grain traders, result in a law being enacted that would prevent speculative trading in grains for future delivery, and without this, the board of trade would have nothing but the cash trade, which would possibly be controlled by a few interests.

The immense volume of speculation in stocks and bonds has also been a motive for a desire on the part of the grain men to have a speculative market in Chicago that will, they believe, in time become a most important factor.

Public Speculation Increases.

Within the last few years, the public has been educated into trading in securities and especially stocks and the constant increase in the number of securities available has created a belief that there is room for development of an immense business in the west, which will prevent the money from that section from going into Wall Street.

Men who have traded in grains for years, have taken more interest in stocks and bonds of late and it is one of the peculiar features that a speculator will stand for a $5 to $10 decline in stocks while a cent drop in the price of wheat or corn will scare them into taking their losses. Brokers say that declines in stocks do not scare speculators away in the same way a break in grain does, which makes it more attractive to the stock speculator.

No Date for Trading.

Board of trade officials say that there is no certainty as to when trading in stocks here will begin, as there is an immense amount of preliminary work to be arranged.

President Samuel B. Arnot of the Chicago board of trade says he sees no reason why a satisfactory arrangement cannot be made with the Chicago stock exchange so that members of the board of trade, who have a large stock as well as grain business, will not be interfered with by the rule of the stock exchange which prevents trading by its members on any other stock exchange in this state.

A. R. Wood, president of the Chicago stock exchange, says that when the proper time comes there will probably be a meeting between the interests of both exchanges and that some understanding can be reached.

Railroads Discuss Plans to Acquire Express System

New York, May 26.—(AP)—The uniform express contract committee of the Association of Railway Executives, of which W. B. Storey, president of the Atchison, is chairman, is expected to meet with its legal committee in a few days to determine definitely upon the plan to acquire the American Railway Express company. When the express business is taken over by the railroads the interstate commerce commission probably will be asked for a more advantageous adjustment of freight rates.

Chicago Bank Stocks Active But Irregular

Last week's bank stock trading was in well sustained volume, although price swings in a number of instances were wide and much irregularity was shown.

Central Trust Company of Illinois added another 5 points to its recent gain, being traded in at 483. It closed a trifle easier, however, stock being offered at 485 with 480 bid. Bank of America was in demand at 400 to 405. National Bank of the Republic relinquished 10 points, as did First National, in closing at 540 to 545 and 840 to 845, respectively. Union Trust rose 3 points to 807 bid, offered at 811. Illinois Merchants was easier, sales ranging between 915 and 923. Peoples Trust and Savings was unchanged at 680 to 685. There were a few reported transactions in Foreman National at 825. Continental National Bank and Trust was dealt in between 550 and 555. State Bank of Chicago after selling at 678, improved to 680 bid, offered at 684.

Hart Parr Common Soars.

Hart Parr common was a feature in the industrial group, running up from 46 to high transactions at 55. It eased off toward the close, however, stock being wanted at 53½, and stock offered at 54. Ninety-three was bid for the preferred but little interest was shown on the selling side. Transactions were reported in Chicago Daily News common between 40½ and 41¼; while the preferred was a point lower at 101 to 102.

Although considerable trading took place in Chicago Fire Marine Insurance, little improvement was noted over last week's sales. Stock was offered at 24, with buyers around 23. Dayton Rubber Units improved 5 points to sales between 145 and 149, prior to their listing on the Chicago Stock Exchange Monday. The demand for Continental Steel common improved the price of that issue 3 points to 30½ bid, offered at 31½. The preferred was 2 points higher at 88 to 90. Creamery Package was a point lower at 32.

National Gypsum Improves.

National Gypsum common and preferred were better, the former at 28 to 30, and the latter at 67 to 69. Congress Hotel common was 5 points higher at 215, but bids at this figure failed to attract sellers. Elgin National Watch was a point higher at 64. After being dormant for some time interest was again revived in First State Pawners, and sales were reported at 150, a 4 point gain over previous sales. General Vending Machine common was rather active, it improved from early sales at 20 to a close of 25 to 26.

Great Lakes Transit in late trades sold as high as 29. Northwestern Yeast declined 5 points to sales at 210. Bids of 207 for A. E. Staley common did not interest sellers. Van Ess Laboratories improved a half point to sales at 13. Interstate Iron and Steel was in demand at 105 and higher, without attracting sellers. W. C. Foster preferred on news of good earnings sold up between 82 and 83.

American Beet Sugar Co. Again Operates at Profit

New York, May 26.—After operating at a loss in each of the two previous fiscal years, the American Beet Sugar company in its annual report for the year ended March 31, 1928, shows results again in black ink. The company's net profit for the period was $463,856, after interest, depreciation and other charges, or $9.27 a share on the 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock, on which dividends are in arrears. This compares with a net loss of $445,509 in the preceding year. After allowing for the regular annual dividend on the preferred, the 1928 balance is equal to 76 cents a common share.

CHICAGO STOCKS SHOW BIG SWING IN WEEK'S TRADE

Chicago stocks were decidedly irregular in last week's trading, with 73 issues showing net gains from fractions to 30 points and 74 stocks establishing losses up to 5 points.

The most spectacular was Great Lakes Dredge and Dock, which jumped 30 points to 240 on a turnover of only a little more than 600 shares. Various rumors concerning the probable action of the directors at their next meeting were afloat yesterday. One, emanating from brokerage circles close to one group in the company, had it that an extra dividend will be declared this midsummer.

Report Stock to Be Split.

Another rumor, understood to be considered by a different source in the directorate, was that officials fear unfavorable opinions likely to arise from too great a fluctuation in the price of the stock and consequently are considering steps to alter the situation by splitting the stock.

Hammermill Paper climbed 20 points, reflecting details of a Pacific coast merger previously announced. Pool activity in Q. R. S. and U. S. Gypsum brought those issues up 12 and 13¼ points respectively. Gypsum preferred rose 2½.

Gains of three to nine points were registered by Ryan Car, Electric Household Utilities, Zenith Radio, Grigsby-Grunow, North American Car, Sears Roebuck, Inland Wire and Steel, Vesta Battery, Bendix "A" and "B," Pines Winterfront, and Evans "A" and "B."

Advances of from one to 2½ points were made by Noblitt-Sparks, Marvel Carburetor, Galesburg-Coulter Disc, Stewart-Warner, Cutler-Hammer, Central and Southwestern Utilities, Baxter Laundries "A," Bastian-Blessing, Greif Brothers, American Colortype, Northwest Engineering, All-American Radio, Adams Royalty, Henney Motors, Waukesha Motors, Swift, Auburn Automobile, Yates Machine, and Butler Brothers.

Several Issues Are Lower.

Celotex led the downside with a net loss of 5 points. Commonwealth-Edison sold off 4½ and Steel and Tubes was 4 points lower. About a dozen issues were off around a point or so while losses of from 2 to 3 points were felt by Ross Gear, Quaker Oats preferred, National Standard, Morgan Lithograph, American Shipbuilding, Warner Gear, Sheffield Steel, Associates Investment, Kraft-Phenix Cheese, Keystone Steel, Gossard, and McCord Radiator "A."

Bond prices were mostly lower, although a feature was a rise of 4 points in Houston Gas 6½s. The collapse of the traction legislation brought declines to the local transportation obligations. Chicago City and Connecting Railway 5s were off 2¼, as were Chicago Railways purchase money 5s. Chicago Railways first 5s lost 2 points and the "B" 5s eased a point. Chicago City Railway first 5s were up 1¼.

HOT WEATHER BOOSTS WHEAT; RAIN NEAR, FALLS

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

While dry and hot weather both sides of the international line had considerable influence on the wheat market at one time, the effect of the drought in the northwest largely was offset later by the weekly forecast indicating unsettled conditions over the greater part of the grain belt, and prices reacted as sharply as they had advanced.

Price changes were rapid, and the finish was 1@2c lower. Corn showed a heavy undertone the greater part of the day and closed with net losses of 1¼@1⅝c. Oats were unsettled, but eased in sympathy with corn, and closed ⅛c higher to ⅝c lower. Rye was off ⅛@⅞c for the day.

Grain markets were decidedly unsettled during last week, with wheat at the top showing 7⅝c over the inside of the previous week, but the best prices were not maintained, and the close was ⅛c higher to ½c lower as compared with a week ago. Liquidation was on in corn with a loss of 3⅝@5¼c for the week, while oats were 1½c higher to ½c lower with May showing the most strength. Rye was unchanged to 3⅝c lower. Lard lost 10@20c for the week, with ribs 5@17½c higher, and bellies 2½c higher to [illegible] lower.

Fluctuations in the wheat price are influenced at the present time largely by weather conditions in the spring wheat territory. Temperatures of 90 and over on Friday were shown both sides of the international line, and numerous messages were received indicating that unless moisture was received within a week extensive damage might develop. There were also a few complaints of dry weather received from the southwest, and houses with Kansas City connections were good buyers of futures here early.

Foreign markets generally were closed and no export demand was reported at the seaboard. Monday will also be a holiday abroad. French wheat acreage is officially estimated at 12,769,000 acres, against 13,280,000 acres last year.

Corn sold down to a new low for the week as the result of further liquidation by longs, and stop loss orders were uncovered on the break. Local bulls gave support on the break, and there was some week end evening up on the part of shorts. Local arrivals were heavy, but included considerable grain from southwestern terminals, and the trade looks for the visible supply on Monday to show a good decrease for the week. Oats were unsettled and while lower early rallied to above the finish of Friday later with commission houses and locals buying on the way up.

PACKERS SELL LARD

Prospects of larger arrivals of hogs this week combined with the weakness in corn prices and selling of late by packers on a poorly supported market, more than offset the effect of a strong market for hogs. Lard declined and closed with net losses of 5c to 10c. Exports were only 42,000 lbs. Liverpool was closed.

Ribs closed 7½c lower, with light trading, and bellies were unchanged. Cash trade was fair, with the week's movement of meats heavy and of lard smaller than the previous week. Prices follow:

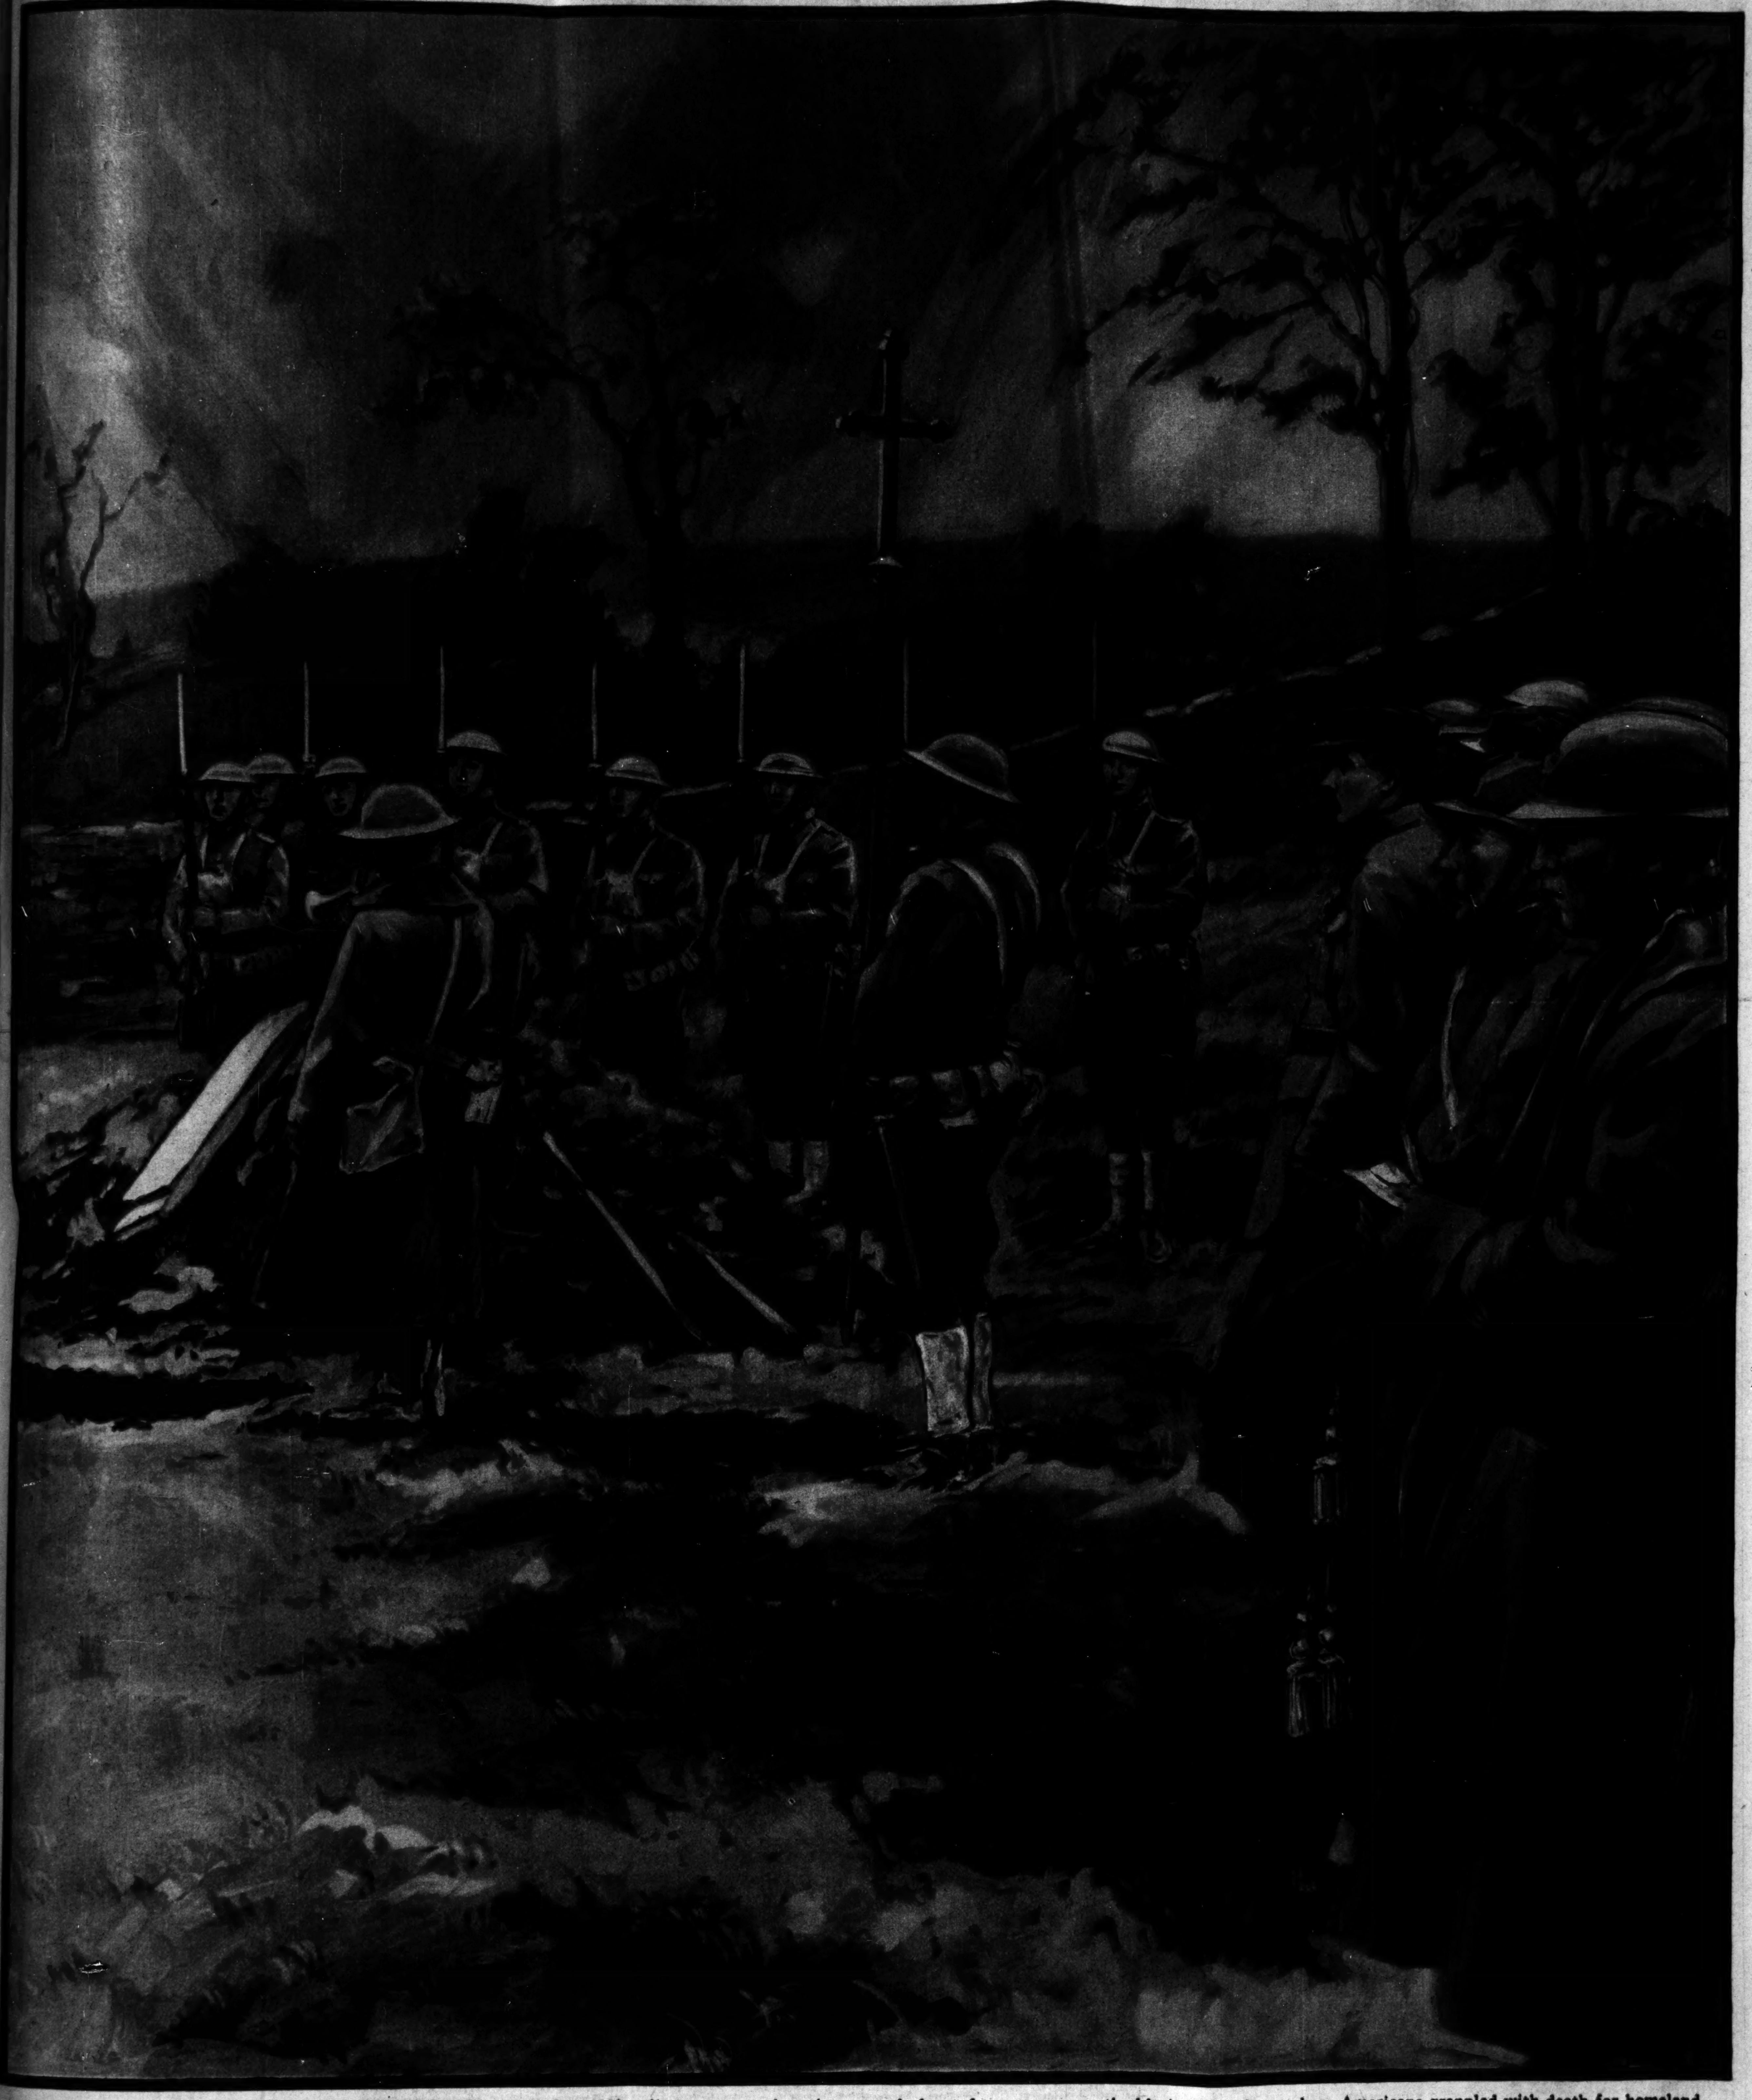
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

May 27, 1928



IN HONOR OF OUR DEAD "OVER THERE"—Memorial day, 1928, calls to memory the grimness and glory of ten years ago—the blazing battlefront where Americans grappled with death for homeland, the immortality won by those who laid down life in the name of freedom. With this drawing from an official photograph, a British artist gave to England the pictured story of the burial of the first Americans killed in action in France. French officers and poilus and American comrades of the fallen heroes look on as taps is sounded over the graves on a peaceful hillside.

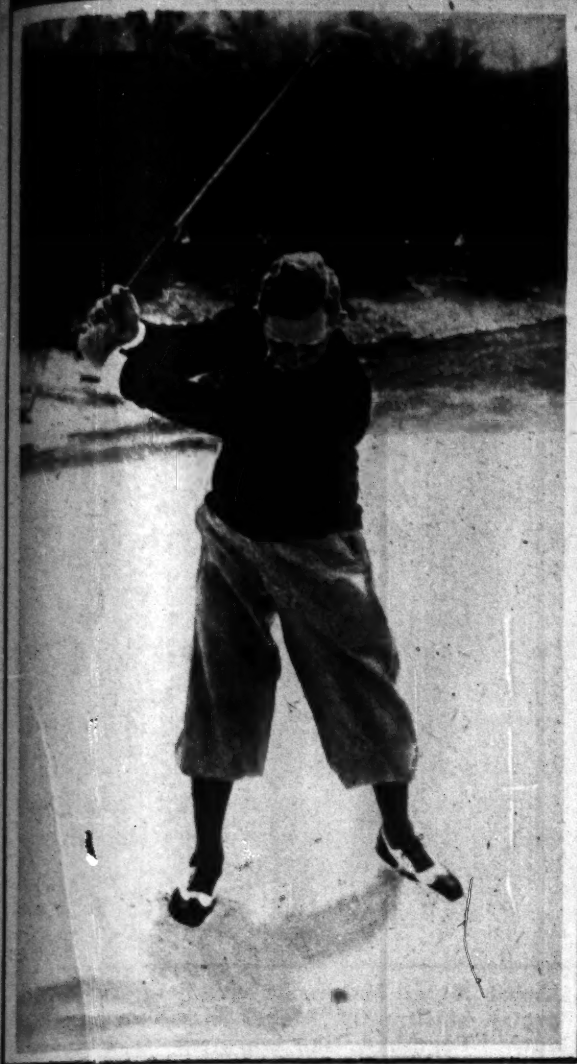
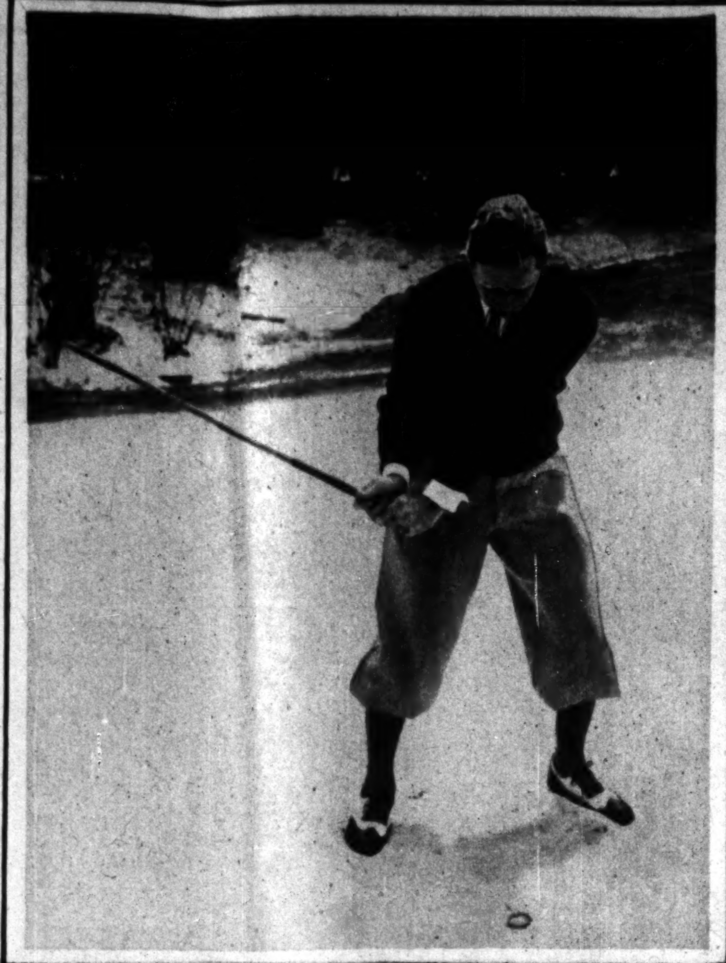
BETTER GOLF

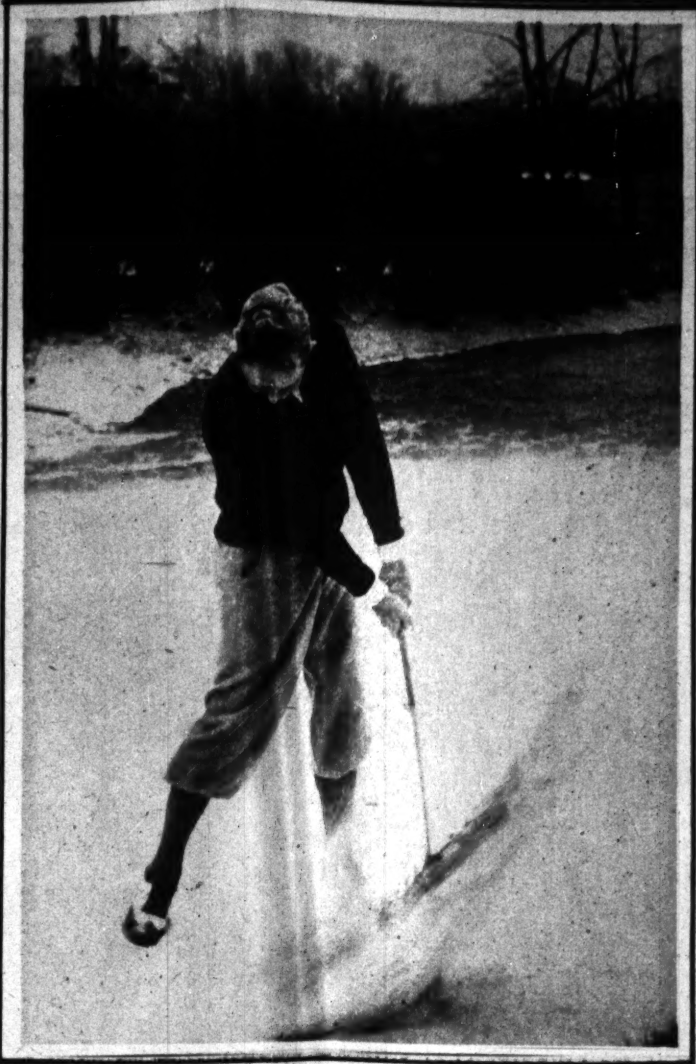
Jock Hutchison Blasting Out of a Trap



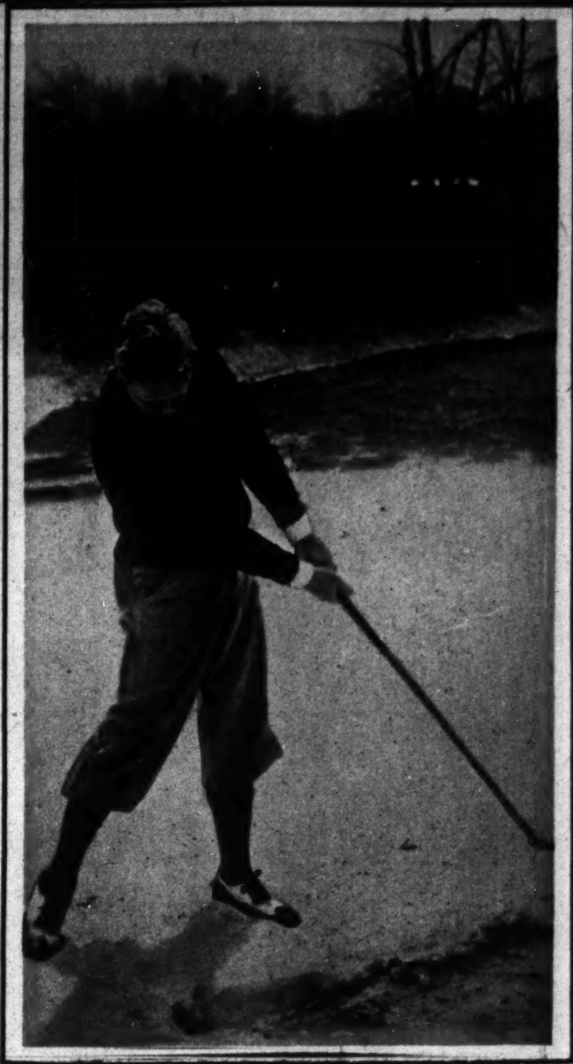
No. 1—At the top of his swing for an explosion shot from a sand trap. The swing is about as full as a mashie shot, but more compact.



No. 2—Halfway down to the ball, which is played from the center of the feet. Notice the shift of hips to the left and the firm grip, as if the ball were to be hit a long distance.

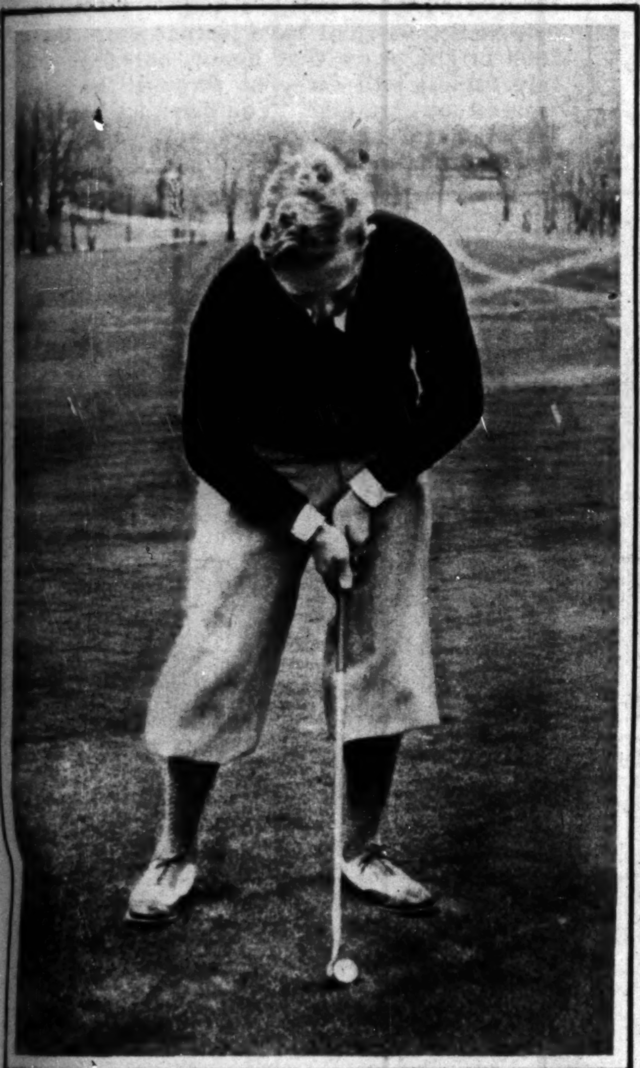


No. 3—The niblick blade biting into the sand behind the ball and sending it up in a shower. The clubhead hits the sand and the sand pushes the ball up.

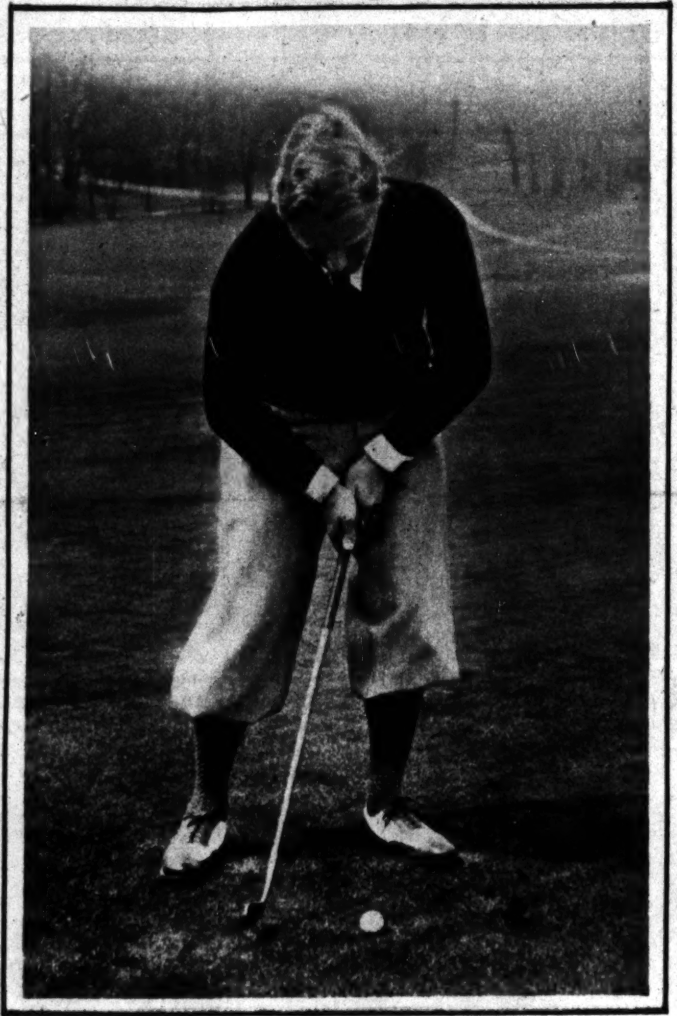


No. 4—Finish of the swing, the clubhead carrying on through the spot where the ball lay, but the resistance of the sand has prevented as full a finish as in a fairway shot.

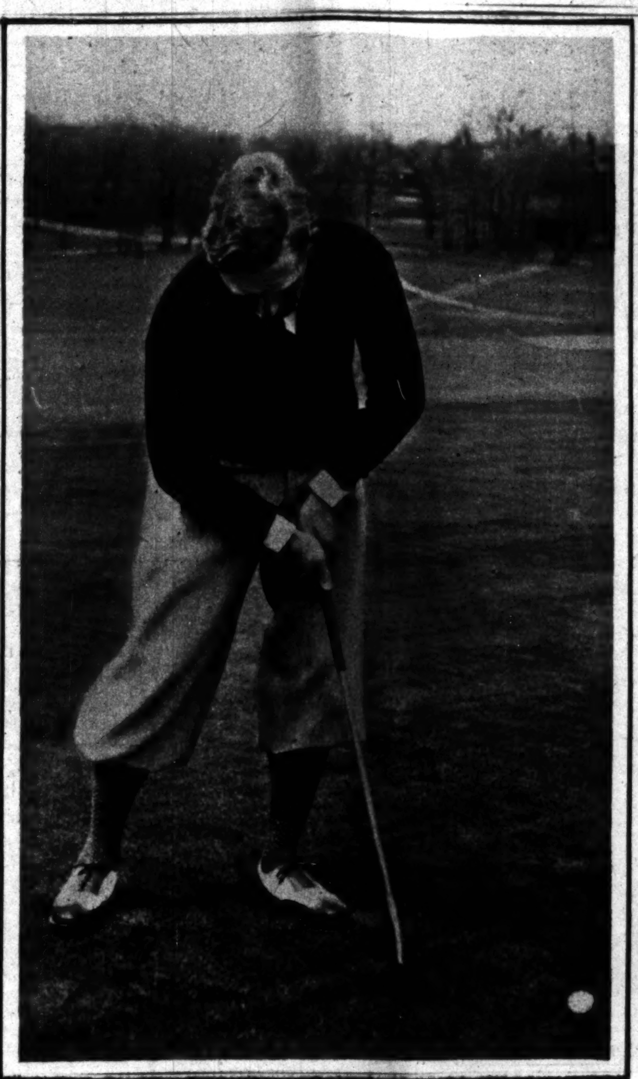
Jock Sinking the Putt



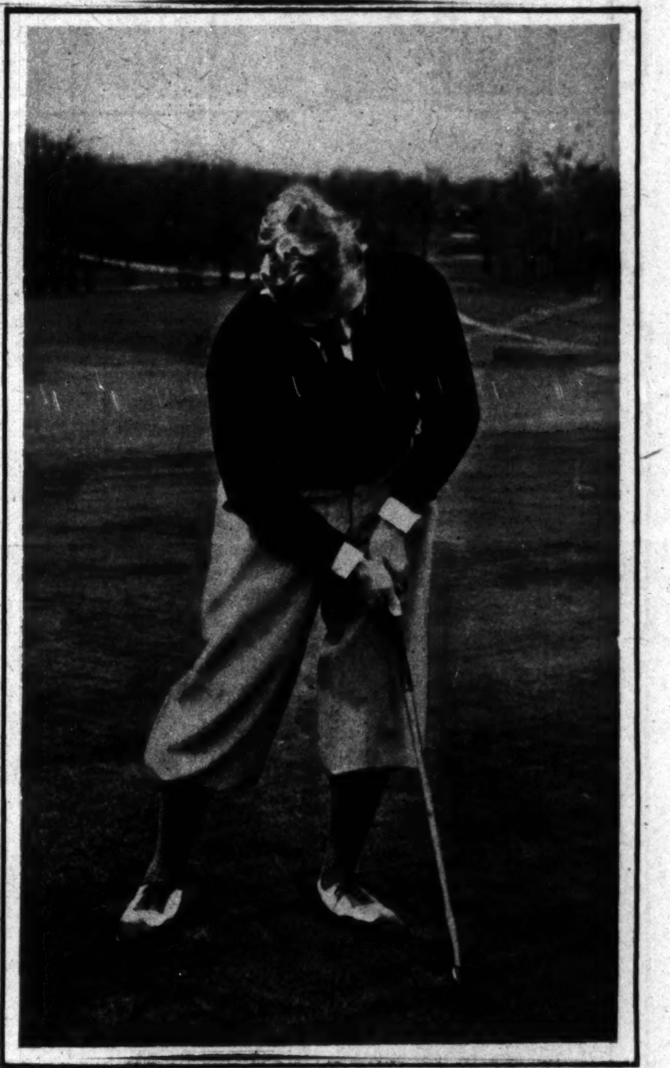
No. 1—Jock's stance for a putt, most of his weight on his left leg, with the ball opposite the instep of his left foot. This brings the eyes directly over the ball, where they should be.



No. 2—Taking the club back. The motion in a short putt is confined entirely to the wrists, which act as a hinge. The blade should not get too far off the ground on the backswing.



No. 3—The forward swing. Note how his hands indicate the blow is almost entirely a right-handed hit. Though the ball has moved, his head hasn't lifted.



No. 4—The follow through, just about as long as the backswing. Notice there has been no turning of the body, though in long putts the putter comes back farther with a little motion of the arms.

MODERN POMP IN ANCIENT SETTING—An impressive military display accompanied the departure of 151 bandiere from Rome for Turin, where they participated in the anniversary of the birth of Emmanuele Filiberto. He is the one who retrieved the fallen fortunes of the house of Savoy and set the duchy in order.

UP FROM DAVY JONES' LOCKER—The German battleship Moltke, scuttled by its crew when bottled up at Scapa Flow during the war, has been raised to the surface. After being lightened and made water-tight, it was towed to Rosyth, Scotland, for salvaging.

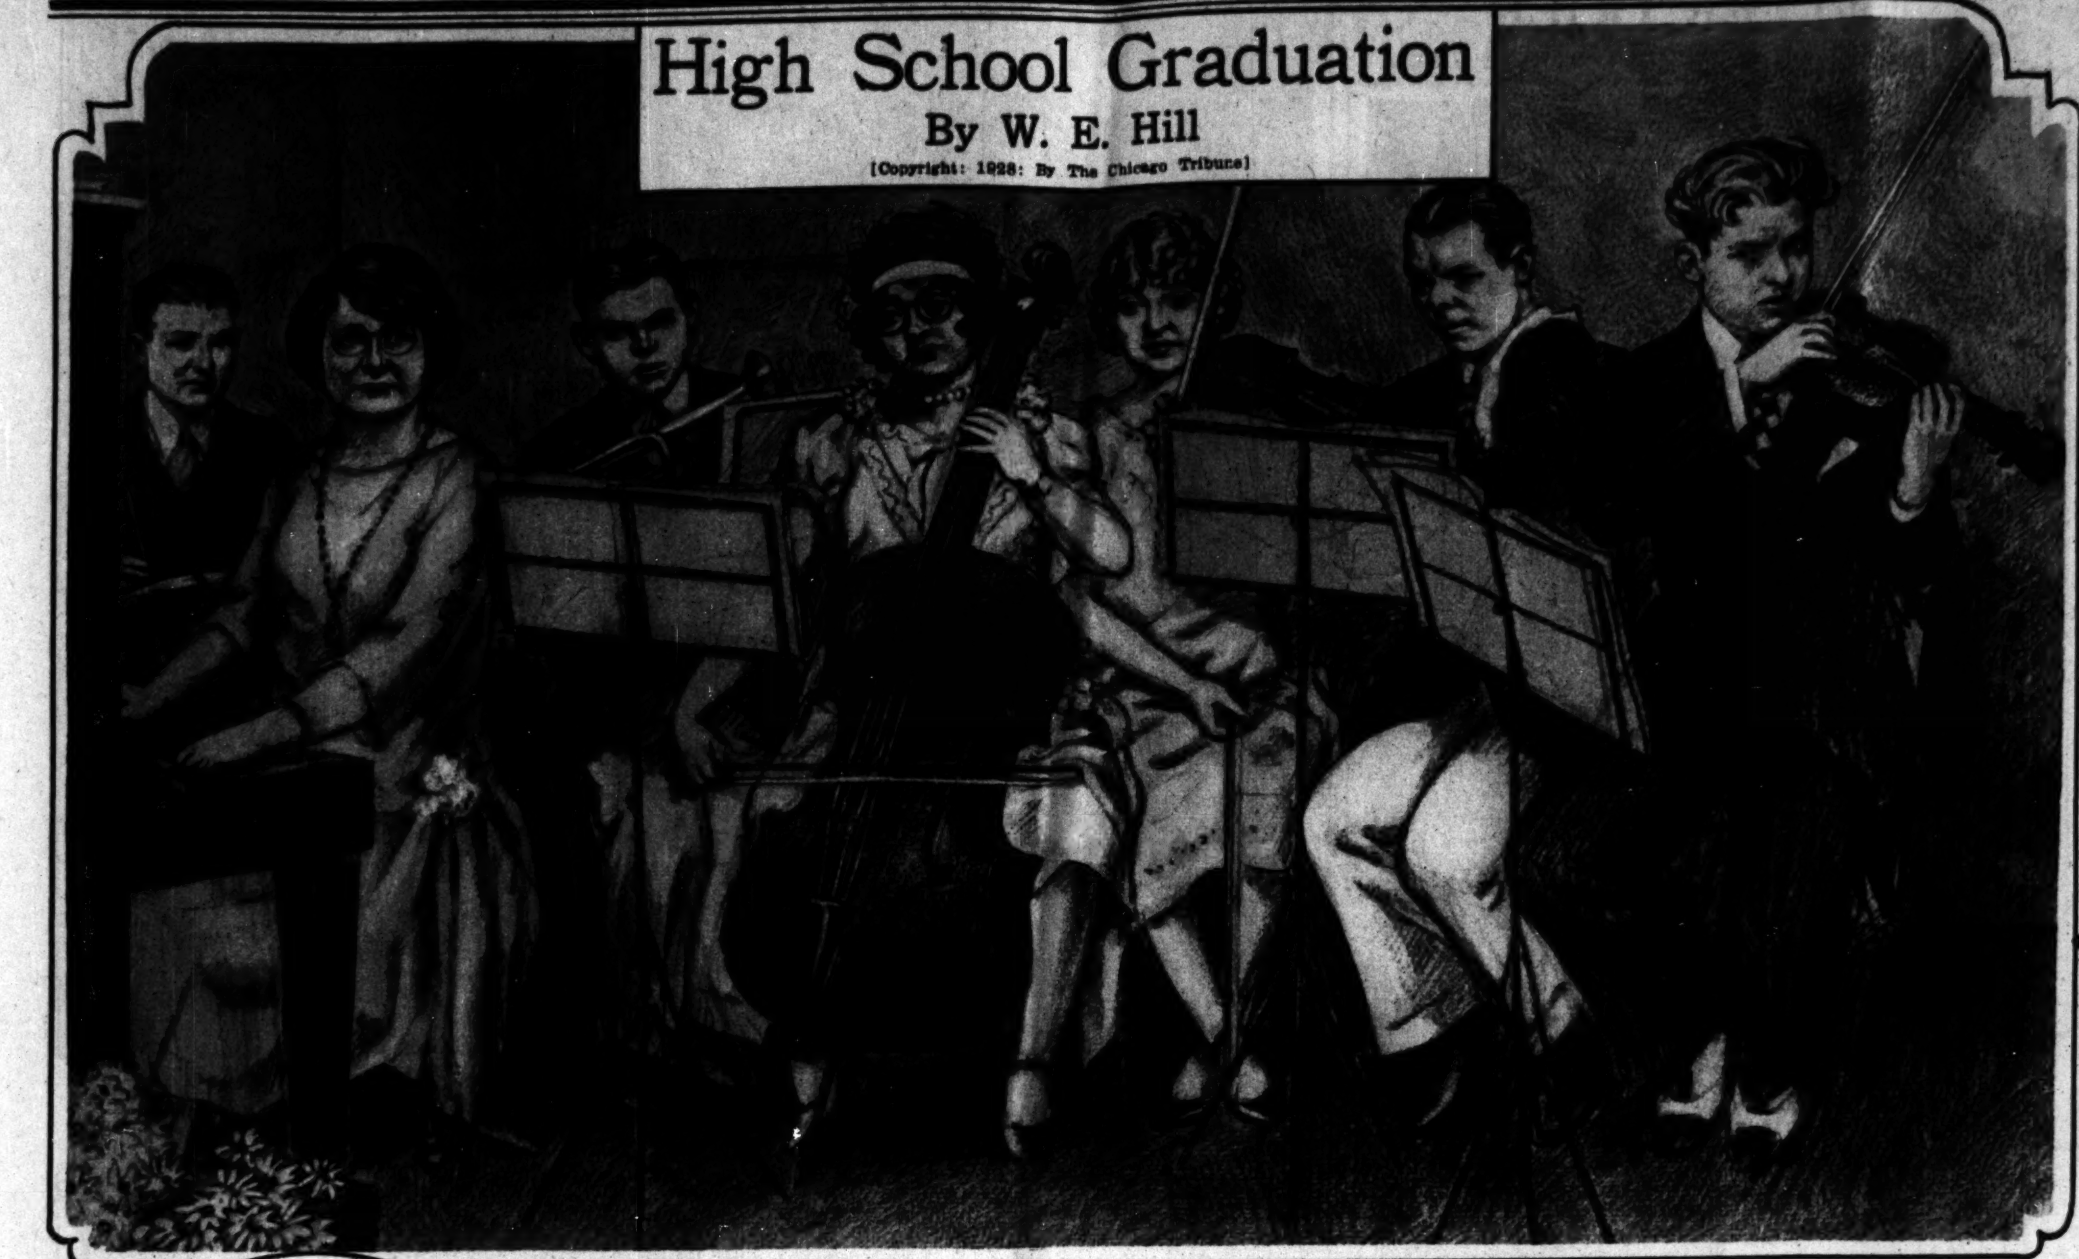
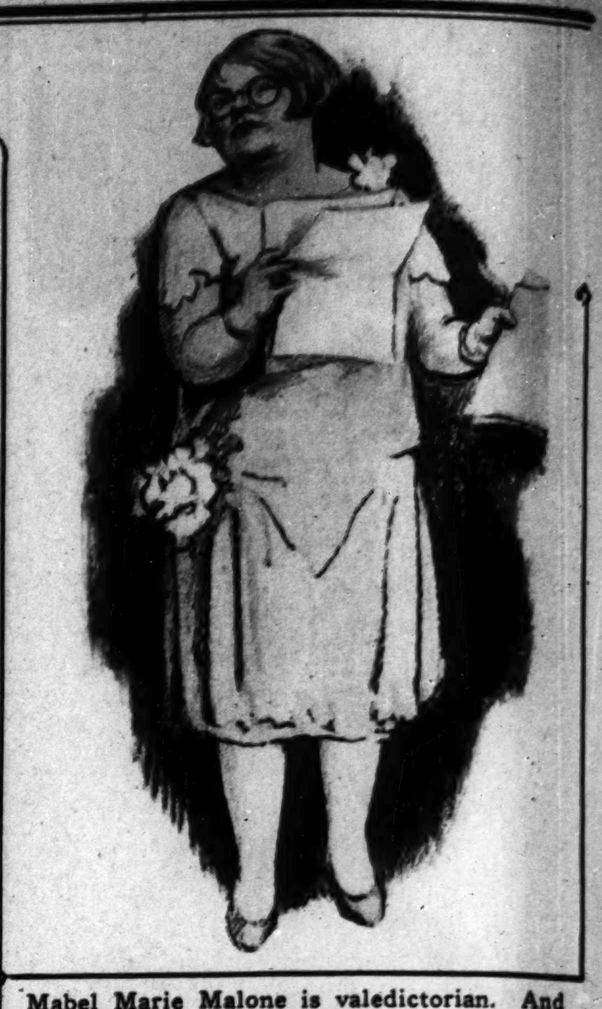
High School Graduation

By W. E. Hill

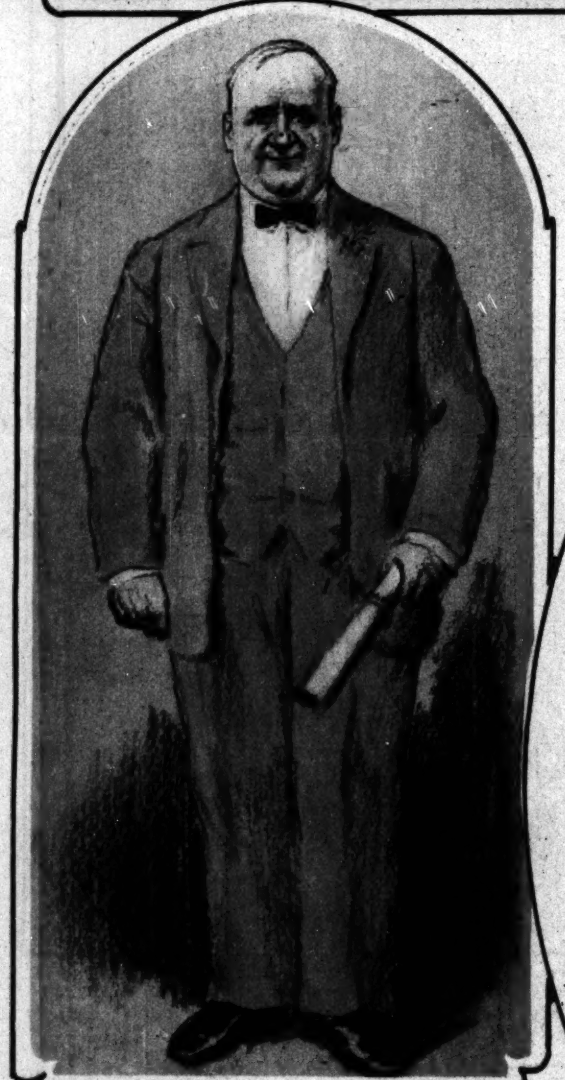
[Copyright: 1928: By The Chicago Tribune]



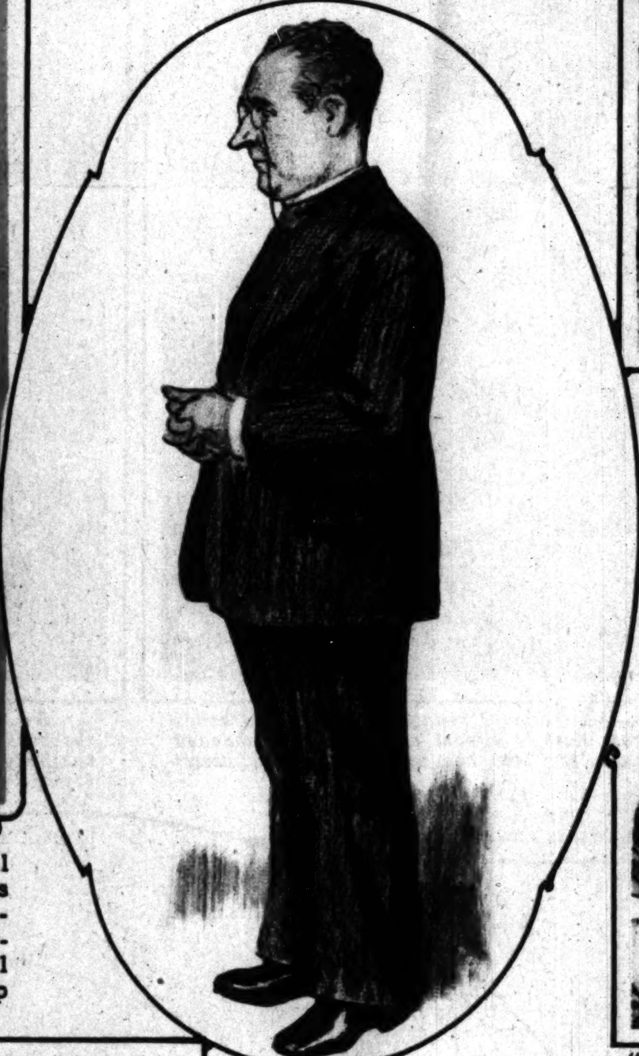
The high school orchestra, under the able leadership of Miss Noonan, head of the English department, is about to render, feelingly, "The Dance of the Hours." Close your eyes and you can almost see the hours—all twelve of them—hopping, skipping, and scurrying about.



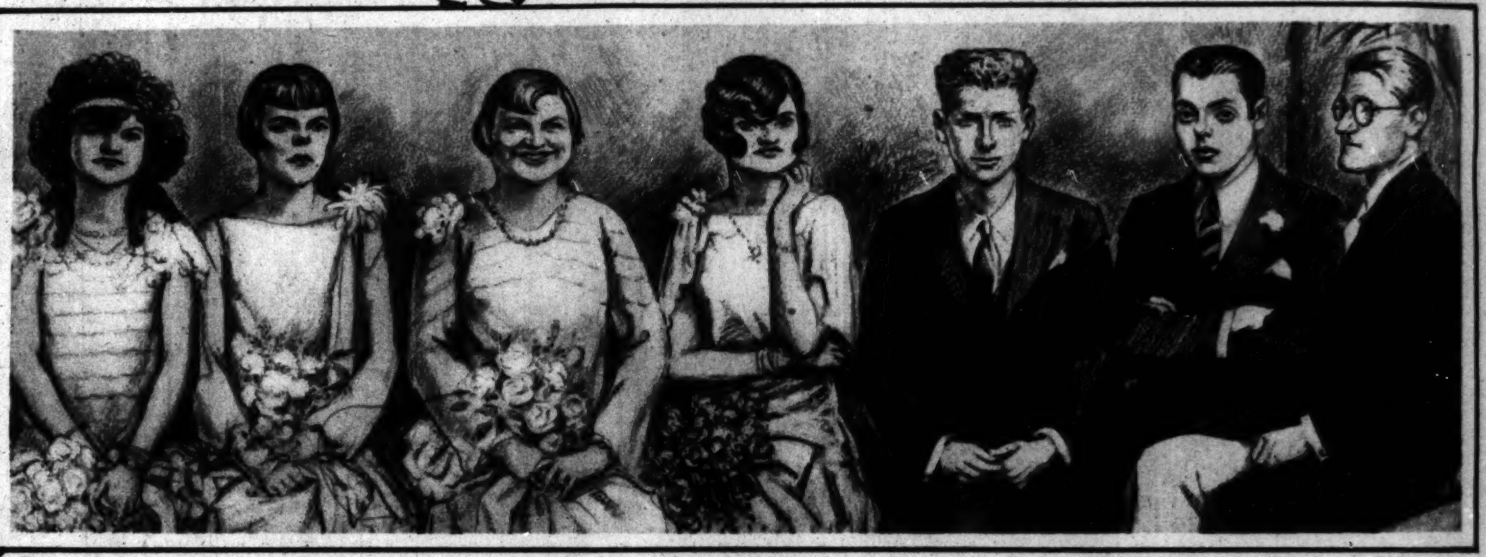
Mabel Marie Malone is valedictorian. And pretty swell stuff Mabel Marie is handing out. "Together, like mariners on a stormy sea," orates Mabel Marie, "we have triumphantly weathered the trials and tribulations of our four years in high school. Many of us here tonight will feel a heart throb at the thought of life's battle ahead, but whate'er may come, we shall have learned from these four bright years that honor, chivalry, and faithfulness will carry us through the most tempestuous waters." You can just bet that Mabel Marie's family, each and every member, is proud of her tonight.



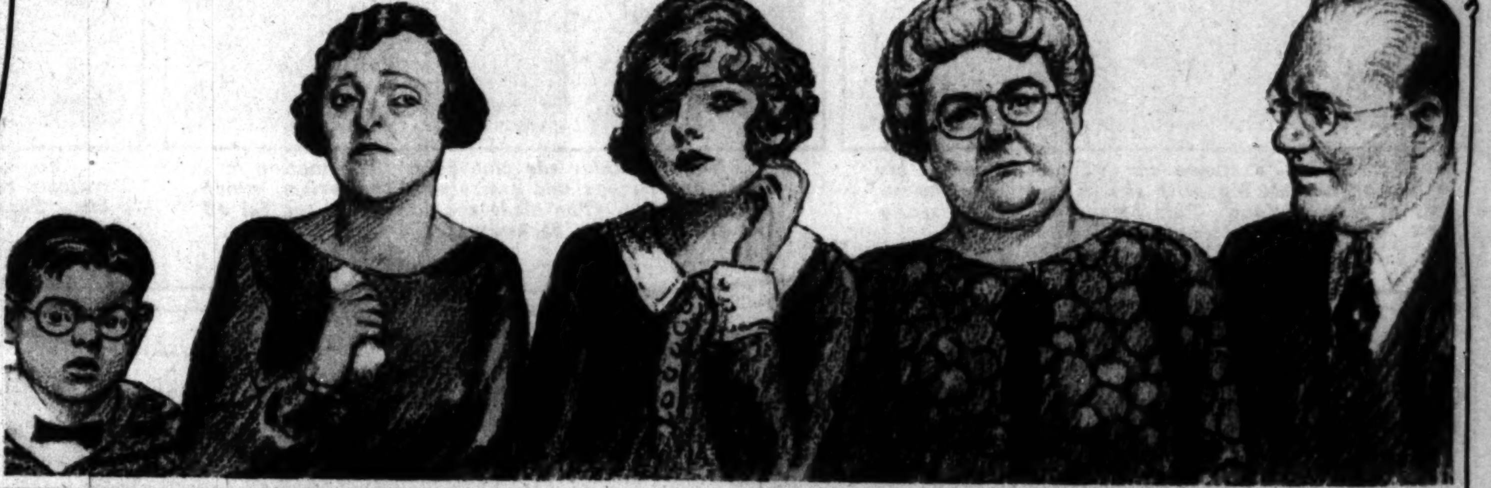
Mr. McQuilp, the school supervisor, all dressed up in a stylish Palm Beach suit, is ready to hand out the diploma that is going to start little Agnes O'Day on the voyage of life. Agnes is headed for normal school unless Prince Charming shows up in time to save her.



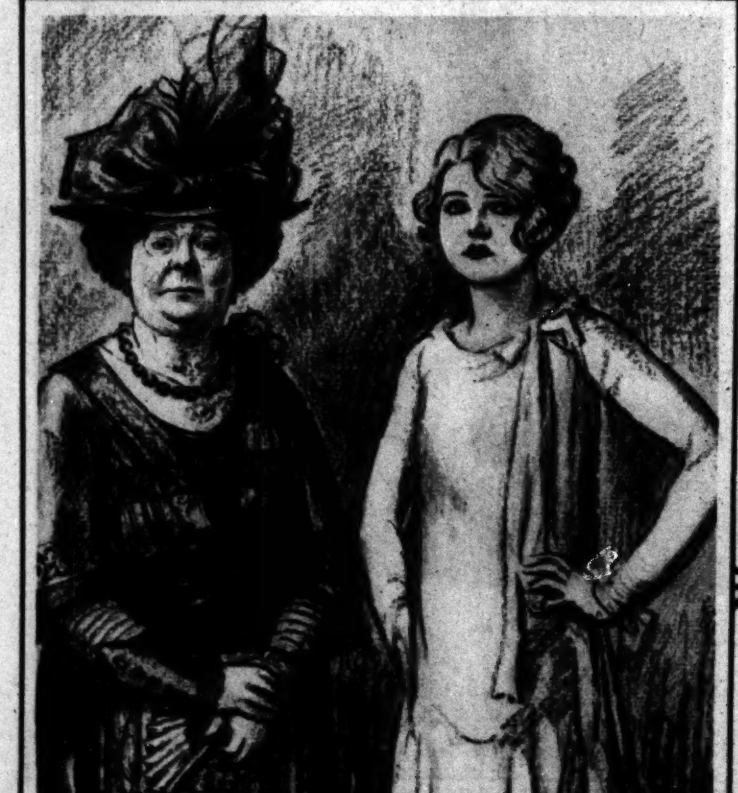
The Rev. Otis Higgleby is giving his usual talk before the graduation class on this night of nights. Many in the auditorium feel that he is a little more inspired than last year or the year before. "Let each and every one of you here tonight," the Rev. Otis is saying with just the suspicion of a tear in his voice, "gird about you the bright armor of trustfulness, and, armed with the staff of idealism and with the sword of noble deeds, burst forth into life's fray, glowing and tingling with the light of mighty endeavor!"



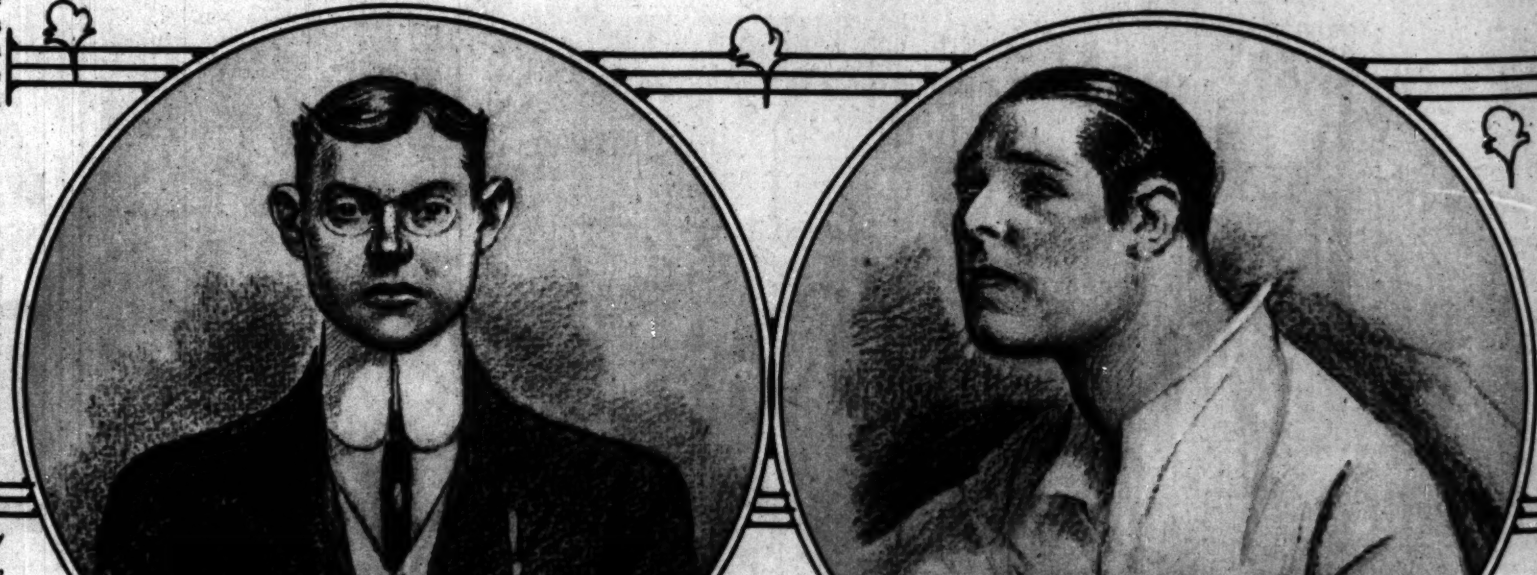
From left to right, we have with us on the platform the class beauty; the most all 'round girl; the greatest kidder; the most popular girl; the class president and boy who has done most for the school; the handsomest man and greatest fusser; and the greatest grind.



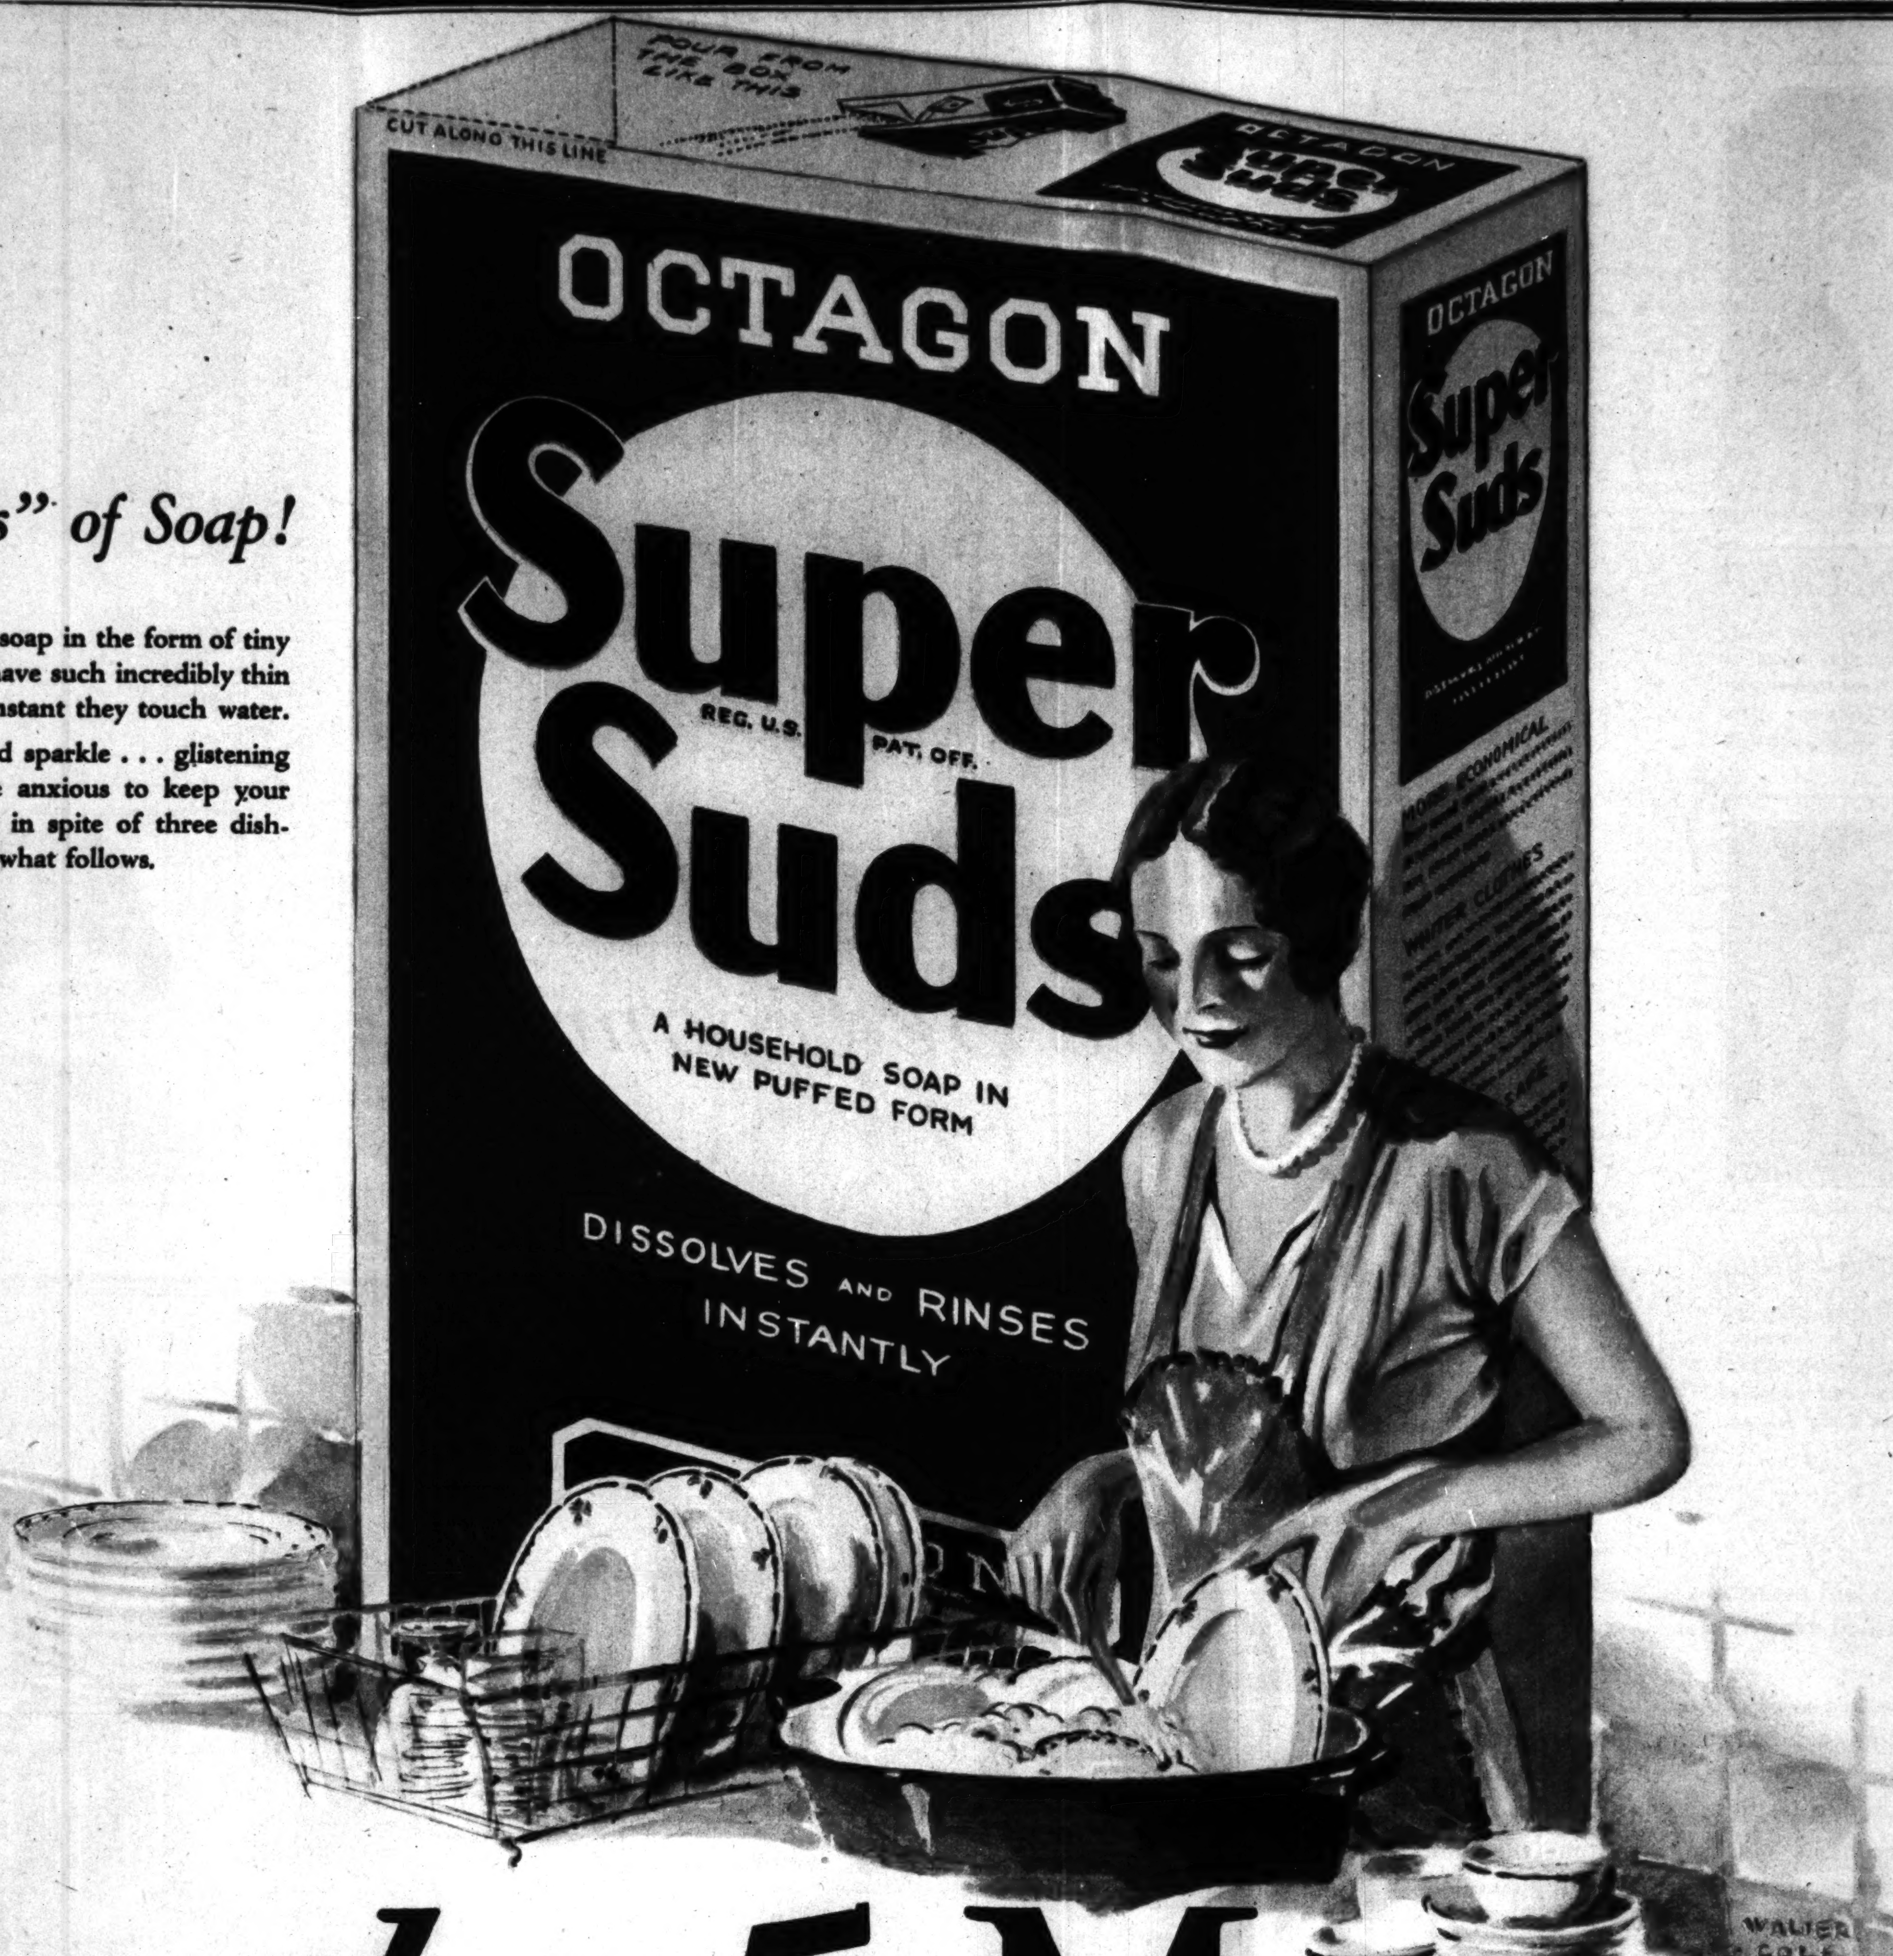
"Remember when I put the June bug down your neck when we were lined up for the exercises, Nellie?" The family is out en masse to see Harold graduate, and pop gets reminiscent of the good old days when high school boys and girls knew how to enjoy themselves.



Poor Francie isn't really graduating with her class, but they are letting her sit on the platform, and maybe they will hand her a false diploma just for the looks of the thing. Francie drew terrible marks in every subject and her mother felt awfully about it.



Just to show you how big an improvement there has been in the last twenty years in class photographs, gaze at the young man at the left, class of 1908, and at the boy at the right, class of 1928. You'll see right away that male sex appeal never had a chance in the old days of photography.



New . . . "Beads" of Soap!

Women marvel at this amazing new soap in the form of tiny hollow porous beads. These beads have such incredibly thin walls that they burst into suds the instant they touch water.

If you want dishes that gleam and sparkle . . . glistening china and glassware . . . if you are anxious to keep your hands young and attractive-looking in spite of three dishwashings a day . . . read what follows.

Try this 5 M*inute* Test in your Dishpan

See how easy it is to wash Dishes this new Quick Way

JUST turn on the water . . . pour Super Suds in your dishpan—and instantly—you have rich, active suds.

Test it for 5 minutes tonight—and see how quickly this new kind of soap banishes dishpan drudgery.

How it makes dishes sparkle . . . glasses glisten . . . without a trace of soapy film. Notice how it keeps hands dainty and smooth in spite of three dishwashings a day.

Surely . . . you'll want to try this amazing soap discovery before another day goes by.

First bar soap—then chips—now Super Suds

Years ago women had only bar soap. How hard they had to work rubbing the clothes with the soap, and how hard it was to rinse out those clinging soap particles. Next came chips. Many women changed to this form of soap because it could be stirred into a cleansing solution. But clothes and dishes had to be rinsed too much in order to get rid of undissolved soap. Now comes Super Suds, and women are changing to it by thousands in preference to all other forms of soap. Super Suds is not a chip—not a powder—but a remarkable new form of soap in tiny hollow beads so thin they burst into suds the instant they touch water. Four times as thin as chips, Super Suds is the thinnest soap made.

Why Super Suds is Better

In this new soap women have discovered two distinct advantages: First, Super Suds is so thin it dissolves instantly—saves time and trouble. Second, Super Suds dissolves completely—no undissolved soap to leave spots on clothes or film on dishes. Women like Super Suds because it does the work faster and better than any other form of soap.

OCTAGON
Super Suds

See these beads under a magnifying glass. Note their incredible thinness.

The Soap and water blend into one! No need to stir . . . you'll be amazed to see the tiny beads burst into suds as the water strikes them.

If only in justice to yourself . . . won't you try this wonderful new soap right away? Think of the work it will save . . . the tedious kitchen hours you can now cut in half! You simply won't believe that a mere soap can really save you so much time and energy too! It's at your grocer's today. Just phone for Super Suds.

A PATENTED PROCESS . . . Super Suds is made by a process covered by exclusive patents. (Product, process and apparatus covered by U. S. Letters Patent Nos. 1,051,441; 1,090,740; 1,600,503; 1,634,640; and Reissue No. 16,749.)

Mrs. Hugh Cabot

of the New England family of Mayflower ancestry, distinguished in American statesmanship, letters and science. Mrs. Cabot is a loved hostess, and a collector of art.

Mrs. Cameron Tiffany is a member of the widely-known old family. She has two charming homes: a roof-garden apartment in New York, and a quaint old farmhouse on Long Island.

The Decorative Taste of FOUR DISTINGUISHED WOMEN is reflected in these Pleasant Bedrooms

Mrs. Charles R. Crane II

is a beautiful and popular member of Chicago's young married set. She is a member of the Chicago's Woman's Athletic Club and a devotee of golf. Much of the year Mrs. Crane spends at the Crane estate on Lake Geneva, a paradise for her three little sons.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman

whose activity in political affairs, and distinguished service to the Democratic Party have made her known to all women interested in public affairs. At her Sunday evening supper parties one meets all the interesting personalities who visit Washington.

THESE pleasant bedrooms in the homes of four distinguished women bespeak their decorative taste.

A skilful use of color, a thoughtful study of values of line and design make charming rooms which are already notable for comfort. Simmons Beds are appropriately used in all these rooms.

In Mrs. Harriman's Washington home the blue and yellow guest room is furnished with a painted Windsor bed in a delicious blue-green.

Mrs. Cameron Tiffany in her Long Island farmhouse has a charming spindled bed, with counterpane and old-time canopy of rose and green glazed chintz.

Mrs. Hugh Cabot, at present living in Ann Arbor, has chosen Early American beds in mahogany-finish in keeping with fine old furniture transported from her Boston home.

Mrs. Crane has Simmons Beds in all the bedrooms in her Lake Geneva home. She says, "The beds, enameled in lovely colors are most attractive and so practical near the water."

• • •

And these four attractive and successful beds are but a fraction of the immense variety of charming Simmons models! You can always find exactly the right bed for your room, whatever its decorative scheme. Perhaps you are replacing an old-fashioned wood bed or seeking one in harmony with other furniture?

You will find the Simmons wood-finishes—mahogany, maple, walnut—exquisitely grained, a perfect simulation of the natural wood.

Are you in quest of color, the magic that brightens homes? All the smart shades, the chic new combinations used by leading decorators are to be had in Simmons Beds. Being of metal these beds are indestructible and their lovely smooth enamel never chips.

In furniture and department stores Simmons Beds are $10 to $60; No. 1850, $37.50; No. 1025, $35.00. Simmons Beautyrest Mattress $39.50; Simmons Ace Spring $19.75. Look for the name "Simmons." The Simmons Company, New York, Chicago, Atlanta, San Francisco.

SIMMONS BEDS, $10 to $60

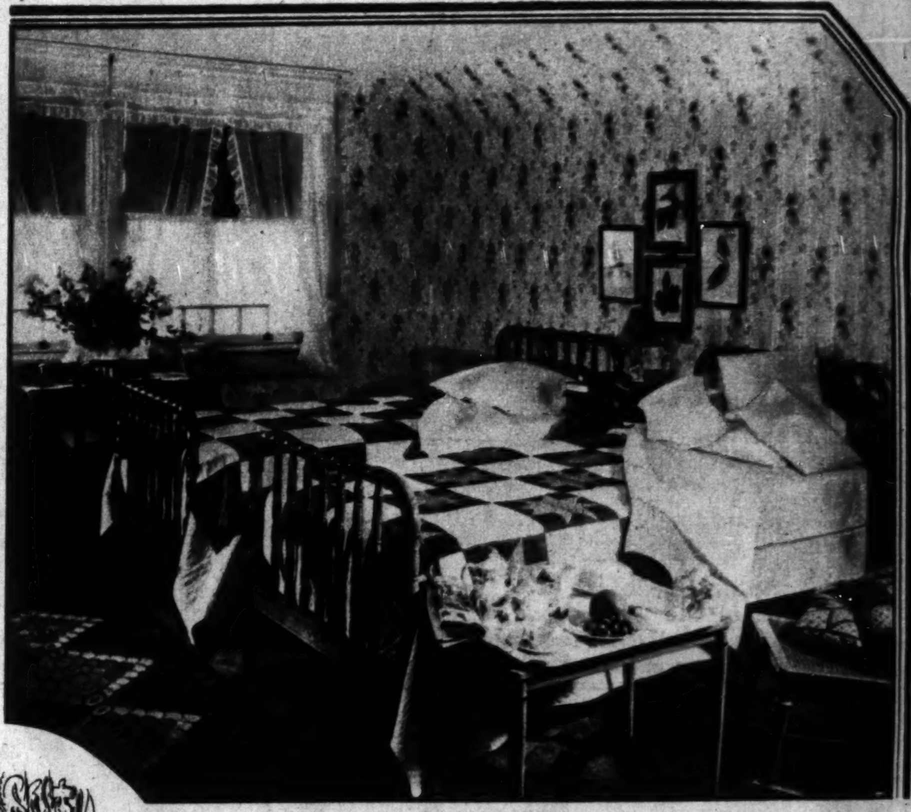
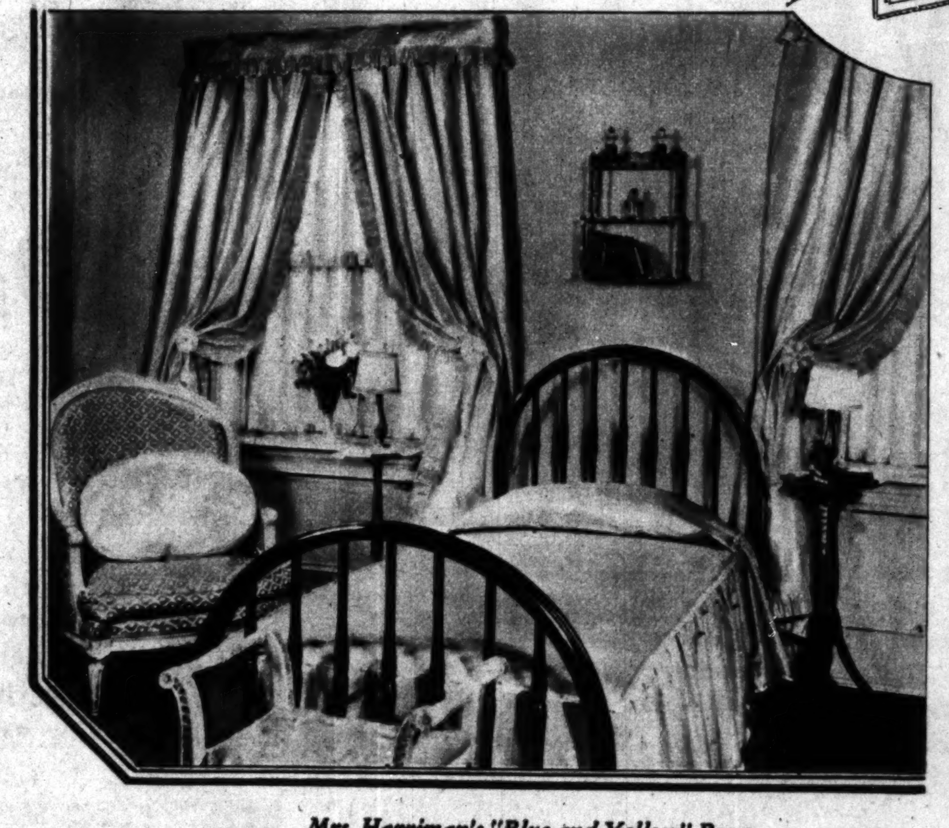
Mrs. Tiffany's Bedroom in her Long Island Home

The color scheme of Mrs. Tiffany's bedroom at "Glen Nevis," her charming old farmhouse, is pink, green and white furnished with fine old family heirlooms and Simmons Bed No. 1540. It is charming with its walnut finish, slim turned spindles and panels with little knots of flowers and a quaint canopy of pink and green glazed chintz.



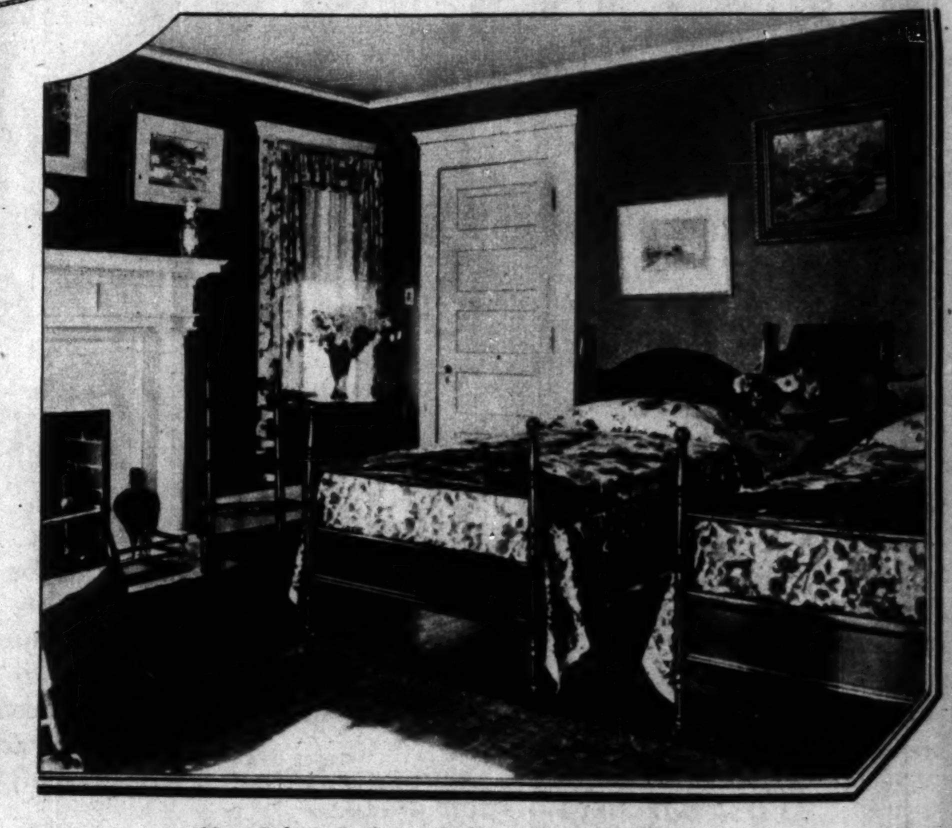
A Bedroom in Mrs. Crane's Lake Geneva Home

In this "Early American" bedroom in Mrs. Crane's country house, with flowered paper, hooked rugs and patchwork quilts the furniture is Simmons in the new stippled parchment finish. The beds are the new Model No. 1850. Mrs. Crane says "The Spool bed, quaintly appealing in any setting, is especially successful in the country house."



Mrs. Harriman's "Blue and Yellow" Room

The walls are painted robin's egg blue, the curtains are of yellow glazed chintz piped with blue to match the walls. A Louis Seize chaise longue and bergere are in toile de Jouy mingling browns and blues. The charming Simmons Bed is Model No. 1588, with flounced and scalloped bedspread of yellow piped with blue, like the curtains.



Mrs. Cabot's Bedroom in her Ann Arbor Home

The walls are tan and the waxed floor is rich with Persian rugs. India prints which serve as window hangings and bedspreads are souvenirs of Mrs. Cabot's journey around the world. The furniture is old mahogany brought from the Cabot's Boston home. The Simmons Twin Beds in Early American design are Model No. 1025, in mahogany finish.

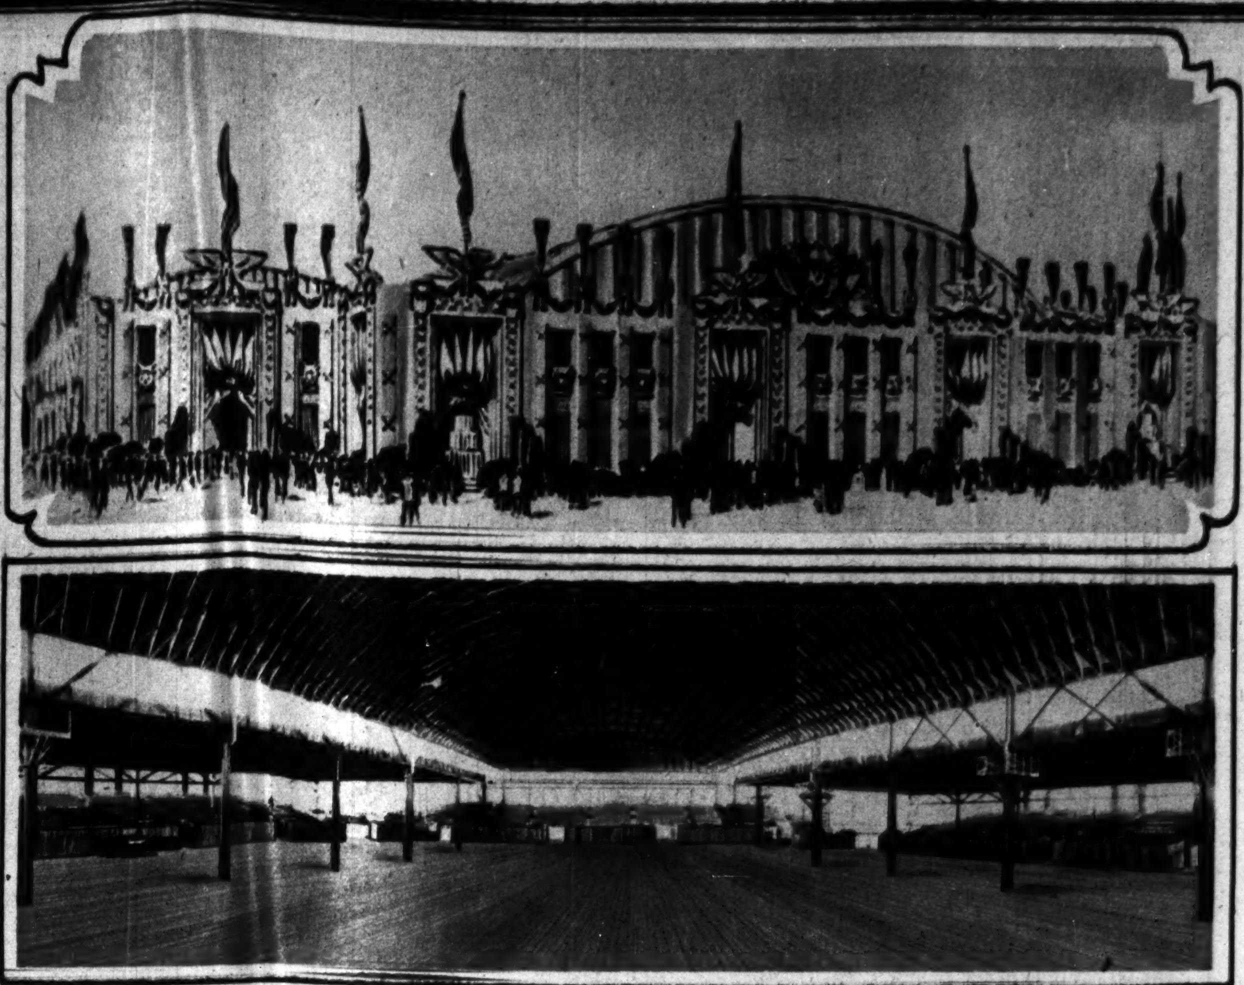
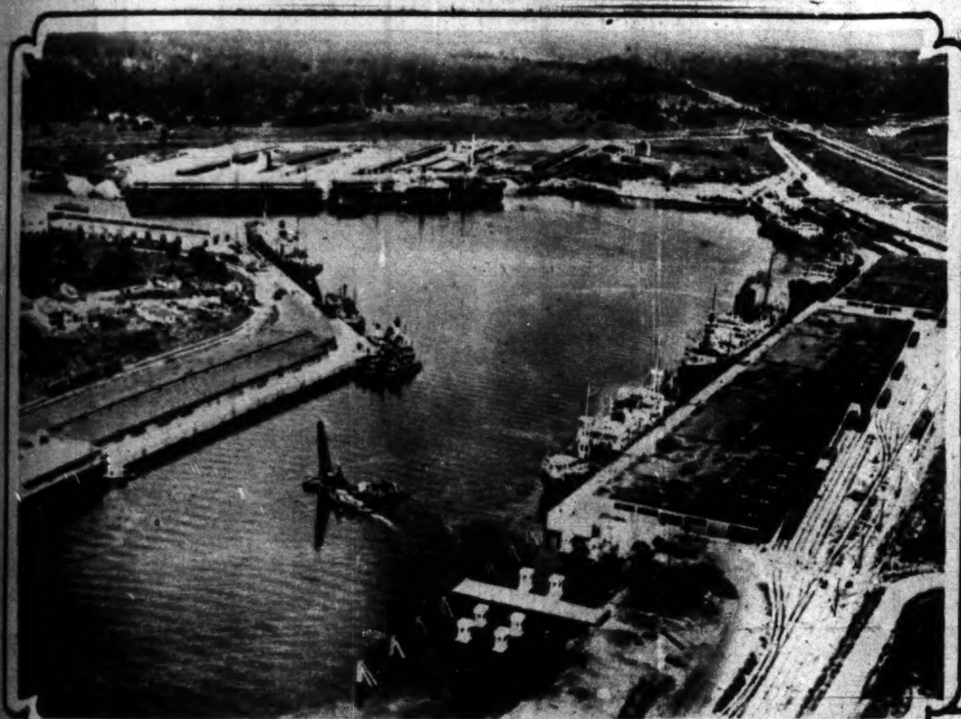
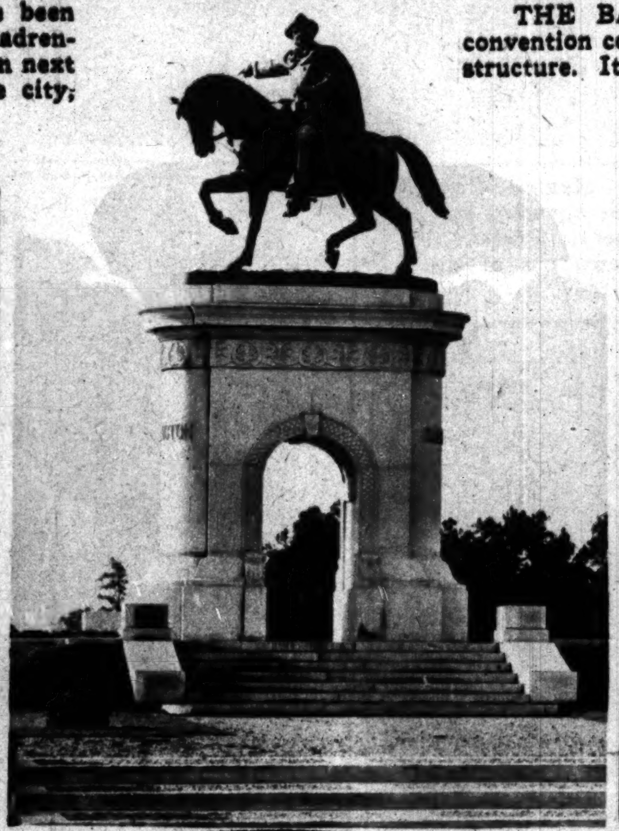
WHERE THE DEMOCRATS MEET—Nearly all the delegates have been picked, and the various factions and partisans are now girding for the quadrennial struggle. So Houston, Tex., scene of the Democratic national convention next month, becomes a center of national interest. This is an aerial view of the city, with the convention coliseum in the foreground.



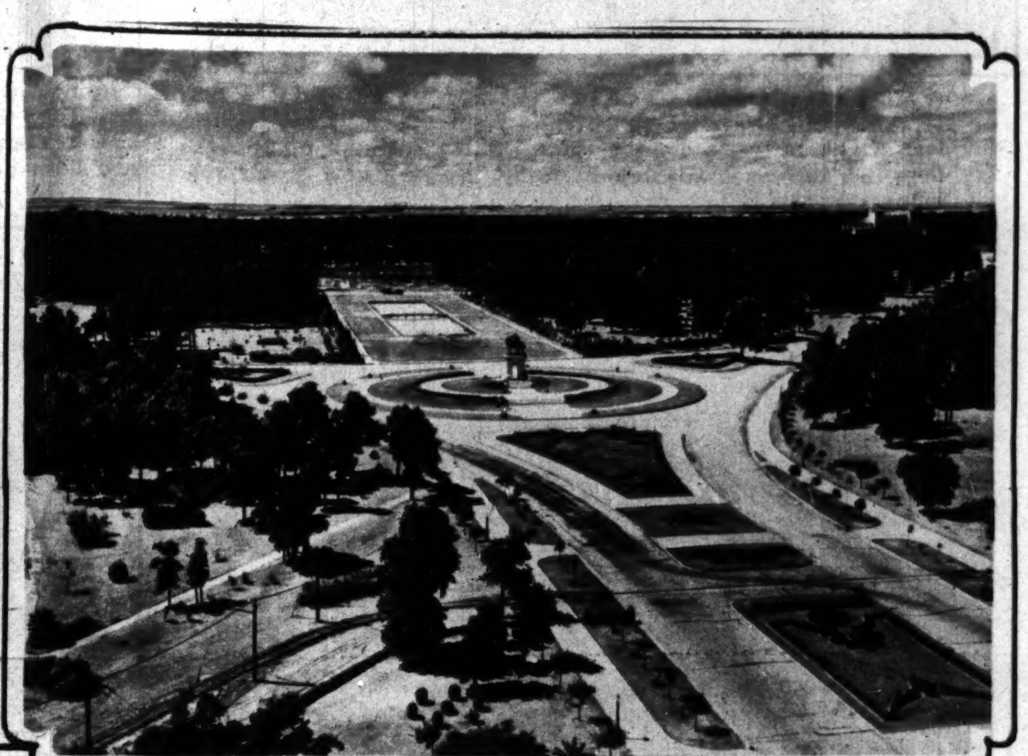
THE BATTLEFIELD—Above, an artist's conception of how the Democratic national convention coliseum at Houston will look when finished. Lower picture, the interior of the vast structure. It is here that the party hosts will assemble in June.



THE SHIP CHANNEL—By deepening and widening an old river bed extending from the city limits to the Gulf of Mexico, a deep water port, one of the wonders of the marine world, has been created. Thus Houston is enabled to fortify its position as an important manufacturing and transportation center.



THE HERO OF THE ALAMO—Gen. Sam Houston, after whom the city is named, still holds a commanding position there, even though the exploits that made him famous transpired nearly a hundred years ago. This striking memorial stands in Hermann park.



A BEAUTY SPOT IN TEXAS—Hermann park, laid out on formal lines and one of the thirty-four recreational centers in Houston. Here the statue of Gen. Houston dominates the view. The general-statesman-hero is remembered chiefly for his work in leading the early Texans to victory in the struggle to obtain independence from Mexico in 1836.

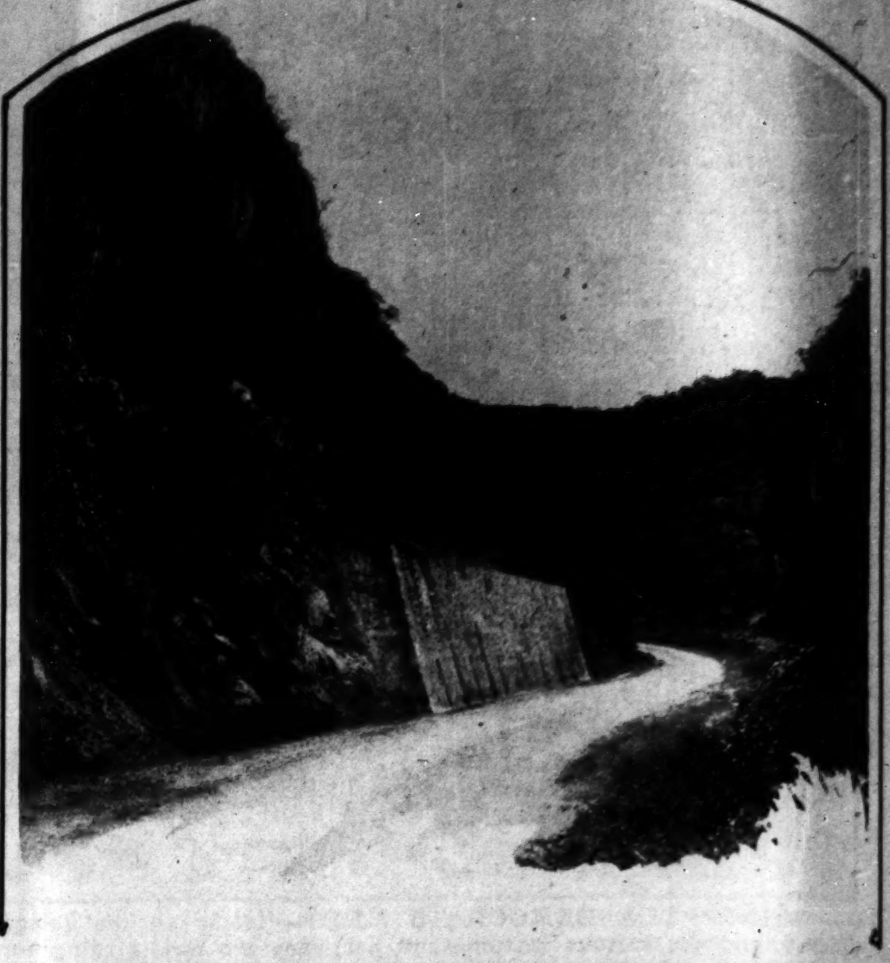
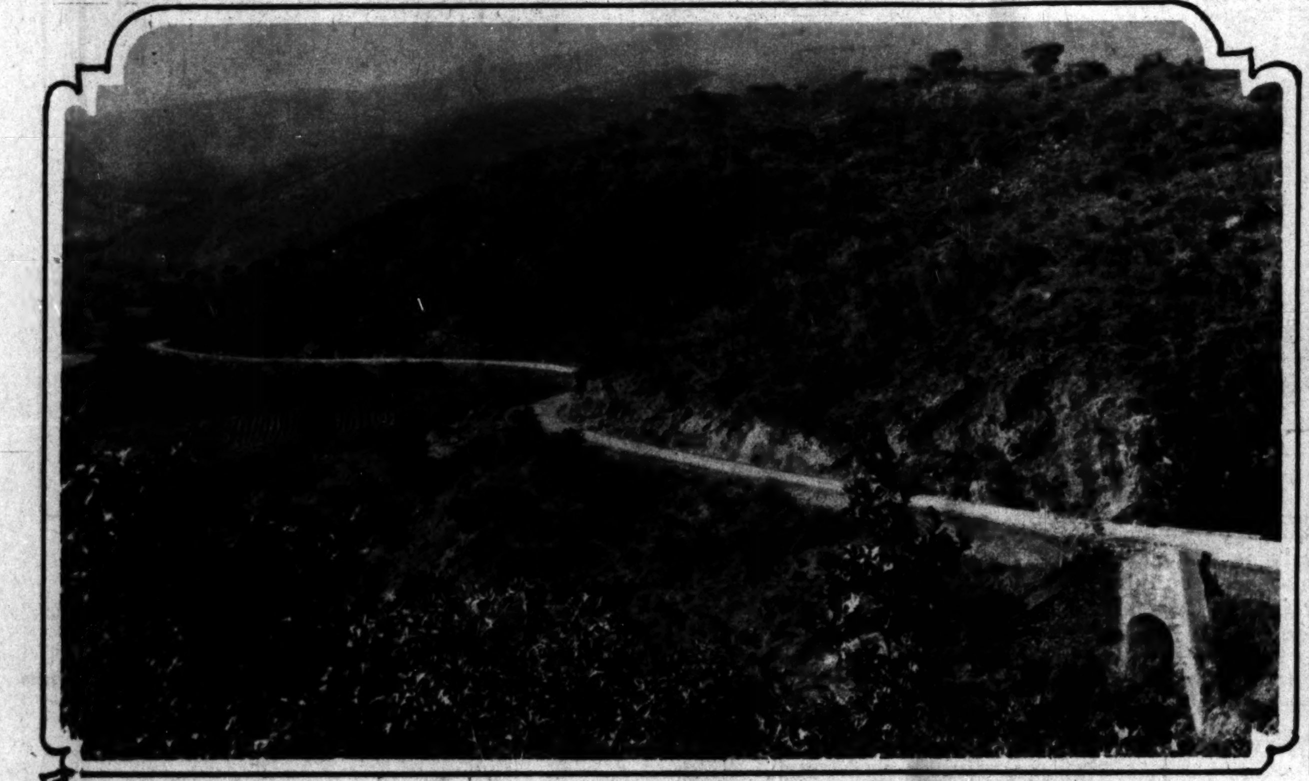
Mexico's New Roads

NEXT MONTH MEXICO WILL OPEN FOR TRAFFIC the new Mexico City-Acapulco highway, which extends from the sea level of the Pacific port to the skyward capital of the nation, a distance of 285 miles, through picturesque mountain scenery. Presented here is a stretch of the new highway, showing how motor roads have been hewn out of the mountains.

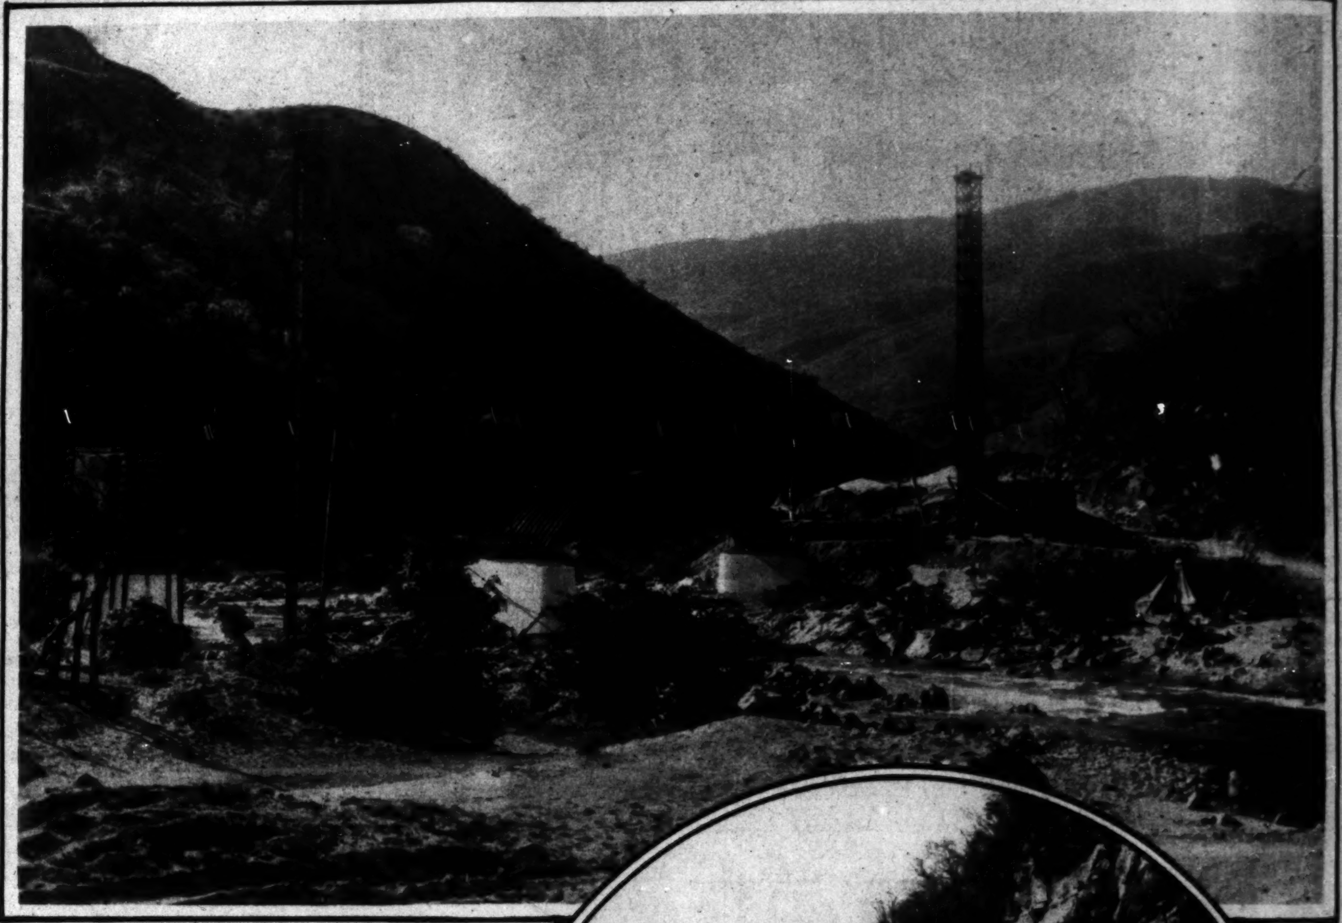


THE NEW MOTOR ROADS are being cut through mountain ranges, but they are built for the future, with masonry carefully provided to prevent slides. At Km. 392 from the capital typical masonry treatment is shown.

(All photographs copyright by Hugo Brehme.)

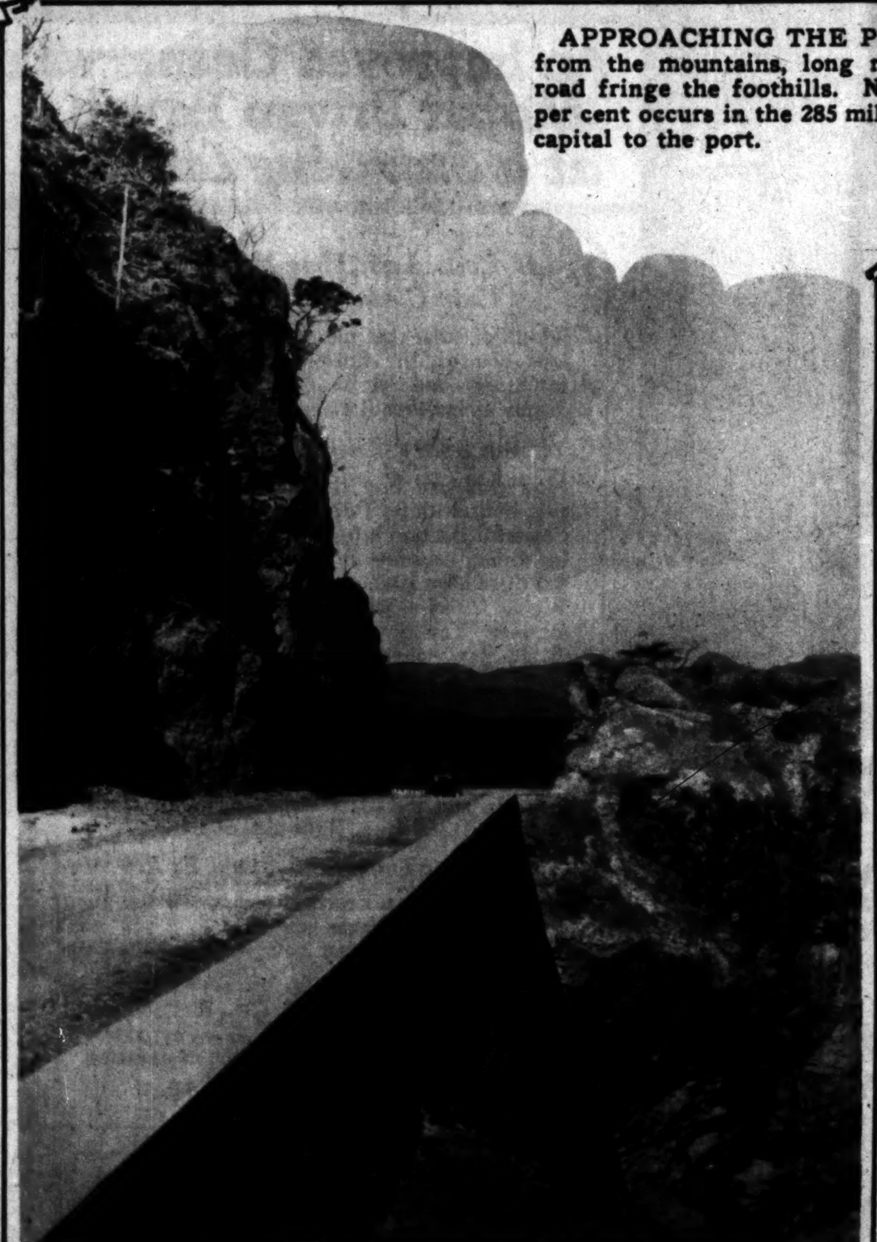


APPROACHING THE PORT OF ACAPULCO from the mountains, long reaches of newly made road fringe the foothills. No grade in excess of 6 per cent occurs in the 285 miles of highway from the capital to the port.



THE LAST ESSENTIAL BRIDGE on the Acapulco highway is nearing completion over the Papagayo river. It is to be opened to traffic in June. Travelers have been passing this point by a ford and detour, but these will be unnecessary in a few weeks.

IN THE REGION OF ZOPILOTE, or Echo canyon, the new road corkscrews around lofty mountaintops for miles. A lusty shout is said to stay "on the air" five minutes if launched from where the car is shown.



CANYON OF JOVERITOS, 394 kilometers from Mexico City, from which point the road drops rapidly down to the sea level of the Pacific. The type of roads blasted from the solid faces of the mountains is clearly shown by the picture—wide, smooth, and unlimited in durability.

"EL PUENTE," near Cuernavaca, built by the Spanish centuries ago, has been reconditioned and smoothly paved as part of the Acapulco highway. It is 79 kilometers from Mexico City.

Science makes possible a new Cream cleanser

astringent and base
. . in One

Smooth it on—wash it off!

Only thirty swift seconds, yet now your skin is cleansed, toned, ready for powder! Now it blooms with the dewy radiance of awakening beauty.

YET it is all done so simply, so easily, so quickly—just one operation, just thirty swift seconds!

And as each day goes by your cheek grows still more luminous and petal-smooth. Becomes velvet-soft, yet firm, fine-textured, vitally radiant. Takes on new challenging loveliness!

Fifteen years of research the famous French House of Pinaud has spent perfecting this extraordinary new preparation.

Famous dermatologists of two continents emphatically declare it the most important discovery ever made in the scientific care of the skin!

As soon as Pinaud's Cream touches your cheek—like a magic magnet it gathers up all the day's dust and powder from the pores. Then at the touch of clear, cool water both cream and dirt vanish away!

For Pinaud's Cream is soluble in water. Instead of the messy, sticky, incomplete wiping process used to remove other creams, you can wash this one away—quickly, delightfully!

It never deposits a single trace of waxy, fatty sediment in your pores, coarsening them, fostering blackheads—as dermatologists point out creams usually do.

And in the brief half-minute this scientific cleansing takes, your skin is toned and suppled too!

Now you need no astringent!

All the fretwork of tiny nerves and muscles just under the surface skin is refreshed and invigorated. How firm and young and glowing your face feels!

Now you need no powder base!

For the delicate oils of Pinaud's Cream supple your skin delightfully, naturally. They resemble more closely the fine natural oils of the skin itself than any ever used in a cream before. There is no greasiness, yet powder clings to the new silken softness of your skin.

Here in one snow-white, silken Cream are Cleanser, Astringent and Powder Base!

Apply Pinaud's Cream lightly, swiftly with the fingertips. You need not rub it in with the strenuous, stretching motion necessary for other creams. Then just wash cream and dirt away in cool water!

Now powder! No astringent is necessary. After this thorough cleansing the pores close naturally. And—so exquisitely soft and supple is the skin that powder clings without an additional "base."

Especially if your skin is suffering from deep-lying accumulations—you will be grateful for the remarkable cleansing power of Pinaud's Cream. The first few times you use it you can actually feel it at work. Feel a faint tingling as it draws the close-packed dirt from the pores—then a new radiant freshness!

Miss Ricard often takes a morning canter through Central Park in New York City. Her flashing white teeth and her winning smile are a familiar sight along the many beautiful bridle paths.

Sound Lovely Teeth

You can have them too, says pretty Miss Leila Ricard, a Colgate user since 1910

How Miss Ricard looked in 1910

YOU should hear Miss Ricard's friends talk about her smile! How they envy those flashing white teeth . . . so brilliant . . . so healthy . . . always so lovely.

Miss Ricard gives much of the credit to Colgate's . . . the dental cream she has used since 1910.

In this country, and in foreign countries the world over, you will find thousands and thousands of men and women who began using Colgate's ten, fifteen, even twenty years ago, and whose teeth are exceptionally sound and beautiful.

There is nothing mysterious about these enviable results. The men and women fortunate enough to secure them did nothing that you cannot easily do yourself.

They visited their dentists for periodic inspections. And they used Colgate's regularly, day after day. Choose your dentifrice on the basis of results.

Follow the lead of those who have kept their teeth sound for years.

Simply adopt for your own use the dentifrice most popular among people with well-preserved teeth.

In such a vital matter as the care of the teeth, could there be any safer guide than the actual experiences of people like yourself?

On one hand you have Colgate's, the chief feature of which is thorough cleansing. On the other you have the fact that countless people who have used Colgate's for years now have exceptionally fine teeth.

CELTIC BRUNETTE

Hair, black—shot with blue fire. Skin, milk white. Eyes of Irish blue. For her: White Powder and Oriental Bloom.

AMBER BLONDE

Crisp beauty here—with hair of yellow-gold and skin of clearest amber. For her: Naturelle Powder with Medium or Orange Bloom.

CREOLE BEAUTY

Skin like creamy velvet. Hair, dark—with hints of copper. Eyes, deep and glowing. For her: Nude Powder and the Medium tone of Bloom.

WATER-LILY BLONDE

Her hair like fine spun gold, her eyes a soft gray blue, her skin white with a hint of water-lily pink. She should mix ⅔ White with ⅓ Flesh-Pink Powder, and use the Light tone of Pompeian Bloom.

Are you sure you know your type?

In this Test lies the Answer and a Secret

by

MADAME JEANNETTE DE CORDET

LET'S get off somewhere together—just you, and your mirror, and me . . . Now! A question . . . Are you perfectly sure and certain that you know your type? . . . Have you ever studied yourself?

But there! I've caught you peering at your eyes and hair, and they will never tell you! For though your eyes and hair may be black as midnight, your skin may be truly blonde! Though your eyes may be blue, and your hair shot with golden lights, your skin-tone may be—near brunette!

Skin-tone—and skin-tone only—can decide. What is yours? Faintly golden? Cream-tinted? Rose-touched? Amber? Olive? Ivory? Have your answer ready, for now comes my secret:

Emphasize your skin-tone, delicately accentuate your type, and your mirror will whisper back to you, "Why, this is you, but a new you, with a new sparkle, a new radiance to your loveliness!"

To gain this flattering effect—not difficult at all! For though American types of beauty are as varied as the lands from which our forebears came, Pompeian has found true accent for each and every one! Among the five shades of Pompeian Beauty Powder you will find your skin-tone—matched like thread to silk!* Among the five tones of Pompeian Bloom—the very tint of your cheeks when they're faintly flushed!

And, should you need it, here's further help. For I have devised a little booklet in which all the leading types are described and pictured in full color, so that you will be certain-sure to find yourself among them. Under each, instructions as to Powder and Bloom. Read them carefully.

Then with this booklet and my Beauty Sampler, which contains five vials of Pompeian Beauty Powder in the five true skin-tone shades, make the surest test in all the world—try the powder on your skin!

Now you've found your type's true accent! Peer into your mirror, and see! Who is this new beauty? Who but you, at your very best?

Now you can purchase your powder and rouge with an assurance you have never known before!

For blended tones, so rarely necessary, see instructions contained in my booklet, "Your Type of Beauty."*

POMPEIAN BEAUTY POWDER and BLOOM

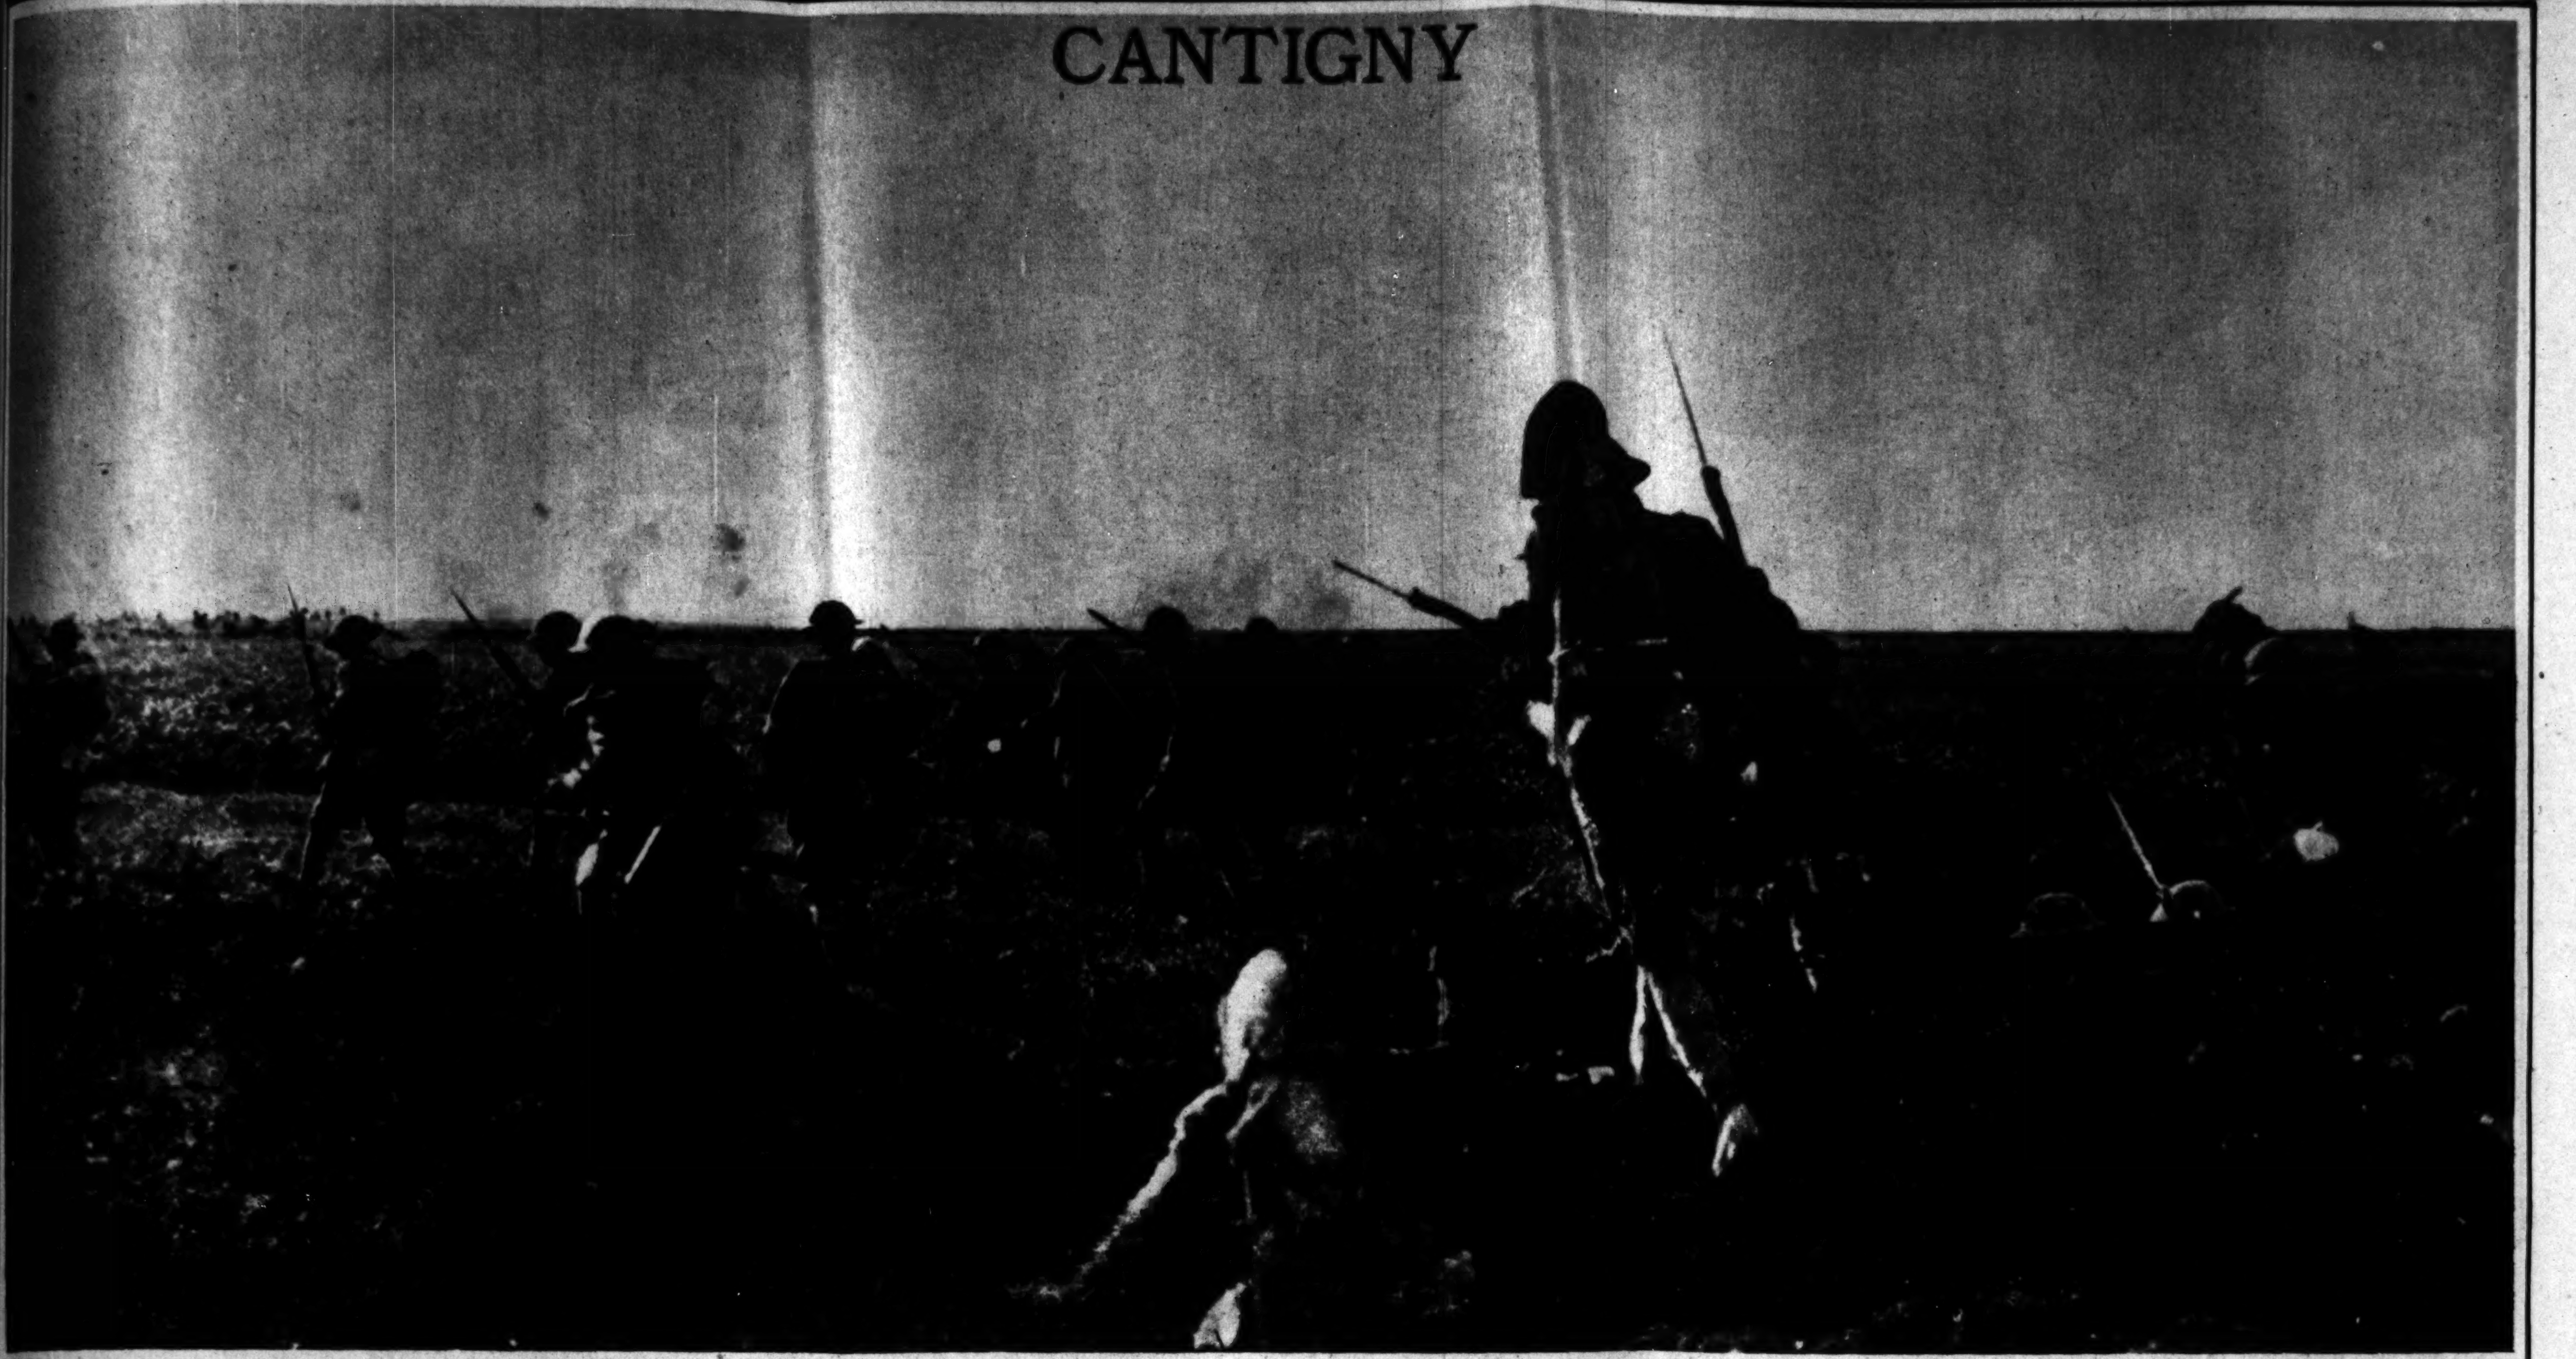
CANTIGNY



TEN YEARS AGO TOMORROW America made its first real attack of the World war, and with signal success. Advancing up a wooded slope and protected by a perfect and annihilating barrage of French and American guns, the Yankee infantry stormed and captured the village of Cantigny and nearby German defenses, scoring a one-mile gain on a two-mile front. The Americans went over in open formation at 6:45 o'clock that fateful Tuesday morning. Leading in the assault was the 28th regiment, First division. A French official photographer caught this remarkable view of the jump-off.
(French Official Photograph.)

MAKING IT TOO HOT FOR 'EM—In a great hurry the enemy left a dugout in the ruins of a house after French flame throwers had sent out a few feelers. The rout at Cantigny constitutes a memorable chapter in our military history—not because of the size of the town captured, but because it marked the beginning of the American major offensive and aided greatly in bucking up the morale of the Allies. (French Official Photograph.)

MOPPING UP THE RUINS—The Yankees, in co-operation with French flame throwers (in the foreground), made a shambles of what little was left by the well-aimed guns of French and American artillery. And then through the succeeding weeks they held the village—the apex of the German salient directed toward Amiens—against continued and bitter counter attacks.
(French Official Photograph.)

THE PRISONER'S SONG—Germans captured at Cantigny May 28, 1918, marched through Le Mesnil-St. Firmin later in the day. Meanwhile the first town to fall before the Americans had been turned into a hell of fire and smoke. Into that inferno had crawled the sinister tanks, followed by the irrepressible doughboys. (U. S. Official Photograph.)

A FALLEN HERO—Private Barnes was fearfully wounded at Cantigny, but he took it uncomplainingly as a part of the game. His first words upon regaining consciousness may well have been: "Gimme a smoke," or, "When do we eat?" It was that spirit that brought eventual triumph over the enemy.
(U. S. Official Photograph.)

AFTER THE BATTLE—When it was all over, the victorious Americans had only compassion for the wounded. The enemy's casualties received the same attention as our own. In this scene an injured German was being lifted on to a stretcher bound for the 28th infantry's dressing station. (U. S. Official Photograph.)

COMPLETES EIGHT-YEAR WORK—Pompeo Coppini has finished the last detail piece of the gigantic $250,000 war memorial to be erected on the University of Texas campus at Austin. A HISTORIC WEAPON—The Lutine gun being taken from Lloyd's old building in London. Originally it was salvaged, along with the Lutine bell, when the ship of that name was sunk in 1799. The bell is still rung at Lloyd's whenever a ship is lost at sea. (Photo from Pictorial Press.)

TRAVELS BY LAND AND SEA—Dr. Thomas A. Jaggar, leading authority on volcanoes, tries out his amphibious automobile before starting on an exploration trip into the Alaskan Aleutian volcanic chain with a group from the National Geographic society. How JAP ROSE PREVENTS BLEMISHES

No matter how often you bathe, if your toilet soap does not penetrate the pores and free them from congestion, your skin may develop blemishes. Dainty women keep their complexions clear, their skin as lovely as rose petals with Jap Rose, the transparent pore cleansing soap.

Its satin lather, enriched with refined glycerine and other beneficial oils, leaves the skin tingling with health and cleanliness and bewitchingly flushed with color.

Only a little is needed to whiten sallow, grimy skin or to beautify the hair. Try it.

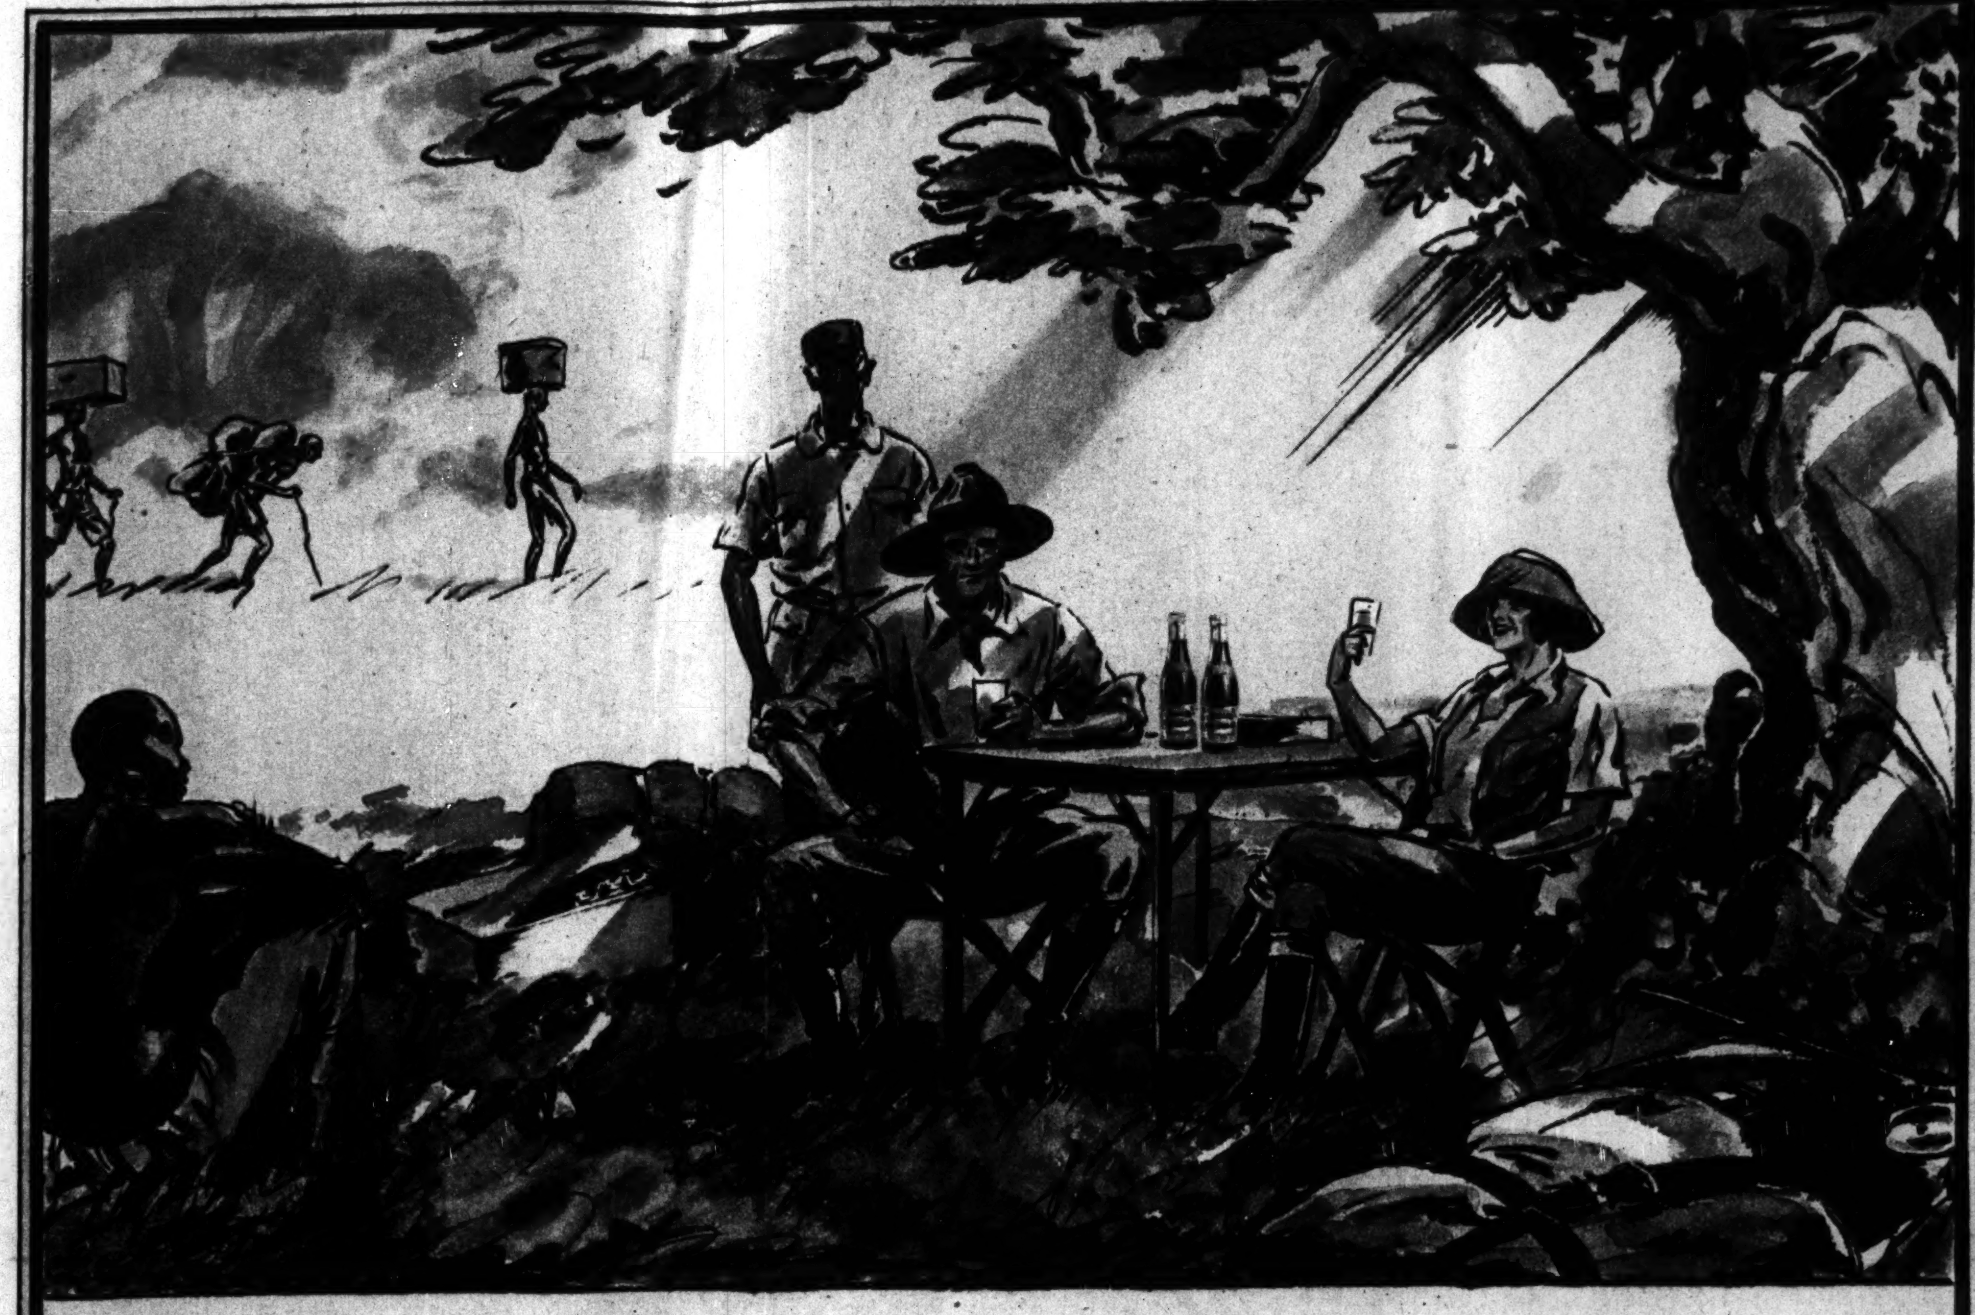
AFTER the safari they sat in the shade and drank this fine old ginger ale



MR. & MRS. JOHNSON IN CAMP NEAR PARADISE LAKE, B.E.A.

The Johnsons do their big game "shooting" with moving picture cameras. While Mr. Johnson grinds the crank, Mrs. Johnson stands by with rifles in case their subjects object.

FIVE hundred miles north of Nairobi on the shores of Paradise Lake, British East Africa, live Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson. Rhinoceroses tree them. Lions roar at them. Wild elephants steal sweet potatoes from their back garden. The nearest telephone is 500 miles away. There is no corner grocery store. See them sitting in their tent after a day's safari—content, tired, happy — drinking "Canada Dry."

"Canada Dry" appeals to these famous game photographers

Mrs. Johnson writes, "We keep 'Canada Dry' cool in the tropics by putting it in canvas water chargols. By dinner-time it is 7 degrees cooler than the air—almost as good as if we had ice." And just recently, January 9, 1928, Mr. Johnson cabled, "'Canada Dry' proving invaluable on Nile." Just another instance that the distinction and favor of this beverage is world wide.

After a hot day lying in ambush to catch a picture of a giraffe drinking at a water hole, or perched in a tree to take movies of lions hunting through the tall grass, these two return to their tent and find contentment in the subtle flavor of this fine old ginger ale. How it quenches their thirst! Truly, a refreshing beverage!

It is the same the world over ... Claridge's in London ... the Houses of Parliament at Ottawa ... in many New York hotels and clubs ... in countless homes throughout the United States. "Canada Dry" has won popularity because of its distinctive flavor.

There are very definite reasons for this distinctive flavor. Only the purest ingredients are used. The Jamaica ginger is of the finest quality. "Canada Dry" is blended and balanced under laboratory methods of exactness. It is tested hourly for purity.

Exact methods produce its fine flavor

Constant watchfulness prevents any variation from the high standards set. And a secret method of carbonation insures uniformity of charging—thus a large part of the reason for the uniform flavor of "Canada Dry." You cannot find a purer, mellower ginger ale.

There is no capsicum (red pepper) in "Canada Dry." That is only another reason why it is such a delightful ginger ale, for, drink as much of it as you like, it has no unpleasant, burning after-effect. There is no bite, no disagreeable taste to "Canada Dry." The ginger in it is good for you too. Many hospitals in this country and Canada serve it.

So, drink "Canada Dry" with dinner tonight! Look in its cool, crystal depths! Relish its subtle, alluring, "dry" flavor. Taste it! And know that here at last is a real ginger ale!

All day the Johnsons lie in ambush to photograph such big game as this.

For Decoration Day

You'll find the Hostess Package of twelve bottles a convenient way to buy "Canada Dry," particularly over the holiday, if you are entertaining guests or planning a motor trip.

REIGH COUNT, the "big red horse" that raced to immortality in the Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs, is decorated with the wreath of triumph. Jockey Chick Lang, who rode the race of his life to win the $55,375 purse for Mrs. John D. Hertz of Chicago, shares in the adulation of the greatest crowd in Kentucky Derby history. The new Fordor Sedan is a great family car because of its beauty, safety, speed, reliability, comfort, low first cost and low cost of up-keep. Wide and roomy, with generous seat space and ample leg room for all five passengers. Furnished in a pleasing variety of beautiful two-tone color harmonies, as are all the new Ford cars.

THE NEW FORDOR SEDAN

A strikingly beautiful car distinguished by its long, low streamline body and unusual riding comfort

THE new Fordor Sedan is a strikingly beautiful car because of its long, low streamline body, attractive colors, and the many distinctive features of finish and appointment usually found only in custom built bodies.

The cowl sweeps down in smoothly rounded curve to the narrow belt moulding which runs from the front of the hood on a straight line back and around the car. The roll belt beneath the wide windows and the rounded top and rear quarter further emphasize this impression of flowing line and graceful contour.

Set against the rich and artistic colors of the car are the heavily nickeled radiator, headlamps and door handles — smart touches of bright metal that add a great deal to the attractiveness of the car.

The interior of the Fordor Sedan is also unusually rich in finish and appointment. The wide, deeply cushioned seats are of the comfortable lounge type, set at just the right tilt, and upholstered in soft woolen cloth with brown hairline stripe. Trimming is in light brown, in pleasing harmony with the upholstery.

Embossed cloth paneling around the doors and on the seat in the front compartment and arm rests, flexible robe rail and oval bow-light in rear compartment are other features which help to give the new Fordor Sedan the appearance and refinements of a custom built car.

All of these details of beauty, convenience and finish you will be quick to note when you see the new Fordor Sedan. But only by riding in it can you fully appreciate the remarkable riding comfort that makes the new Ford cars such a joy to drive.

One reason, of course, is the use of Houdaille hydraulic shock absorbers, formerly provided as standard equipment on only the most expensive automobiles. Yet even these shock absorbers of themselves do not account for the complete riding comfort of the new Ford.

Equally important are the design and construction of the new transverse springs, the low center of gravity, and what engineers speak of as the low ratio of unsprung weight to the sprung weight of the car.

All of these factors combine to soften or eliminate the force of road shocks and to make the new Ford an exceptionally comfortable and easy-riding car at all speeds. Even rough roads may be taken at a fast pace without hard jolts or bumps or the exaggerated bouncing rebound which is the cause of most motoring fatigue.

By all means, see this new Ford Fordor Sedan and arrange for a demonstration. You will know then that it is not just a new automobile—not just a new model—but the advanced expression of a new idea in modern, economical transportation.

The new Ford Roadster sells for $385; the Phaeton for $395; the Tudor Sedan for $495; the Coupe for $495; the Business Coupe for $495; the Sport Coupe, with wide, deeply cushioned rumble seat, for $550; and the Fordor Sedan for $625. (F. O. B. Detroit.)

These prices include four-wheel brakes, four Houdaille hydraulic shock absorbers, five steel-spoke wheels, four 30 x 4.50 balloon tires, electric windshield wiper on closed cars, speedometer, gasoline gage on instrument panel, dash light, mirror, combination stop and tail light, theft-proof coincidental ignition lock, high pressure grease gun lubrication.

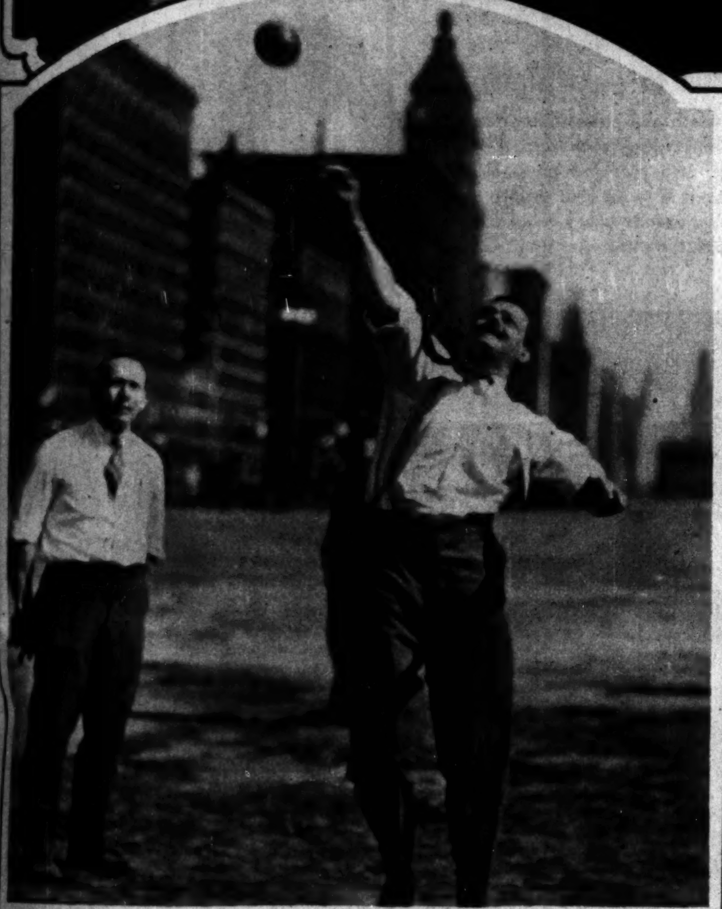
THE VARSITY CREWS ARE WITH US AGAIN—Columbia takes the measure of Pennsylvania and Princeton in the intercollegiate race for the Childs cup at Princeton, N. J. They take their rowing seriously in the east, as a glance at the crowd on the shores of Lake Carnegie reveals. (Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)



RAH! RAH! Eighteen years after Joe Horner Jr. of Michigan won the shotput in the eastern intercollegiates over C. C. Little of Harvard—now Michigan's president—the two reproduced the contest on Chicago's lake front. When friends stepped off the distance they were surprised to find that Horner had just duplicated his margin of 1910. Horner is now a publisher at Green Bay, Wis. Both he and Dr. Little were in Chicago for Michigan's triennial. (Photograph from Underwood & Underwood.)

$875,000 FOR A RAPHAEL—Sir Joseph Duveen, the British collector, paid a world's record price for this madonna and child, known as the "Large Cowper Madonna." The purchase was from Lady Desborough of London. (Photograph from Wide World.)

CHUGGING ITS LAST CHUG, the oldest automobile in France took the Abbe Gavoix of Montigny and a comely companion for a "spin" in Paris, then the abbe gave it decent interment in a museum. Over here it would still be snorting about some campus—any college boy would give his left leg for such a treasure. (Photograph from Underwood & Underwood.)

A QUEEN OF ENGLISH SPORTS—Miss Carrie Pickles, possessor of more trophies and medals than she knows what to do with, retained her title of English individual women's amateur athletic champion in national competitions at Leeds. She is expected to be an English representative in the Olympics. (Photograph from International.)

REVEALED . . . BY YOUR MIRROR

Dental arches (teeth and gums) differ. Each requires a different type of tooth brush to win gloriously white teeth, coral-firm gums. Read below how easy it is to let your mirror tell your type, to know exactly what kind of brush is best for you to use.

1—Tufted Pro-phy-lac-tic. Most dental arches are full-formed and require this type of brush.

3—Masso Pro-phy-lac-tic. For dental arch that has tender gums. Massages as it cleans.

Give your teeth this one chance

Choose and use the Pro-phy-lac-tic Brush that is specifically designed for your dental arch

THANKS to the help and advice of the dental profession, Pro-phy-lac-tic now presents three new and distinctly different types of tooth brushes. Each fills a specific dental need. All embody important advances in design. All have won the hearty approval of leaders in the movement for greater care of teeth and gums.

To choose the right brush for yourself, simply spend ten seconds with your mirror. Decide what type of dental arch (teeth and gums) you have. Then choose and use the Pro-phy-lac-tic that is scientifically designed to bring your type the good health that is rightfully yours.

It's easy. If your mirror shows a dental arch of normal size as shown by a full-formed face and mouth—the brush for you is the new Tufted Pro-phy-lac-tic.

But if your mirror reveals a small facial contour, your dental arch, too, is small, more oval in shape. Then the Oval Pro-phy-lac-tic is the right brush for you.

Now look again. Examine your gums carefully. If they are pale and lifeless-looking—you need the new Masso Pro-phy-lac-tic. This brush massages as it cleans. It suits both large or small dental arches that require special care.

In a few weeks—the difference

Use your new Pro-phy-lac-tic for a few weeks. Then look into your mirror again . . . if you want to see how much the right Pro-phy-lac-tic Brush can do to give you whiter, sounder teeth—firmer, healthier gums.

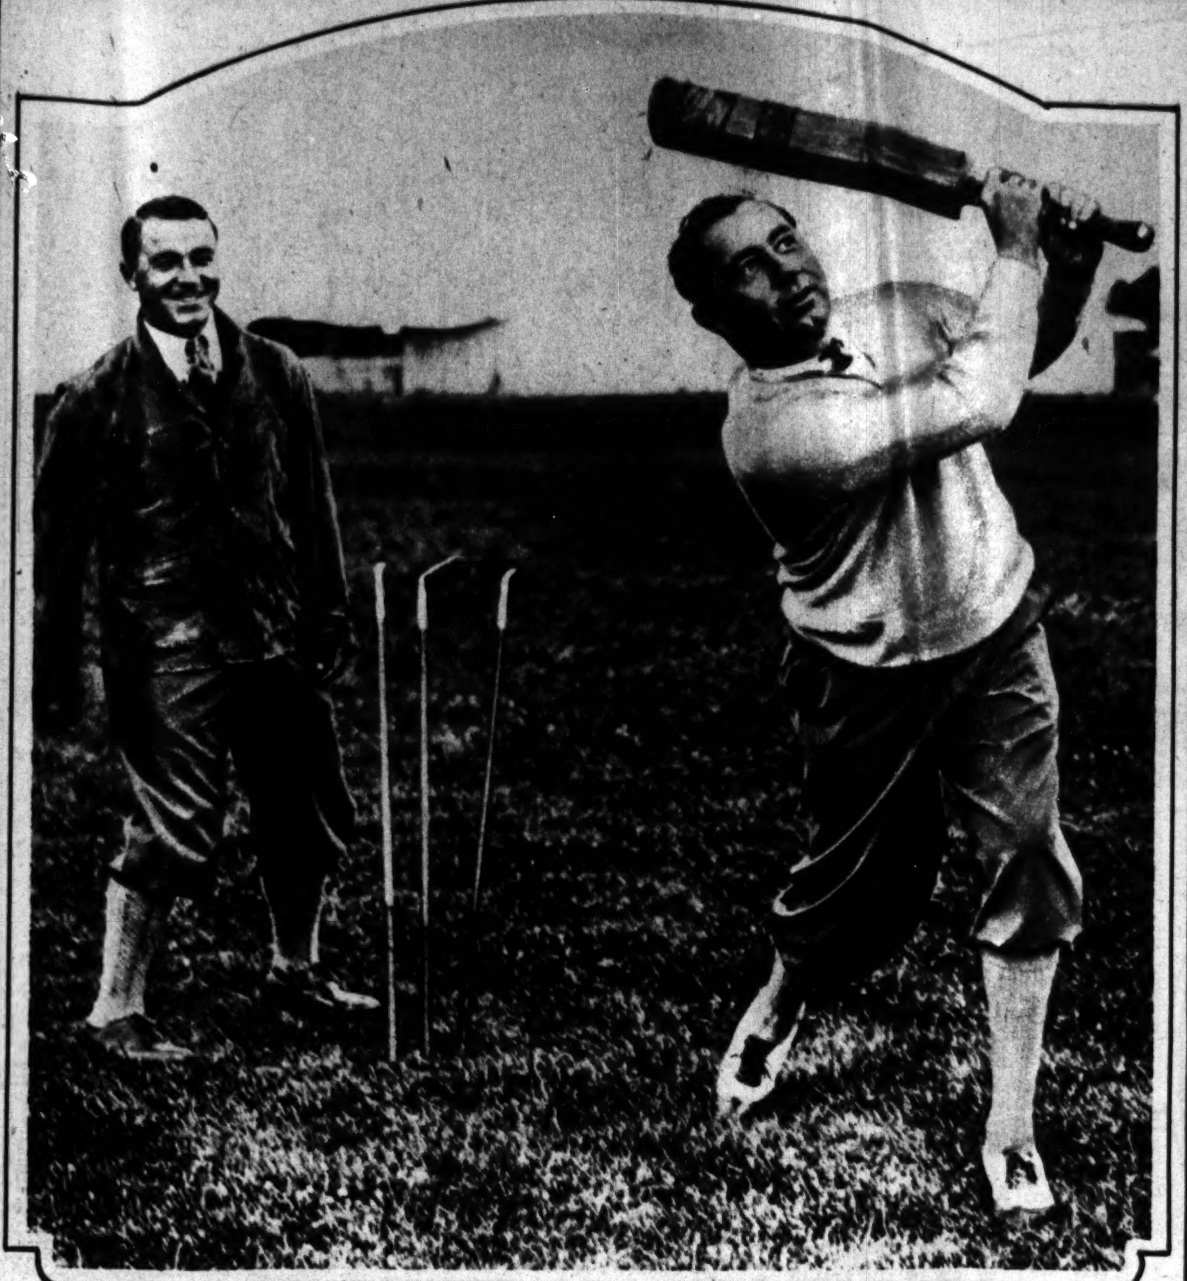
AMONG THE IMMORTALS—A bust of Rufus Choate, American lawyer and statesman of the first half of the nineteenth century, was among the four added this year to the Hall of Fame on New York university's campus. Helen and Priscilla Choate did the unveiling. The other three so honored were Louis Agassiz, Samuel F. B. Morse, and John G. Whittier. (Photograph from Wide World.)



YANKEE PROS TURN PRO-BRITISH for a moment. Walter Hagen, three times winner of the British open golf championship, and Gene Sarazen, who was runner-up this year, limbered up at Sandwich, England, by indulging in the game of cricket. Walter wielded the bat, and Gene waited watchfully for eventualities.

These two kinds of face powder

No one face powder blends with all types of skin—so Stillman has made two kinds of powder. One — "Stillman Oriental" — clings wonderfully to the normal and excessively dry skin. It does not smart, will not irritate or flake. Is distinctively different from other powders. An entirely new formula that soothes the dry skin and keeps it soft and natural.

For the oily type of skin—"Stillman Bouquet"—spreads smoothly, and clings, too. Will not clog the pores, which is most important for this type of skin. Blends perfectly, removes all skin shine, making your complexion flawless and irresistibly natural.

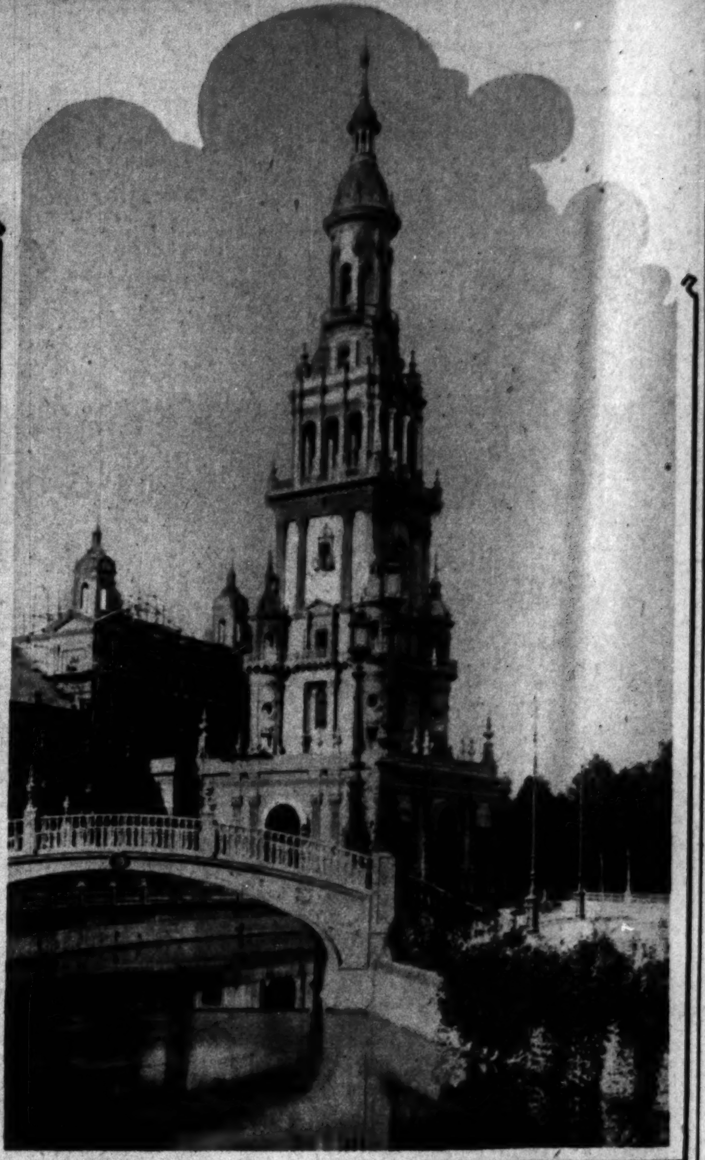
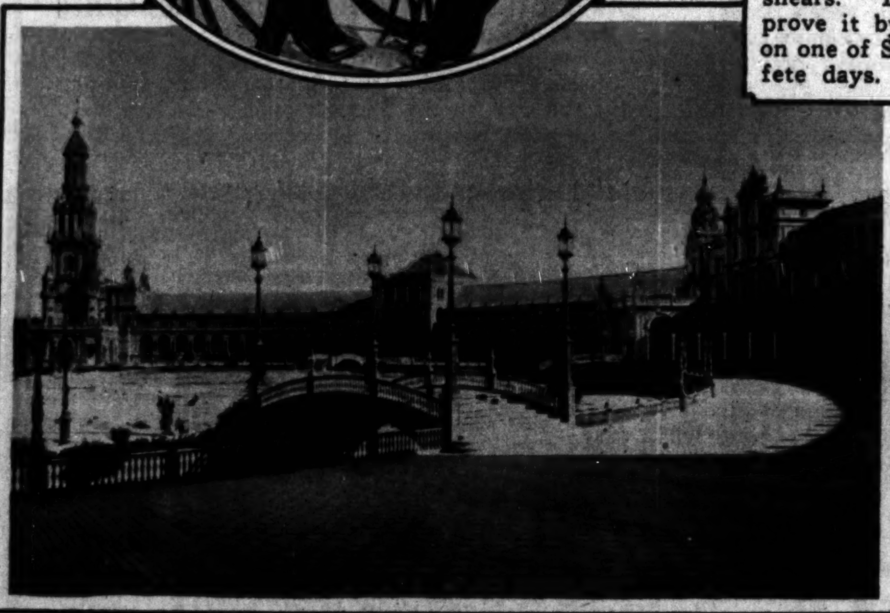
IN SUNNY SEVILLE—The old-time capital of the Castilian kingdom, now the capital of the province of Seville, is to be the scene this fall of the Iberian-American exposition. In this picturesque city of fountains and flowers the Plaza de America, shown above, will be one of the main attractions.

THE BARBER OF SEVILLE would have plenty of work to do were he still at large. The high combs and mantillas of the debs and sub-debs haven't yet given away to the bobber's shears. Two young ladies prove it by their appearance on one of Spain's innumerable fete days.



THE OLD AND THE NEW—While portions of Seville have been modernized, a great part of it still wears its characteristically Moorish aspect. Here, in an otherwise twentieth century setting, are the exposition's tower and bridge.



THE PLAZA DE ESPANA—Opening October 1, the exposition promises to be rich in historic and architectural interest. It will depict the sweep of time from the Iberia of the ancient Greeks to the machinery age of the present. The Iberians existed on the Spanish peninsula as early as the fifteenth century B. C. and were there when the Romans conquered Gaul.

YOUTH WILL HAVE ITS FLING—A typical country outing and farm festival comes to a halt in the highly cultivated region near Seville. In the bower of brilliant southern vegetation the senors and senoritas—and the inevitable bull—make merry and no doubt consume large quantities of the Spanish equivalent of potato salad and lettuce sandwiches.

Is there any other soap recommended for delicate garments, that you would think of using on your face? Ivory is safe for the loveliest complexions. So, of course, it is safe for anything that water alone will not harm. Ivory Flakes is pure Ivory Soap.

$500.00 stockings? They need extra care

BUT $1.25 STOCKINGS NEED IT TOO, SAYS THIS FAMOUS SHOP

$50 . . . $150 . . . $250 . . . $500 stockings! They lay before our wondering eyes on the counter of a famous Fifth Avenue shop. Such cobwebs of hand-made lace and sheer-spun silk, that we hardly dared to touch them!

"Do women actually buy them—and wear them—and wash them?" we asked the manager.

"Yes, they do," he assured us, "though, of course, they need special care!"

"And what do you mean by special care?" we asked him.

He said they must be squeezed—oh, so carefully—in cool, bland suds. Rinsed in clear, tepid water. And, for the soap, he suggested Ivory.

Your own stockings need the same care

"In fact, any silk stocking, no matter what it costs," he added, "needs a mild, neutral soap like Ivory. One washing with harsh soap may weaken the delicate fibers."

GEORGE O'NEILL

For all kinds of fine silks and woolens, salespeople in New York's 12 great department stores advise Ivory. And in the finest shops of 22 other leading cities, too, salespeople say: "Ivory is safest."

Because silk is so sensitive to soaps which are not quite safe, salespeople, too, in smart shops—in New York, Chicago, and other great cities—advise Ivory.

Because these experts know that perspiration quickly injures silk, they say that you should wash your stockings after every wearing. Naturally for such frequent washing, you wish to use the purest, mildest soap!

Ivory is so pure and safe that doctors everywhere recommend it to bathe babies. So, of course, it is safe for any fabric which pure water alone will not harm. With an Ivory cleansing after every wearing, your own stockings will wear their longest—for Ivory gives to all delicate silks the extra protection of a fine face soap.

PROCTER & GAMBLE

FREE—a little book which tells you how to wash your finest things. It answers such questions as: "Can it be washed? Will it shrink? How can I whiten yellowed silk and wool? How can I cleanse sweaters, georgettes?" etc. It is yours, free, if you will send a post card to: Winifred S. Carter, Dept. 60-E27. P. O. Box 1801, Cincinnati, Ohio.

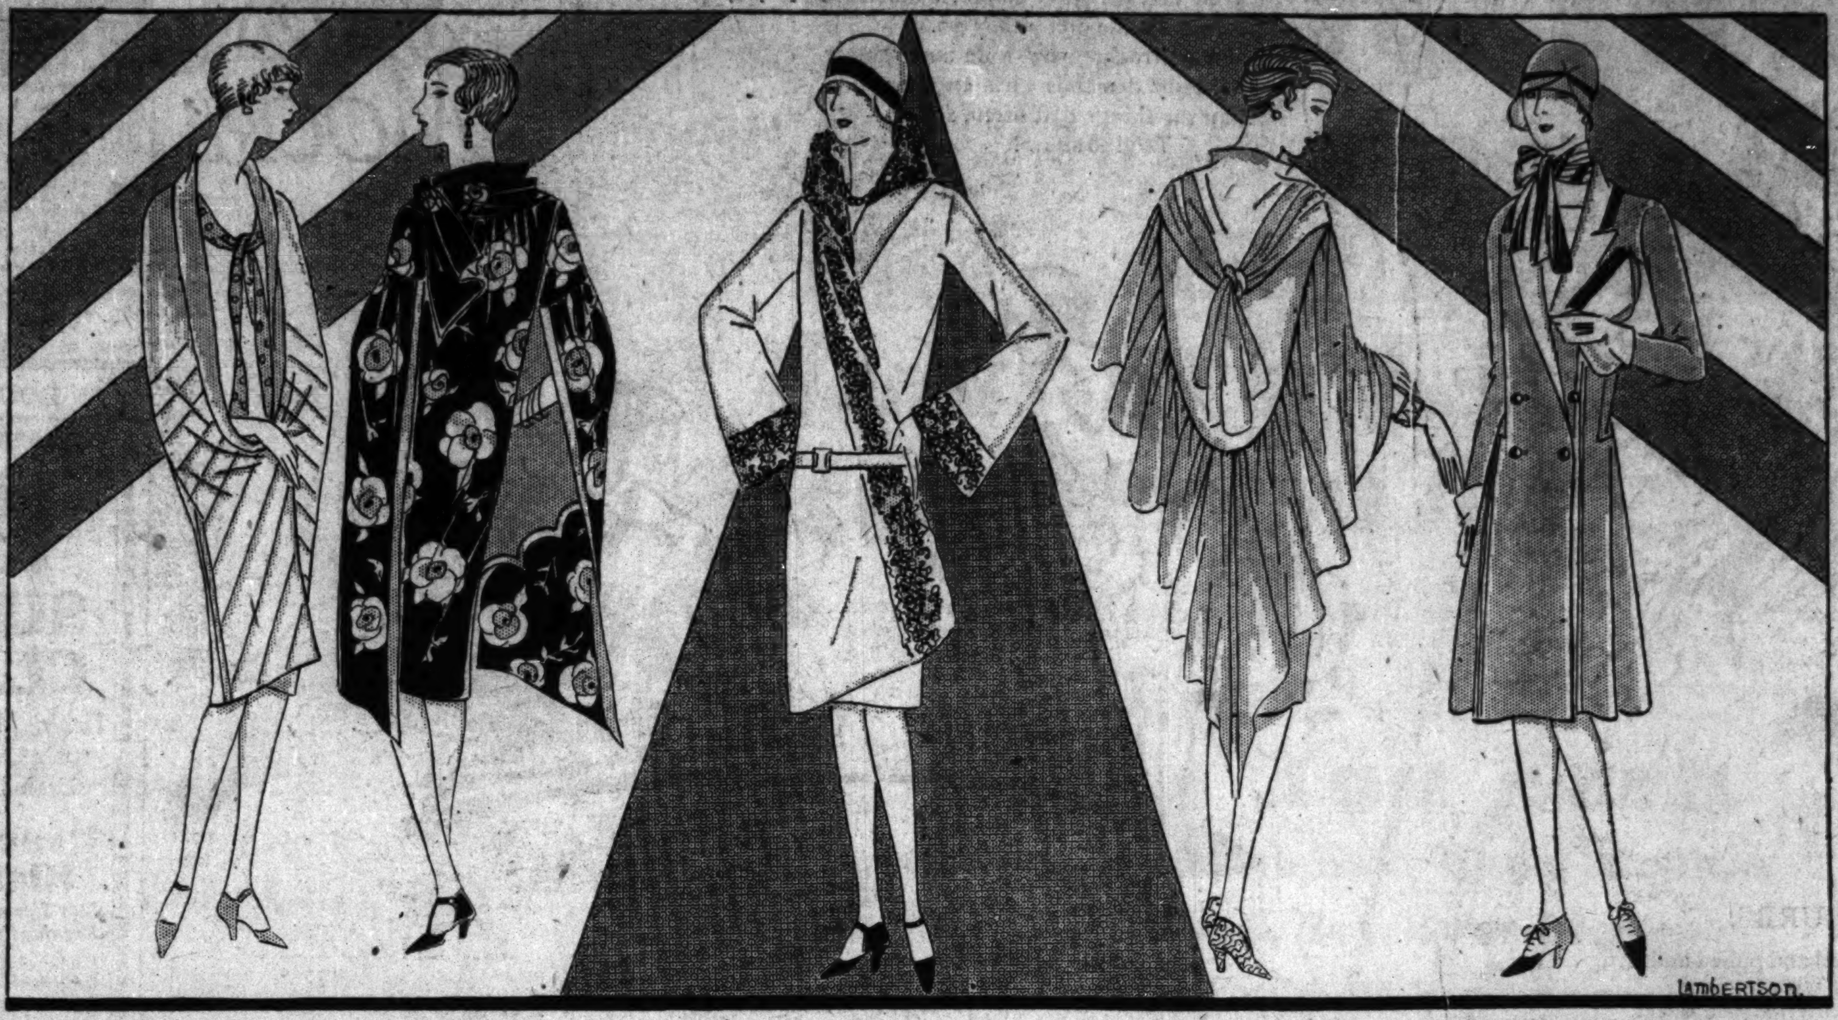
New Silhouettes Give Variety to Our Summer Wraps

Capes of Chiffon and of Delicate Printed Fabrics, and Coats of Light Materials Trimmed with Fur or Worn with a Scarf, Show the Way the Wind of Fashion Is Blowing.

BY CORINNE LOWE.



That the wrap and printed scarf have formed a summer trust is the message of this Mirande cape carried out in navy wool crepe and adjusted with a polka dotted silk crepe scarf in navy and white, shown at the extreme left.

Second, one of the new evening capes with long panels shirred over the shoulder and with scarf collar is carried out in taffeta moire that shows pink, yellow and green on black. The frock of the same design in chiffon, which we show below, has a pouf of the taffeta.

In the center a stunning model from Vionnet employs shaved lamb in darker beige than the cloth background and shows us a new trick with the crossed collar.

Fourth, a Premet chiffon cape bears witness to the dip in the back achieved by so many new wraps.

Last, from Bernard comes the new kind of coat with high waist line and flared skirt. The last is developed in navy serge with beige cotton trimming and brass buttons.

NEW YORK.—(Special Correspondence.)—A friend of mine has just bought in Paris one of the new Vionnet coats which we illustrate on this page. To any one saturated with wraps that owe all their chic to geometric lines—seams, tucks and incrustations—this distinguished creation must appeal with all the force inherent in one remark that used to fall like the dew of Hebron upon my parched mathematical spirit. Yes, when I saw this coat I felt exactly as I used to do when I heard that ogre of my mid-teens, the geometry instructor, say, "Ladies and gentlemen, the class is dismissed."

Well, it isn't such good news as that. These garments, ingeniously tucked and seamed and banded, are still going on almost as much as ever. Nearly all of the greatest designers of coats and capes are making these same old geometric effects and making them with all the finesse that every fair minded woman must admire. Nevertheless, in this Vionnet model, as well as in numerous other new wraps, we detect the imminence of a change. This summer many rivals have sprung up to distract us, and if we continue to cling to the geometric ideals it is because we have an unwholesome fidelity to points, triangles, etc.

Personally, I regard this Vionnet creation as one of the most dashing things I have seen this year. It is made of a light beige cloth and it is trimmed with shaved lamb in darker tone. This shaved lamb is echoed in tone by a leather belt, and anent this detail one must have something to say. At last, apparently, the great world of the French couture has looked with compassion upon multitudes of crippled women. They have watched us clutching our mantles about us until we have brought on neuritis—there really ought to be some technical name for it, such as clutcher's cramp—and at last they have given us a free hand. Moved by the spectacle of our suffering, they have made many new wraps which are either fastened or else don't require fastening.

As a trimming for the summer wrap, shaved lamb is ideal. Since it is not much heavier than cloth itself, it removes a familiar objection to fur. No, it is not too warm for mountain or seashore, and even the more moderate summer days in town are not necessarily penalized by the lamb trimmed coat.

In its present form, this wrap is designed for street wear. Yet there is no necessity of clinging to this original formula. Why not make it in white cloth as a resort coat and trim it with the same beige fur, attended by the same beige leather belt? Certainly this provides a relief from the bromidic models of fur trimmed white coats that have so long dotted our summer landscape. Of course, the combination of white cloth and beige fur is properly approved, but there is no reason why both fur and belt should not be brought into the same tone.

As we have said, this Vionnet model represents only one of many moves away from the geometry class. Equally eloquent is the Bernard model at the extreme right of our page. Here is a model which, we might say, skirted the coat. The full skirt in conjunction with that raised waist line, so widely evident in the gowns of the season, makes a note that is absolutely new among wraps. Logically enough, one connects this summer garment with the new dresses, which, molding the figure and flaring at the hem, promise an extensive revival of the modified princess silhouette.

Blue serge is the medium selected here for a coat which will serve in numerous different capacities—for resort, street and travel. It is collared in beige cotton éponge, and a glimpse of the cotton is had at the wrists. Of the same material is fashioned a big shaggy flower, which, together with the gold buttons, relieves the somber navy blue of the background. Incidentally, one must comment again in connection with those same gold buttons upon the various colors and modes that suggest a revival of the military motif in dress.

A coat like this is almost dependent upon scarf or cravat. In fact, the scarf of beige crêpe, knotted cravat fashion, and exploiting a stripe of vivid red, is to be considered an tached to the garment, and as a witness to this type of treatment let us turn to the Mirande cape at the extreme left of our page. Here is a cape of navy blue wool crêpe, the front sections of which are treated to those familiar slanting tucks. What really attracts us to this model is the presence of a scarf attached to the inner side of the collar and endowing the garment with a spirit that is entirely one of this current season. The scarf is of matching blue crêpe dotted in white, and the entire cape, although part of an ensemble, may properly live in single blessedness.

This year capes are really just as important as coats, and they range all the way from the graceful wisp of drapery hanging over our shoulders to sumptuous fur trimmed creations that shroud the entire figure. If we attempted to catalogue all the ways that the present day cape takes in order to be a real personality, it would sound like some-integral part of the coat. Without this adjunct the model would lose much of its consummate smartness.

Some of the new wraps go even further than this in their league with the figured scarf. Such scarves are, indeed, atthing got out by a mail order house. Yet it is essential to mention a few of the novelties that have crept into this old hereditary province.

Here are a few of them: The cape designed by Molyneux, which drops a long panel from its back yoke (Molyneux's coats share this same fashion); the model designed by Premet, that great master of the wrap-sody, which gives a decided dip in the back; the capes brought out by Worth and others, introducing long side panels shirred on at the sides.

Here on our page we are illustrating two of these new treatments. Second from the right is the chiffon cape designed by Premet, and this is sufficient to explain to you how frequently the cape contracts that dress habit of possessing extra length in the back. In fact, it is not alone in this susceptibility. A few of the season's coats present a farewell side elongated by means of a flared flounce.

The original of this Premet model occurred in black chiffon, and in that form it could be used in either afternoon or evening capacity. Here, however, we have transposed it into blue chiffon and made it an exclusively evening affair. Our main concern, however, is not color but that silhouette which gives such a brand new impression of an old theme.

Regard the flounce encircling the back and dipping into a point. Regard, too, the scarf collar tied with deft carelessness in a point to correspond with the flounce. Then admit that they certainly have done something with the cape.

Our last model, which you will find second from the left, is from Drecoll, and we show in the small sketch the frock designed to go with it. This model is important from two viewpoints. One of these is that of fabric, for it is a printed taffeta matching in tone and design the chiffon of the accompanying evening frock. This fashion of assembling in the same costume two weaves of an identical pattern has already been commented upon at length, so for the present all that we shall add by way of emphasis is that the advent of summer has brought no wane of the fancy.

Apart from the subject of material, the cape is interesting because it reflects the tendency toward those long panels shirred over the shoulders and falling to the full length of the garment. In this case they are bordered with plain black taffeta, as is also the cape proper. The scarf collar, attached to the wrap and developed into long ends in front, is another attractive feature.

HOLLYWOOD MODESTY.

Hollywood is spreading rumors
Well dressed girls abandon bloomers
To the dump they go.
For as frocks grow wide and shorter
Modesty demands girls oughter
Can the things that often, sorter—
Tend to show!

A SONG FOR THE SUBURBS.

["What one saves on groceries or service or laundry bills," sighed the woman in blue, "one has to spend on club dues and gin. We have to live up to Bill's job. And we can't put Persian rugs and Paris hats on his expense accounts."]

They thought that seven thodsand plunks
Per year spelled Easy street.
When seven thousand came their way
Ends still refused to meet.

They pushed and pulled and struggled with
A stubborn balance sheet.
Then came ten thousand bucks; then twelve. . . .
Spent bean by careful bean;
But country clubs and cars and clothes
Soon stripped the bank book clean.
To earn twelve thousand, you should know,
One has to spend fifteen.

THE TIDE TURNS.

["And there was grandmother, delighting the hearts of the Russian cabaret entertainers by her ability to copy their most strenuous steps."—Wail of a discouraged debutante.]

Flaming youth falters and virtue is rife,
Circumstance takes all the kick out of life.
Old folks no longer sit scolding at us;
Why raise the devil if no one will fuss?
Grandma claims freedom and goes her own way—
(Life of the gang in a Cossack cafe!)
Dancing mazurkas! This wildness is ample.
We'll now set our elders a shining example.

BEAUTY ANSWERS by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you, and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

T. V.: THE FEET SHOULD BE bathed daily and fresh stockings put on every day—twice a day, if necessary. Send a stamped addressed envelope for formula to be used on feet that perspire freely.

C. N. THE FAT-FREE CREAMS are not so effective for softening the skin as the fatty applications, but they are free from the objections to fat. They cleanse satisfactorily and make an excellent powder base.

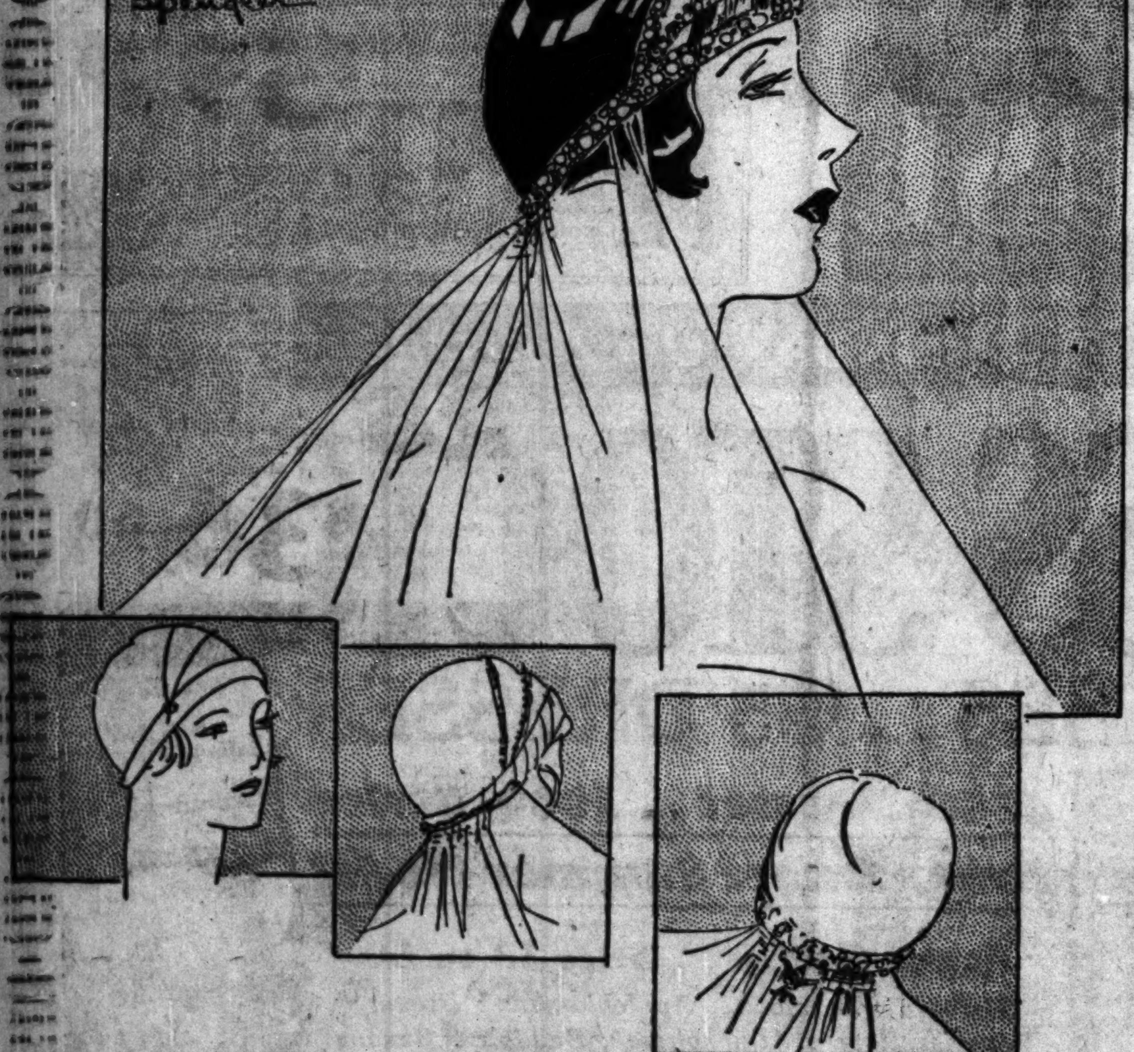
X. Y. Z.: HERE IS A SIMPLE wash for a shiny skin: Boracic acid, 1 dram; distilled water, 4 ounces. Apply to the face frequently with a piece of absorbent cotton, allowing it to dry into the skin.

R. H.: YOU MAY DEVELOP YOUR legs by daily exercise. Try this leg raising exercise: Stand with your back up to a chair, hands clasping the chair, back bent slightly backward. Raise the right knee as high as possible, repeat this movement five times, then alternate with the left knee, five times, increasing to twenty or thirty times. Send a stamped addressed envelope for other exercises.

R. C.: NO, WARTS AREN'T DIFFIcult to get rid of, nor is the ordinary wart contagious. Use the following lotion: One dram of salicylicacid, one ounce flexible collodion. Mix well. Apply with a tiny camel's hair brush for four nights. Then soak in hot water and remove part of the horny covering. Repeat until the wart has disappeared.

Practical and Fancy Needle Work

By Clotilde . . .



Here Are Directions for Making the Lovely Bridal Veil Pictured Today.

What is your sewing problem? Do you have trouble in following a pattern? Do you find difficulty in making a skirt hang evenly or making a sleeve that doesn't twist? If there is anything you would like to know about these or other problems of needlework, write to Clotilde, The Tribune, Chicago, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope if a personal reply is desired.

THE wedding veil illustrated in this week's issue was worn at a smart morning wedding. Tulle or bridal veiling comes in three different widths—two and one-half yards, three yards, and three and one-half yards wide. The latter width was used in the veil described.

Take some lightweight material, such as white rice net or crinoline, and make a band one inch wide of this, having it fit the head snugly. Wire it top and bottom with a fine lace wire. After doing this put it back on the head, bring a heavier wire called frame or shirt wire from side to side just in front of the ears, and clinch down on both sides with wire nippers.

Have this wire fit the head snug, also bringing another wire from side to side, but have it come between the top wire and the headband, acting as a brace. Clinch this wire down where the first wire is set onto the band.

Cut a piece one inch wide off the length of the tulle; use this for winding around the headband, and also the single wires. Stretch a piece of the tulle across this wire foundation; finish the raw edge of the tulle on top of the wires. This is done to have something to sew the pearl banding on to. Bring the pearl banding from side to side on the wire foundation, but do not put it on the headband until the tulle is shirred onto that.

Measure off one yard on both sides of the width of the tulle, or a good plan is to have the veil fall to the bride's finger tips. Let this yard on both sides fall plain. Begin to shirr from that yard mark to the other side yard mark, shirring with a fine cotton thread. Make about five rows of shirring, one-fourth of an inch apart; pull up all the threads so the space shirred will fit on the back and sides of the headband, pinning it just in front of the ears.

Sew this shirring onto the band and cover it with a strip of the pearl banding used. A medallion of pearls in a fleur-de-lis design was caught onto the band in the back of the head, the bottom and both sides were tacked onto the fullness of the veil.

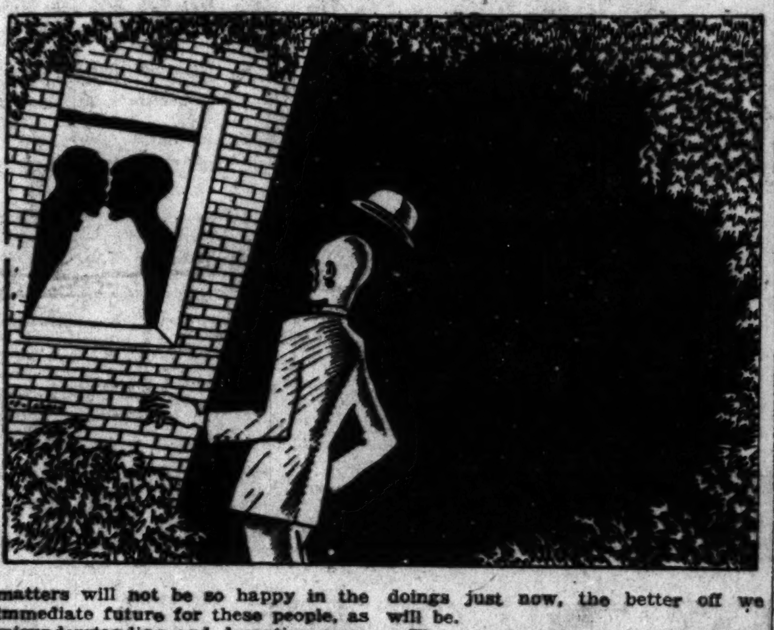
This veil was four yards long, but the height of the bride must determine this, and many girls require a length of five yards for the long, graceful effect the veil must give.

An article describing the maid of honor's and bridesmaids' hats worn at this same wedding will follow in the next CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE.

Gala Week for Those with Birthday Today

Marion Meyer Drew's weekly articles are presented solely for the entertainment of readers. Separate answers to individual questions cannot be given.

By Marion Meyer Drew.



THE first day of this week—Sunday—holds one or two good aspects to influence the fortunes of its sons and daughters during the coming year, notably those planetary positions which exercise a sway over business judgment, professional affairs, and matters of commerce, organization, or travel. Social matters and friendships with women or young people loom up as important episodes in the immediate events for these men and women, but this should be a gala week for the birthdates concerned and the first day is not exceptional in its amount of festivity for the coming year.

It is hard for the astrologer to interpret two such contradictory aspects as characterize these anniversaries, however, and the best I can say is that worry will get you nowhere now for some time; that patience and nature's own sweet time in accomplishing things will do wonders when you have given up all hope, and that the best times of year for you, if today is your date, will be around the last ten days of July and September, the middle of December, and the month of February, 1929.

Monday of this week is an anniversary full of changes for the coming year, unexpected adjustments in the family circle and in the office personnel, as well as sudden trips and visits to new suroundings, farthest from your thoughts at the present time. Those of the changes which affect business matters seem to be favorable, but those which have a purely personal reaction will be less welcome and work less to your advantage in the long run.

The high spots in 1928-'29 for this group will be the months of December this year and the last part of February, 1929. Be careful of September and March during the coming year, as those months hold changes in circumstances which can disturb you greatly if you allow outside conditions to upset your mental poise.

Those who were born on May 29 in other years will find the coming period a time of excitement, travel, and progress, with emphasis on any times involving the use of tools or mechanical processes, by which I mean to include both dental and surgical work as well as the more casual technical activities. The month of November will be particularly liable to bring about such forms of exercise, and the spring of 1929 also very much given to the more violent industries.

The 30th and 31st of this month are anniversaries which show the future year for their children to be times of great activity, financial gain in some unexpected ways, and a good deal of writing or publicity in the course of other lines of business. Emotional matters will not be so happy in the immediate future for these people, as misunderstanding and deception seem common just now, while love affairs will prove an expense as well as a source of worry. But who ever knew these arguments to stop the course of true or untrue love? Least of all would these statements seem arguments when most necessary—the last two months of this year.

So with June 1 and 2. These are far from the dates that should choose 1928 or 1929 as their year for love tremors or wedding chimes. The best interests for the first two days of this month will be speculation or investment, as you like to call it, with family matters, personal affairs and heart throbs far in the rear as joy producers. The women of these two dates will be rather outdistanced by their brothers in love affairs just now, for the positions of the planets which influence feminine affections are not fortunate for the nonce and even presage disappointment or change of plan, while for the men they show a little quarreling or a tendency of hot temper, but nothing more serious than crosses the skies of young couples every year. The most peppery times are due around the last week of November, and the latter part of March, 1929.

As for the rest of the world, this week threatens us a little—threatens to be slow and tedious in our best-planned activities and a bit disappointing for those of us who have thought up some startling new venture for this time or expected to settle some long contemplated scheme. It is simply not a time for such projects, and the more conservative we are in our doings just now, the better off we will be.

The people of the last week in March, the first ten days of December, the third week of August and the first eight days of January will be the groups to suffer most from the discomforts of these days, while the first of February and the middle of April groups seem the most fortunate at this time.

The sun just now is passing through the great nervous and mental sign of Gemini, and all the troubles of this portion of the zodiac are felt in the nerves and imagination. So, often, if we will stop to think the situation over, we will see that we are grieving at our beliefs of the circumstances, not the reality. At this time of year we must be particularly careful to avoid plaguing ourselves with the figments of active imaginations, for it is now that we are most prone to indulge in this fancy.

If your birthday is listed here as falling in a sensitive group, then avoid all weird tales in papers or magazines, keep away from psychic gatherings for the time being, and omit the retelling of your dreams or occult experiences; get out of doors as much as possible, walk every day and read humorous or optimistic pieces of literature.

Later in the year the need for all this will not be so great, but at present the planetary waves are broadcasting vibrations which set in motion all the sensitive nerve fibers we possess. Learn to control yours if they tend to be too quick in response.

The Right Prayer Important

by Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bevans

Let Them Hold Thoughts of Security and Happiness as They Drift Off to Sleep

Every single night before you go to bed do you think to yourself "I may die tonight?" I don't believe you do.

But suppose some one said to you, "Now every night before you go to bed, I want you to put your mind on this thought: perhaps I'll die in my sleep—perhaps I'll never again see all those I love—perhaps I'll go out into the Great Unknown—perhaps before morning I'll be dead." What would you think of that as an intelligent or sleep-producing command to have laid upon you?

Yet, thousands of us, hundreds of thousands of us undoubtedly, either deliberately or thoughlessly [and in the latter case the effect is the same as in the former] expect such a thing of our children.

You know death is not presented very pleasantly to children, as their experience presents it to them. A dog lies mangled in the streets—he got hurt and died. A horse usually shot or with his body bloated, lies dead in the street. A pet whom they love becomes ill and dies. They see a big box being carried from a church—or a hearse in the streets. Some one tells them it's a dead person who will be put in the ground and covered up with dirt. Not very pleasant conceptions of death.

No Wonder They're Frightened.

Of course they have probably been taught something other, or something more than this at home. But these are usually their first and most vivid concepts, and they are certainly not calculated to make death seem a friendly thing. We might remember, too, that even those people who have a great religious faith, who feel assured of a future life in the sense of a definite heaven, or of re-incarnation—even they more often than not fear death. Then why should not children?

So, if children do fear death, why give them this to think of as the last thing at night? Yet here it is—and I wince when I think of all the children in the world—past and present—who have been made to say it:

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake
I pray the Lord my soul to take.
Amen."

Full of Wrong Ideas.

All of us have a way of accepting some things—often because we know of no better thing to put in its place, and don't even try to invent something. But when you really think about it instead of just accepting it, what kind of prayer is that to put a child to sleep with? It bears no relation to childish thoughts, interests, viewpoint, or understanding. And why should there be any question put into the child's mind as to whether the Lord would refuse to take his soul? If his teaching has been along the lines of his soul possibly being taken by any one else, who else might take the soul of a child? The devil? And why talk about dying every night, anyhow? The wholesome, the moral thing is to talk about living and how to do it well.

There are lots of thoughts that children have on this dying subject that adults little suspect them of, having forgotten their own childhood fears. And we always have to keep reminding ourselves, especially those of us who are very close to our children, that children don't tell all their thoughts and aspirations and fears—especially the fears. In fact, often their most intense ones are never expressed at all.

A Common Fear.

One of these intense fears, and it is in connection with death, is that of being buried alive. If you've never had this fear yourself you'll probably laught at my statement. But it is a recorded fact that one of the commonest fears of people is that of being buried alive. I had it, I remember, and aside from the matter of psychological records I know of many acquaintances and friends who have had it.

"How will they be sure I'm dead—I might have one of those cases of suspended animation—I might come to after I'm buried"—and so on and on go these apprehensions in a much more gruesome strain than I care to dwell upon. This is not an unusual train of thought, especially for imaginative people or children.

Some parents may be able to rob death of its terror for their children and themselves. It is a wonderful thing if you can do it. But in most cases people can't—the inmmediate conditions surrounding it are so vivid, so dramatic. This being so, we don't want death to be the last thing our children think of at night. Their last thoughts should be happy ones, peaceful ones, cozy ones, permeated with a sense of security.

These thoughts have been simmering in my mind for a long time, but it took two letters from mothers to bring them to the point where they would boil over into an article. The first letter was a simple request for me to send the writer a few evening prayers for her children to say, as she did not like any that she knew well enough to teach them to her children. Intelligent mother! And how many intelligent mothers there are! The second letter I am going to give in full because of two things: One is because it is so interesting and the second is because I want to prove to you that what I have said about the effect of these bedtime prayers is true, not only of my own experience, but of others outside it.

Memories of Her Youth.

"Since you have invited parents to write to you lately, I have been tempted several times to write again. One particular article on prayers for little children touched a responsivle chord. The memory of nights made terrorful by my own childish fear of 'if I should die before I wake'—a fear which I would not have confided to my mother for worlds, though I realize now it would probably have been explained away if I had—made me resolve that never would I teach a child of mine that prayer.

"This resolve was strengthened when [before I was married] I took care of a little niece and nephew for a week while their mother was away. They had both been taught 'Now I lay me' and all that went with it, but the little girl simply stopped and said 'Amen' before she came to that part. Her brother bravely said it through, keeping his eyes tight shut for a minute of silent prayer before the final Amen.

"After two or three nights, he seemed to feel that this might need some explanation, and he said to me, 'Auntie, do you want to know what I say right after I get through my prayers? I say "Dear God, please don't let me die tonight. Let me live three million years!"'

Their Own Thoughts.

"So I taught my own little boys to express their own thoughts in their own words when talking to their Heavenly Father. [The Lord's prayer was the only set prayer I ever had them learn, except the little grace they say at the table.] And just as soon as they were old enough to feel that they would rather no one else heard their prayers, I suggested that they need not say them out loud, as they might each have different things to pray about. I know that they did not stop their prayers just because I did not stay to hear them, for they used to have a signal—a peculiar little, under-the-breath whistle—which they said meant they had finished—and no one could speak to the others before they had all given the signal. I have found, with them and with the little tots in Sunday school that a simple sentence in prose which they can understand, means more than a verse which soon becomes just jargon with repetition."

To me this is a particularly beautiful letter—full of fine feeling, imagination, and intelligence. What fortunate children these are to have such a mother.

In order, then, to make this article of real help—which I always want to do—I should like to suggest that if you know of an especially simple evening prayer, one couched in the most informal language and bearing a relation to the interests and emotions of a child, with a touch of beauty in it—you send it to me. I think it will fill a long-felt need.

A Broken Doll.

One of the queerest dreams I ever had occurred several years ago when I was twelve. At that time I was still fond of dolls and had a great many of them. There in my play-room they lay in a row, glass doll, paper doll, rubber doll, celluloid doll, in fact dolls of every make, material, and size.

One night I dreamed that my brother and a neighbor were quarrelling in my room and that my brother fell over my dolls. I rushed to where they lay and found my favorite glass doll broken. I burts into tears and awakened to find myself lying in bed with the sun shining in my eyes.

A few minutes later I arose, thinking nothing of my dream. After breakfast I went to my room as usual to play. What was my horror when I saw my beautiful glass doll lying broken exactly as I had dreamed. The next moment my sobs brought the entire household to see what the matter was, and finally my brother, greatly troubled over my grief, confessed that he had accidentally fallen over my dolls while playing with his friend.

I never did take much stock in dreams and as for believing that any of them ever came true, the idea was ridiculous. But, I've changed my mind now, as I had an experience several months ago that proved to me that some dreams do come true.

I have a sister living in another state. I had a vivid dream in which I saw her house on fire. I thought it was about midnight and I could see the neighbors helping save some of the furniture, etc. I thought the fire department came but the fire had gained such headway that the house was burned to the ground.

The next morning, I was very much depressed and could not get my dream out of my mind even after telling my family. I had a feeling that it was true. Therefore, I was not much surprised when shortly after ten o'clock that forenoon a messenger boy brought me a wire from my sister stating that their house had burned to the ground just as I had dreamed it had.

A Prophetic Dream.

One night after a hard day's work on my farm, I retired early and fell immediately into a sound sleep.

I dreamed I heard my father, who had been dead several years, say: "Al, get up. Your horse is in the ditch."

Three times he called me, the third in such an angry tone, I awoke with a start. Realizing it was only a dream, still something impelled me to see if the horses were safe.

I went to the barn and found one of my best horses missing. I ran to the ditch a short distance away, and there found him mired in the deep mud and water.

It took the aid of several of my neighbors to rescue him and had he been left there until morning he would without doubt have been dead.

A Free Prescription.

My sister had rheumatism in her hand. It pained so that she could scarcely sleep at night and it seemed impossible to get relief from following the doctor's orders. One night it seemed especially intense and my mother was tired out being up trying to ease the pain. It ceased, however, for a while and both my mother and sister fell asleep.

My mother dreamed that a friend told her if she would mix some quinine and mutton tallow together and rub my sister's hand it would cure her of rheumatism. She woke after this and while she laying thinking over this strange dream she again fell asleep and dreamed it again. Just as before she woke as soon as the dream was finished and for the third time went back to sleep and the dream was repeated.

The next morning she did as she had been requested in her dream and my sister was relieved immediately and hasn't been bothered with rheumatism since.

USE 'EM—AND LOSE 'EM

by THOMAS KINGSTON

John Merton Thought He Wanted Merely a Secretary; Elizabeth Crampton Believed She Wanted Merely a Business Career. Then Old Gannon Threw a Monkey Wrench in the Machinery.

FOR the first time John Merton had an office of his own. Until his promotion he had done his work at a desk in the large general room. When there were letters to be dictated he pushed a button and any one of the four stenographers answered the summons. Now he was to have a secretary to aid him with his larger duties.

"We pay thirty a week," his chief told Merton. "The office manager will inquire of the agencies and send to you any likely applicants, or you can pick a secretary from among the girls in the outside office, if any of them has seemed unusually competent. As a rule I like to promote people already in our employ. It helps the morale. But suit yourself."

The chief, thought Merton, was a little prosy and pompous and was making much of a small matter, but he was keen for the new job and not inclined to be overcritical.

Then Billy Hilton, who had worked at the desk next Merton's for the last eight years, dropped in to offer unaffectedly envious congratulations on Merton's good fortune. Somewhat to Merton's amused surprise he, too, had a word about secretaries.

"Take my advice, old man," he said. "Pick a good one at the start. I once heard old Gannon say that fifty per cent of the success of the executives he knew came from having the right kind of a sec."

When Hilton had departed Merton leaned back in his chair to evaluate his new glories. The office was a pleasant one. Perhaps the windows on the north might predicate cold draughts in winter, but they looked out over the busy harbor to a lovely prospect of distant hills shrouded in early autumn haze. Merton found that he was day dreaming and snapped out of it. All right, perhaps, for a poet or an artist, but all wrong for the new manager of the export department of Foxhall & Nevers.

He turned to the mail which lay uncut and unsorted where a clerk had dropped it, not on his desk but on the one near by, a desk with a top that swung back and at the same time lifted into view a typewriter—a secretary's desk.

Merton reached for the telephone to call Miss Eggleston, the office manager, but left the receiver unlifted as there came to mind the chief's remark about taking one of the office stenographers for the job if any was suitable. Mentally he reviewed them, frowning as he realized how little able he was to guess the capacity of these young women and how little relish he had in the task.

It wasn't that he disliked women; rather he mistrusted them. Doubtless they did their work well enough, but they were uncertain and disturbing; they came and went; they were full of petty vanities; everything was personal with them; they were easily hurt; they were—he checked, surprised to realize how much, after all, he knew about women and how earnestly he was thinking of them. It wouldn't do. Quite as bad as gazing at the purple hills across the harbor. He settled to consideration of the four girls who had done his letters before he came to this seat of the mighty.

He decided on Miss Crampton. The other three were impossible. One was a too vivacious blonde; another was a romantically inclined brunette with a trick of looking soulfully at one as he struggled for the right phrase; the third a breezy amazon who would quite overwhelm a small office—she belonged in the great open spaces. Miss Crampton was different. She dressed quietly; her voice was pleasant; she was an excellent stenographer; she didn't ask for attention, just did her work. Yes, Miss Crampton would do.

He lifted the receiver and broke the news to Miss Eggleston. The office manager was a dried kernel of a woman who also had a poor opinion of her sex from long years of trying to make expert clerks and stenographers out of raw material. She held that Ziegfeld had an easy job: all he needed was beauty, while she had to look for brains—try and find them! But Miss Eggleston nodded approval into the telephone as she listened to Merton.

"Go a long way, that young man," she told her sister that night. "Picked the only useful human we've had in the shop for six months."

Miss Crampton came in at once. Merton guessed that she was elated at her promotion, glad to be separated from the indistinguishable herd of clerks and stenographers outside and to have the greater peace and dignity of the private office. She thanked him pleasantly, but there was no gush about her, and Merton was glad. He gave instructions concerning rearranging the letter files, suggested a new card index system for keeping track of small orders, and told her to ask for any supplies she might need. She listened with quiet attention, and a little later Merton had momentarily forgotten her as he went through the mail, which she swiftly opened and arranged for his reading.

At noon he remembered to ask the girl about her lunch hour, received the expected reply that she would suit his convenience, and found himself noting appreciatively his new secretary's graceful movements as she put on her coat and her easy carriage as she went out.

At five o'clock he found that he had done an excellent day's work. On his desk lay the crisp pile of typed letters dictated early in the afternoon. It was closing time, but Miss Crampton waited without trace of impatience for him to sign his correspondence. Then she took the letters to her own desk to make them ready for the mail clerk.

"I'll take care of these; you needn't wait," he said, without looking up.

There was no response. Merton swung about to find Miss Crampton looking out across the hills that had held his eyes and thoughts early in the day. He said again, "You needn't wait, Miss Crampton. I'll take care of these letters."

The girl flushed slightly as she turned, and for the briefest moment Merton had a glimpse of a young woman very different from the remote and efficient Miss Crampton of office hours. The color in her cheeks, the widened eyes still in the spell of a world outside office walls: these had for the moment transfigured her. Why, she was beautiful! But instantly the glory had departed. It was the coolly remote Miss Crampton who answered, "I'd rather wait, if you please."

Merton understood that. The girl, he thought, was as interested in her new job as he was in his. Good stuff. She was sure to be a great help. She finished the letters at half past five. Merton lingered after she had gone.

IT was pleasant to sit in the quiet office and cast up mental accounts. And there was no reason to hurry. Presently he would go to the clublike hotel where he lived, have a swim in the pool, dine alone, probably—alone but not lonely—take a walk along the streets, always to him exciting when the lights were lit, and then settle down in his room to read until he felt sleepy. A good life, he thought. When you were twenty-nine, and had just been given responsibility and a sizable increase in salary; when there was so much to learn about your job; when you could feel the glow of effectiveness—well, it was mighty good.

Yes, he'd done well, and there was more ahead. Next year he might be sent to London to buck up the office there. Lucky he hadn't married. There was Tom Thorpe. Steady old hack. Was with the company before Merton and doing well, but he married and that finished him. Had a chance at the San Francisco branch. Wife didn't want to go so far away; all her friends in the east. Tom passed it up. Now he was in a rut and there to stay. Yes, women played the devil with a man's game.

And, having arrived at that not strikingly original conclusion, Merton found himself unaccountably thinking about Miss Crampton. He decided after a time that she was "different"—a danger sign, had he known it—and that she would help and not hinder. He switched on his reading light with a satisfied feeling that he had chosen wisely in the matter of a secretary.

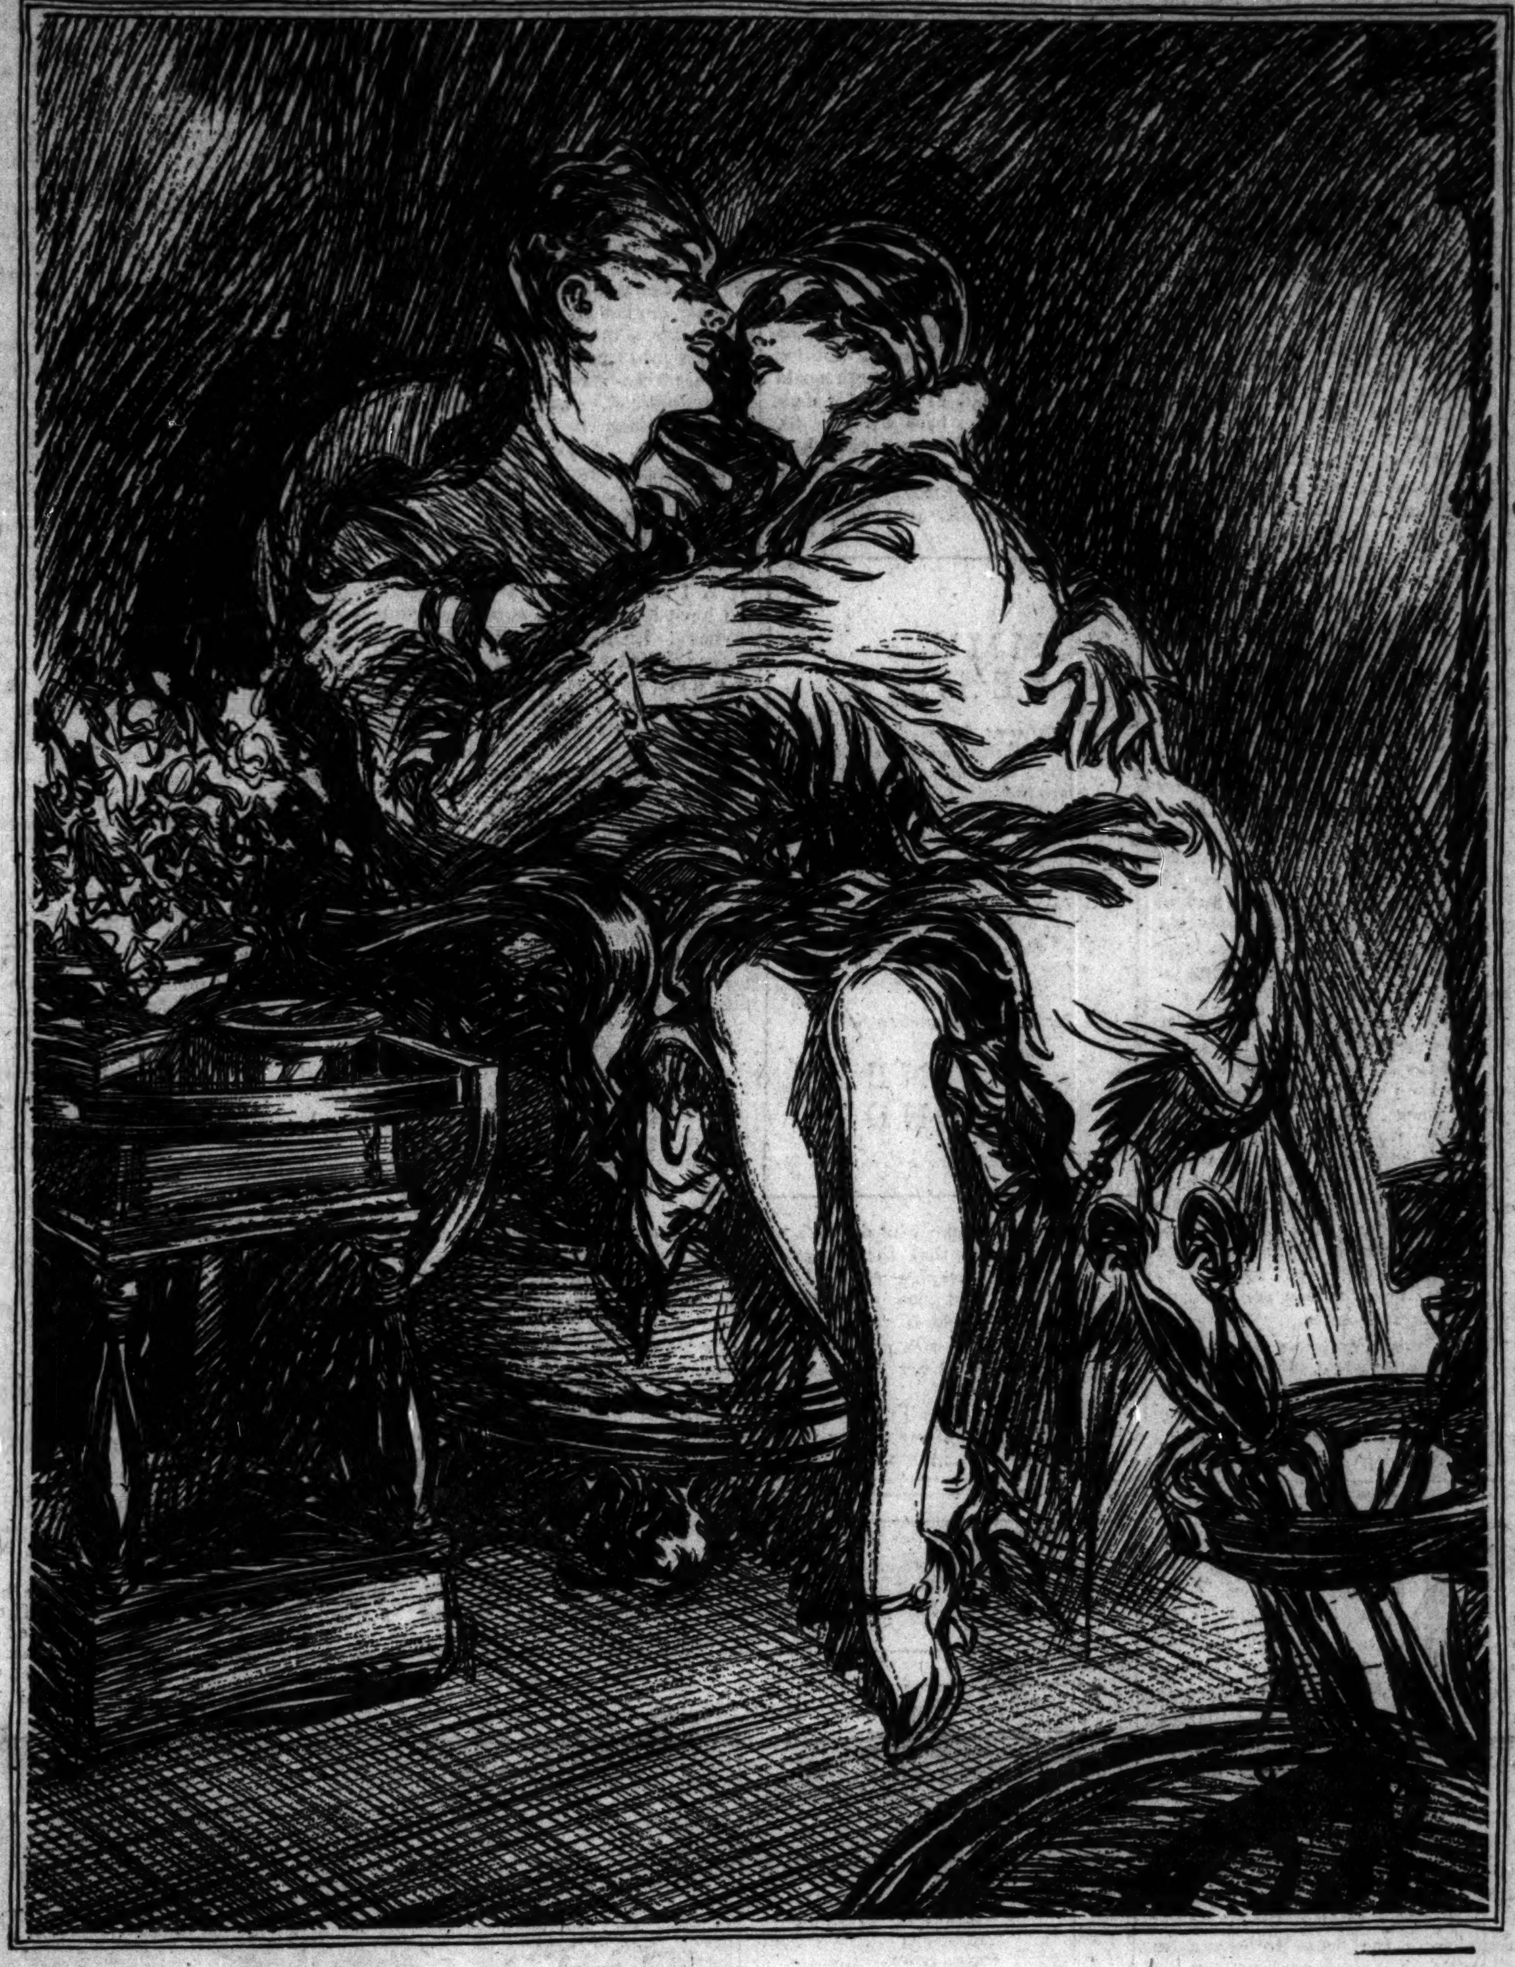
He was still surer of it as time passed. His office had become the most comfortable place in the world. Everything was always in its place; no missing memoranda, no letters mysteriously escaped from the file; his desk always in working order in the mornings, water in the silver water bottle that was the one ornate touch Foxhall & Nevers permitted itself, ash trays handy for the visitors' cigaret ashes. Little things, but in the sum total a kind of domestic luxury. And once or twice Miss Crampton had made quiet suggestions. Good ones. That big order from the Cienfugas people had been one result. There were others. Billy Hilton had been right, a good secretary was certainly God's gift to a busy man.

AN unusual pressure of business developed in November. Milton Hughes, the second vice president, who handled the South American trade, had a misbehaving appendix and the doctor said he would be laid up a month at least after the operation. Merton had to take over Hughes' work. At times he found himself almost swamped under the mass of detail, and he knew he would have been overwhelmed had it not been for Miss Crampton. She understood his regular work nearly as well as he did, and almost without his knowing it she began to handle all but the most important matters as a regular part of her day's work.

They were at their desks early, and on many evenings the light in Merton's office made a little square of radiance in the black face of the building long after the night watchman had come on duty. The drive was exciting at first, but presently Merton found himself settling down to a dogged persistence. He thought of asking for help, but early winter had brought the usual amount of sickness among the office force, and he knew the others were nearly as hard pressed as himself. Besides, it was a point of pride to stick it out.

He took to cutting down lunch time to ten minutes; a dash to the nearest cafeteria for a cup of coffee and a sandwich. The eating place was crowded, the food unappetizing, and finally, he decided he'd be better off without lunch. So he kept on at his desk.

Miss Crampton had also cut lunch time to a minimum. But she never went entirely without eating, and to all appearances she was standing the strain better than was Merton. His nerves were getting edgy, and the end of one particularly exasperating morning when everything had gone wrong found him snappish over the telephone and ready to quarrel with any one who gave him half a chance. Once or twice he was curt with Miss Crampton, but she appeared not to notice and he had the grace to feel ashamed. At one o'clock he rose wearily.



And he drew her down into his arms, where she lay like a tired child.

"I'm going to knock off for half an hour," he said. "Think I need some air and a cup of coffee or something to straighten me out." He paused and added, "Sorry I've been such a bear today."

He was reaching for his overcoat when Miss Crampton stopped him.

"It's all slush underfoot and beginning to rain," she said. "Don't go out. Just open the window a moment and do a deep breathing exercise. Keep your back turned and don't look around until I say you may."

She spoke with brisk authority, and Merton stared. But somehow he liked being ordered about by Miss Crampton. He felt the strain relax and even managed a laugh. He did his breathing exercises faithfully and was contemplating some mild calisthenics when Miss Crampton told him time was up. On his desk was a white square of napkin, a plate with three sandwiches, and a cup of hot tea. Miss Crampton's desk was similarly equipped.

"Lunch is served," she announced.

It seemed to Merton that it was the first food he had enjoyed in weeks. There was more tea in the thermos, and when he had finished he lighted a cigaret with a deep sigh of content. He tried for words—a phrase to express his surprise, and gratitude. It had been a long time since he had been "looked after" in this way by a woman. It was—Miss Crampton forestalled him.

"I'm delighted that my plan seems to have worked," she said smiling. And then at once she was the cool, impersonal Miss Crampton as she went on. "Please understand me, Mr. Merton. I have a very businesslike motive in all this. If you go on as you have been going these past weeks you'll break sooner or later. That will be as bad for me as for you—probably worse.

"If we can handle the two jobs successfully it is sure to mean promotion for you, and if I have done my part I shall expect to share somewhat in the result. I propose that we lunch here every day until conditions are normal. It's no trouble to get the things, and we save time and have better food. We'll make it a kind of training table.

"And one thing more: you know what I'm doing. Don't you think we could have a stenographer in two or three times a week to help with the letters and filing? If we are going to win the fight we'll have to organize."

Color had come strongly to her face as she talked and, as once before, Merton saw that there were two Miss Cramptons. This was the flaming one, vital, friendly, sure of herself. He felt a little overcome and he realized that, while his mind applauded the good sense of what she had said, he was oddly disappointed. Something that had warmed him more than the hot tea had gone. It was the glow of feeling that Miss Crampton had been doing an intimate, personal thing—and for him. Now she had reduced it all to a business matter.

It was herself that she was looking after; he was only a cog in the wheel of her ambition. He sat so long thinking that he found Miss Crampton looking at him curiously. He tried to be as businesslike as she.

"You're quite right," he said. "We must organize. I'll see about stenographic help at once, and I'll be most grateful for the lunches. Of course you must let me pay my share."

He was so stiff about it that Miss Crampton smiled.

"If you'd rather," she said amusedly. "And now, what about the London cable?"

WHEN Miss Crampton had left that evening Merton sat for a long time in the office thinking about her. He wondered what she did when the day's work was over. Lived somewhere near Washington Square, he remembered. Bohemian neighborhood. Probably had lots of friends. Funny how you could work for months in close contact with a person and know next to nothing about them. A splendid girl, but cold. One of the ambitious sort always with an eye on the main chance. He was quite bitter about it.

Things moved smoothly for the next ten days. Merton found that he was looking forward to lunch hour with the anticipation of a small boy. That thirty minutes of pleasant companionship made his day. Miss Crampton unbent a little, perhaps in reward for his obedience about deep breathing and his obviously sincere appreciation of her small domestic triumphs drawn from lunch box and thermos bottle. They talked of books they had read, plays they had seen, and in general explored each others' likes and dislikes over a wide field.

Once or twice Merton tried more personal topics, but Miss Crampton avoided them with easy skill that made the avoidance hardly perceptible. Yet the stone wall was there. What was it, Merton asked himself, that he had first liked about Miss Crampton? O, yes. There was nothing personal about her contact with the men she worked for—she did her work like a man and asked no favors. Now he wasn't so certain that this was a virtue.

But it wasn't until Merton spoke to his chief—old Gannon—about more salary for Miss Crampton that he really woke up. The older man listened carefully to his recital and Merton warmed up as he went along.

"Why, chief," he said, "Miss Crampton right now is doing more work and doing it better than I did when I first got my promotion. She's more capable and more dependable than any man we've got, and it is certainly good business to pay for what we get. Just because she's down on the books as a secretary is no reason why she should stop at a secretary's salary, is it? Didn't you say it was our policy to advance our own people?"

Gannon smiled. "Go slow young man. You sound more like a lover hymning his mistress than a business man discussing salaries and employment policy. I know about Miss Crampton. You don't suppose I thought you had handled the job all by yourself, do you? No, I knew you had a mighty efficient helper. Together you've done a great piece of work, and your own reward will be proportionate. As for your secretary, we'll give her a raise, but we won't put her on an assistant manager's salary, and, what's more, being your secretary is the best job she gets here."

Merton interrupted to protest, but the older man rode him down.

"Don't misunderstand. I know just how able Miss Crampton is. But she's a woman, and a mighty attractive one. Probably she's saving up now to marry some nincompoop with half her brains. She's a woman, and I won't put a woman in a key job. You can't depend on 'em. If you think you can't get along without Miss Crampton, you'd better marry her yourself. Probably spoil a good secretary to make a second rate wife, but according to you she's got all the virtues any woman ever possessed—and more."

Merton sat looking at his chief with a startled expression. Gannon thought his bright young man was daunted by his tirade, but Merton had forgotten most of that. It was the suggestion that he marry Miss Crampton that had overwhelmed him.

But Gannon went on more gently: "Don't worry about your secretary. You won't need her more than a month or so more. Soon as Hughes gets back on the job you are slated for the London office and you won't have to bother about petticoat problems. Use 'em and lose 'em; that's the way to handle them."

On his way back to his own office Merton realized that he ought to be elated over the promise of the London managership and that he wasn't. Why, he hadn't even thanked the chief.

"Marry her, marry her——" His brain was given up to that; it wouldn't function on anything else.

He halted outside his office door. What was he going to do? You couldn't very well rush in on a young woman and say, "My dear, they won't give you much of a raise and they won't give you a bigger job, but I'll marry you."

With an effort he pulled himself together and went in.

MISS CRAMPTON'S head was bent over a pile of letters and orders. She didn't even look up as Merton entered, but said absorbedly, "Your correspondence is piling up Mr. Merton. As soon as I finish there don't you want to dictate to me? That last girl we had in is so slow. I've cleared up everything that doesn't need your personal attention."

Cool, impersonal, businesslike, ambitious. She wasn't thinking about marriage unless—what was it Gannon had said? "Probably saving up to marry some nincompoop."

Merton felt his heart contract and the blood rushed to his head. He was exhibiting a splendidly marked case of jealousy—and over a mythical "nincompoop." Miss Crampton looked up just then and arose hastily at sight of his haggard face.

"Mr. Merton!" she exclaimed, and took two steps toward him. Merton stretched out a hand. In another moment he would have had her in his arms. All the loverlike phrases he had read or heard were on his lips—Miss Crampton didn't take the third step. Instead, she turned to the water bottle and filled a glass.

"You are overtired, Mr. Merton," she said with impersonal sweetness. "Better drink this and rest for a while. The letters can wait."

Merton drank the water stupidly. He felt very much as though it had been poured over him. A moment more and he'd have made a fool of himself.

. . . . .

Late that afternoon when Merton broke the news of Gannon's decision, of which he was careful to give a modified version, Miss Crampton took it easily enough.

"It's about what I expected," she said. "They'll pay me fifty dollars a week for knowing as much and doing more than men they pay twice that. The men will have opportunity to go on as far as their abilities and opportunities will let them, but a woman can go only so far. I was sure that was Mr. Gannon's policy. It's the policy of a good many offices; I mean to find one where it isn't."

She had said it all with no trace of heat; no hint that she felt herself abused; merely a plain statement of plain facts. She, Merton thought, wasn't in the "use 'em and lose 'em" class. He was proud of her. And with the feeling of pride came the sudden recollection that he was about to lose her. He had forgotten for the moment that in a few weeks he would be sailing for London; his mind's eye saw only a vision of days without her there in the office where they had fought so good a fight, a vista of impossible days.

"But, Elizabeth"—he was using her first name for the first time and quite unconsciously—"I can't let you go. I couldn't have done anything without you. Why, we——"

She interrupted him.

"Not at all, Mr. Merton. None of us is indispensable. You have been very good to me, and I realize that I owe a great deal to your willingness to explain the work to me and to let me help. I hope I have returned value in full, but anyway it was useless for me to learn unless I can contrive to apply what I have learned. I have a chance now to go to the South and East Importing company. They learned somehow that I handled the Backus supply contracts and I'm offered a chance in their European department as assistant manager. Not much pay to start with, but a real chance. It seems one always gets these opportunities outside—a business version of the prophet in his own country. Now, the work is——"

IT was Merton's turn to interrupt. He was both surprised and hurt. "Why didn't you tell me about this?" he asked. "It would have been a strong talking point with the chief. And anyway you might have told me," he finished rather lamely.

Miss Crampton shook her head.

"I hesitated to accept," she said, "because I wanted to see what they would do here. I've been nearly three years with Foxhall & Nevers, you know. If I had told you and you had told Mr. Gannon he would have thought I was trying to hold him up, was demanding promotion on threat of resigning. He'd never have forgiven me for that, and I'd prefer not to have him my enemy as I move on.

"Now, to go back to what I was saying. We are over the big rush and Hughes will be back in a week, his secretary tells me. I'd like to leave at once—they are holding the job open only two days for my decision. I'll come in tomorrow and give Miss Blake—she's the best of the extra help we've had—full instructions about everything, and I'd like to finish here tomorrow night."

Merton was sunk. One hour of a normal sixty minutes since his wanting to propose marriage to a young woman who was slipping out of his grasp with a speed and effortless ease that left him breathless. And the same sixty minutes had witnessed his promotion to a place that he had coveted for years, a promotion that six months before would have made him, he had believed, the happiest man in New York. Now so unimportant did it seem that he entirely forgot to mention it to Miss Crampton.

"I suppose you are right," he said wearily. "I'll get along. You've done a splendid job of work with me, and I owe you more than you owe me. Sorry you've got to leave so suddenly, but it'll be all right."

He forced himself to concentrate on his work and to give Miss Crampton a cheerful and impersonal "good night" when she left.

"Mr. Merton!" she exclaimed, and took two steps toward him.

Merton hated to go to the office next morning. It would be hard to say good-by to Miss Crampton, and he was afraid he might make a fool of himself. When he did arrive he found Miss Crampton already busy going over matters with Miss Blake, and the morning went by without opportunity to speak to Miss Crampton alone.

He knew now what he wanted to say; he phrased it over and over to be sure it would sound casual and natural. At one o'clock he would say, " Crampton, you were so nice about the luncheons during our time. Won't you let me be the today?"

Then he'd take her to a quiet restaurant and—his thoughts off. He knew what he would say when they sat at the remote table he planned to commandeer. how was he to say it? He wasn't certain that he could feel that he Miss Crampton were friends. She done all that the best of friends co do to help him through the time stress in the office and to make not only easy for him, but comfort in a hundred ways that only a wo knows.

Yet she had been careful to see that all that had been "good business"; in fact, th intimately she looked out for h comfort, the more impersonal came. But he wanted desper get at least on a footing w might see her again after she Foxhall & Nevers, and perhaps an inspiration at lunch.

He was summoning his cou deliver the invitation when M non's secretary telephoned to Mr. Hughes had come in unexpe and would Mr. Merton join hi Mr. Gannon's office. The inte was a long one. Hughes plan get to his desk the next day and at once to get in touch with wh happened in his absence.

The chief had in mind a compl reorganization of the two departm in preparation for Merton's move London, and when two o'clock came he carried his subordinates off to his club to lunch and continued the discussion. Merton had only time to dash into his office and out again. Miss Crampton wasn't there. Miss Blake explained that she had gone out late, leaving word that she would be back at three.

Merton encouraged himself with the thought that Miss Crampton had because she wanted to see him, and mentally transferred his luncheon invitation to dinner. That would be better.

But the conference at the club lasted until late afternoon, and it was nearly six when Merton got downtown again. His heart lifted at sight of the familiar square of light that marked his office window. He threw open the door with boyish eagerness. Miss Blake was with the files. She was alone in the room.

Merton slumped in his chair. Already the office seemed lonely. If he been alone there it wouldn't have tered so much. It was the alien ence of Miss Blake that marked difference. His eye caught a letter the blotter.

"Dear Mr. Merton:" he read. " will find everything in order and Blake very competent. She can by telephone if anything arises necessitates consulting me. Thank for many kindnesses. You have been splendid teacher. I have just about the London job. Congratulations and best wishes. Sincerely,

"ELIZABETH CRAMPTON."

He folded the note carefully and placed it in his pocket. Then he took it out and read it again.

"Use 'em and lose 'em," he thought. Well, he'd been used and now he lost—quite.

MERTON was booked to early in February. He tried forget himself in the details of his new position and in working with Gannon and Hughes the reorganization plans. There was plenty to but the fire of enthusiasm that carried him ahead with Foxhall Nevers was lacking. He realized he didn't in the least want to go to London. There would be a kind of finality about placing an ocean between himself and Miss Crampton.

One day it occurred to him that he was like Tom Thorpe, but with the tables turned. He remembered thinking of Tom as an example of the danger of falling in love. Tom had turned down the San Francisco job because he was married; he, Merton, was on the verge of turning down the London promotion because he wasn't married.

Merton strained his ears for the reply.

"Not so good," said Barton. "She knows her job all right and she's better than the man that had it before, but there's no pep to her. One of these cold, stand-offish dames. Started in like a world beater, but she's slowed down now. You know how it is. She's probably stuck on some geezer who won't play back. You know how it is."

"That's what I've always said," the other agreed. "A woman's no good beyond the ordinary everyday stuff unless she's got a reason outside the pay envelope. No good when they're on their own, or usually when they're working for another woman. Work best with a man. You get a brainy girl who is a little stuck on the man she is working with and, O boy! how she'll make things move!"

Hughes had called for his check and Merton was glad. The talk disgusted him—not alone the coarse frankness of the philosophy, nor the way it was phrased. It hurt him to hear others dissecting Miss Crampton's abilities and providing the motive for what Barton apparently considered a half success if not failure. He was half way back to the office before he thought of something that made his heart jump.

Suppose Barton's friend was right, and Miss Crampton wasn't interested in the new job because she missed something that had been an unrealized inspiration in the old! He determined that nothing would halt him in his next effort to see Miss Crampton. He decided that he had been an ass not to call on her. No reason why he shouldn't. Young men called on young women every night in the week—thousands of them. He'd do it.

THE latch clicked in response to his ring, and he found himself climbing an old-fashioned staircase which was by no means steep enough to account for his shortness of breath as he reached the third landing. A door opened at his step, but it was not Miss Crampton who smiled at him.

"I was looking for Miss Crampton," he half stammered.

"Do you know, I guessed it," answered the girl. "And I've been wondering why you hadn't called before. You are John Merton, are you not? I am Sylvia Lawton, Miss Crampton's roommate."

She had ushered him inside as she was talking, and the bewildered Merton had followed mechanically.

Now he managed, "But Miss, Miss—Lawton, wasn't it? How do you know who I am? I wasn't expected."

The girl laughed. "I'm not a female Sherlock Holmes, but if Dr. Watson wants an explanation here it is: You see, I knew you didn't belong to me, and Miss Crampton never has callers, so I decided that you must be the important Mr. John Merton whom I have long expected. Plain, isn't it?"

It didn't seem so to Merton, but before he had a chance to answer Miss Lawton went on. "I'm glad you at last got up enough spunk to ring a doorbell. I was beginning to think I'd have to hunt you up and say a few things. Minding other people's business is my specialty—when I'm fond of them. I'm glad that Elizabeth isn't here. Calm yourself. She'll be here in exactly one hour, and I'm going to take part of that time to tell you some things. Shall I begin?"

Merton nodded, but before the lively young person began she saw that he was comfortably placed in a big chair beside the tiny fireplace and that cigarets, matches, and an ash tray were within reach.

"Please smoke," she said. "It will keep you from interrupting. Now, about Elizabeth. I'm fonder of her than of any one else I have ever known and I don't want to see her hurt. Otherwise, Mr. Man, I wouldn't waste my time on a person of little perception. You doubtless think of Elizabeth as cold and reserved, and ambitious, and a lot of other unpleasant adjectives—unpleasant when applied to a woman. She's nothing of the sort. A man always thinks these things about a woman who has brains and uses them. Elizabeth got her brains from her mother. They are splendid brains, but when Mrs. Crampton passed them along to her daughter she tangled them up with a twisted perspective, a point of view that was all right for Mrs. Crampton but all wrong for Elizabeth.

"Mrs. Crampton was a born business genius. When she was twenty-one she had one of the best secretarial jobs in this town and in a few years would have been one of the largest salaried women in the country. Then she fell in love, or thought she did, with a man who—well, you'll see the kind he was.

"Mr. Crampton was twenty-eight—about your age, I'd guess—and he was getting on quite nicely; but he thought he was a tin god. Elizabeth's mother wanted to keep on with her work after they married, but he wouldn't listen to it. No wife of Stewart Crampton's was going to work: a married woman's place was in the home; no two-job wives need apply; and all that sort of thing. He forgot, Mr. Merton, that there are several kinds of women loose on this planet. Some do belong at home; and some don't.

"Anyway, he prevailed, and Elizabeth's mother settled down to be domestic in the New Jersey suburbs. You couldn't keep a maid in that place over six weeks, and the kinds you got were mostly useless. Crampton would not let his wife work in town where, by the way, she was making almost as much as he, but it was all right for her to work at home. He hadn't sense enough to see that if his wife had kept on with her job they would have had enough money to buy good domestic service from experts.

"Well, Mrs. Crampton was no expert. She was as bad at the domestic game as she was good at business. But she stuck. Then Elizabeth came along, and a little later Crampton lost his grip. Didn't get some promotion he expected and blew up. Didn't believe the company could get on without him and threatened to resign. They called his bluff and he was out of a job for a long time just when Mrs. Crampton needed the things money buys for you.

"I know I'm making free with Elizabeth's family history, but I hope I'm not boring you."

MERTON shook his head and she went on.

"I'll skip details. Crampton had a way with women and he was one of those men that always have an open account with them. When Elizabeth was seven he ran off with a good looking divorcee who had salted away her alimony. If he'd only died he would at least have left some life insurance. As it was, he left nothing. Mrs. Crampton started to work again. But she'd been out of touch for eight years, and it was a hard struggle. She got on her feet again well enough to see Elizabeth through school, but she did a bit of teaching, herself.

"She got it firmly into Elizabeth's mind that the woman who depends on a man is a fool; that the domestic, hearthside, home-keeping woman is an inferior animal, and that independence in the business world is the only way to happiness. You see, she was just as narrow-minded as her husband had been.

"Her creed may be all right for some women, but it was all wrong for Elizabeth. That girl is naturally domestic. Just look at this apartment. Even a dumb man can see that it isn't the usual pied-a-terre of the New York business woman, but a real home. That's all Elizabeth! I can't make a place look as homelike as a restaurant.

"Yes, that's Elizabeth. You probably think her a business wonder. That's because she's got brains and will use them on any job. But she doesn't like business, doesn't like offices, doesn't like any part of the game. She's just been trying to live the life her mother ordered.

"Now, here's where you come in. When she became your secretary she did begin to like business. At first I thought she had caught on at last and that her mother had been right. But I came to see that she was translating business into terms of some men. I'm a rather keen person, myself—perhaps you've noticed—and without Elizabeth's knowing it I pieced out the whole story. Ambitious young man afraid that women would gum his game; girl who thought she was ambitious and had been taught that men outside of business were poison. Nice pair!

"If I hadn't been fond of Elizabeth I'd have let you both stew in your supposed brain juice. I didn't. I praised Elizabeth for the progress she was making. I made suggestions, as insidiously as I could, about looking out for future prospects. I was really the cause of her taking the offer of the South & East. I wanted to make certain. And I did.

"When she quit Foxhall & Nevers all that bright enthusiasm she'd had for business snuffed out. I'd guessed it. She wasn't interested in imports or exports; she was interested in a man's interest in them. She had fooled herself into thinking she was doing two persons' work to further her own ambitions when in reality she was doing it to further yours.

"As soon as I was sure of that, I turned my inquiring mind to you. At first I thought you might be one of those 'use 'em and lose 'em' kind like Gannon—yes, I know all about him—and that Elizabeth was making the same mistake her mother did, falling in love with the wrong man. I perked up a bit when Elizabeth told me you had asked her to dinner, but I agreed that she'd been wise to turn you down. If you were worth having, I knew you'd sooner or later show signs of life.

"Elizabeth had told me about the London job—she tried to act pleased over having had such an able boss and managed to look as though she'd lost her last friend; and I was getting scary. Friend of mine at Foxhall & Nevers told me you were to sail next week. Well, I suppose last minute courage is better than none."

Miss Lawton stopped short and looked at the mantel clock.

"Time's up," she said. "Elizabeth will be here in five minutes. I have a pressing engagement with a friend in the next apartment. I'll be back in an hour and let you thank me."

She whisked out of the room, was gone before Merton, who had leaped from his chair, could frame one of the questions that clamored in his mind. He was too excited to think clearly. Elizabeth was this, Elizabeth wasn't that, Elizabeth, Elizabeth—why, that extraordinary girl had told him that Elizabeth loved him!

HE became aware that he was pacing blindly about the room, knocking against furniture, probably making an ungodly racket. He sought the deep chair before the fire and sank into it. Strange he hadn't noticed before what a rosy flame the coals had. He was building castles in them when a key clicked in the lock, the door opened, and a weary voice that tried valiantly to be cheerful called: "Sylvia, where are you? I've resigned my job and I'm just a little frightened. Come and scold me—it will brace me up—"

She stopped abruptly, sensing that Sylvia was not there. She gave a startled little cry and came to peer over the back of the big chair. Merton caught her hand.

"Elizabeth," he said softly. "I love you. I love you, Elizabeth. I've been a blind fool, and I love you."

He said it over and over as though fearing she would not understand, and he clung to her hand with a grip that hurt.

She stood still for a long moment, so still she did not seem to breathe.

Then she said, "John. John."

And he drew her down into his arms, where she lay like a tired child.

And after a time they began the pleasant business of, "Do you remember—" and "That time when you—" and the like, living over the time when they were unwitting lovers. They were still enlarging on these topics—with intervals of eloquent silence—when Miss Lawton came in, after discreetly announcing herself by a lively tattoo on the door.

Elizabeth disengaged herself from John and the big chair, and as he arose she led him by the hand toward Miss Lawton.

"Sylvia," she said shyly, "let me present Mr. John Merton. He is—that is, we are—well, dear, we're engaged you see."

And the extraordinary Miss Lawton gave a masterly imitation of a person being surprised. Merton started to speak, but checked as he realized that this young lady was the most discreet of meddlers and that never with her consent would Elizabeth know her friend's part as a bringer of light to a dark place.

"I let Mr. Merton in," Miss Lawton mentioned after she had kissed Elizabeth and said with real warmth the natural commonplaces. "I let him in and it seems he came to carry off my best friend. Sudden person, isn't he, Elizabeth?"

Then she found an excuse to leave them together for what John said was the first satisfactory "good night" they had ever said to each other—and certainly the longest. But before she left them, she had done one more piece of friendly meddling.

Merton was sailing in eight days—on a Saturday afternoon—and it was arranged that he and Elizabeth would be married next day at the license bureau to facilitate passport matters, have the religious ceremony on Saturday at noon, and go from the church to the ship.

"You'll be so busy getting last things done at the office," Elizabeth had said, "that I'll hardly have a chance to see you. I know the hours you keep. Don't you want me to come back and help out?"

Merton's face brightened, but Miss Lawton brought him up short.

"No, you don't," she said. "This girl is going to be just as busy as you are and on quite as important matters. Don't you know that it's a whole time job buying a trousseau in seven days with a Sunday out? And," she added, "I'm going to have the time of my young life helping on that job."

She finished more soberly, "I hope you'll realize, Mr. Merton, that while you are probably getting an excellent business advisor and general manager, you've lost forever your office assistant. 'Use 'em and lose 'em,' as old Gannon says. This woman's place is in the home."

Merton had that in mind when he had his last interview with his president.

"By the way, Mr. Gannon," he said, trying to sound casual, "I'm taking my wife with me when I sail."

The old man pumped his arm vigorously.

"Delighted! Delighted!" he exclaimed. "Keep you steady. Fine! Always like to see my associates safely moored. You know when one of the office girls marries we give her a present, wish her joy, and fire her; but when one of the men marries we give him a bonus. Just a minute."

He scratched off a sizeable check.

"Present this to Mrs. Merton with my compliments and take some days off to run over to Paris and help her spend it. By the way, who is she?"

When Merton told him Gannon beamed again.

"Congratulations! Glad you listened to my advice. Remember, I told you to marry her."

But Merton couldn't resist the temptation to recall the true version of the advice.

"As I remember it, sir, you said if I married her I'd probably lose a first rate secretary and get a second rate wife."

Mr. Gannon never wavered. "Not at all," he boomed. "What I meant was she'd make you as first rate a wife as she did a secretary. Give her my best remembrances—and the check."

IT was late afternoon when the ship hauled out from her pier and the tugs nosed her down river. In spite of the chill, Elizabeth and John kept the deck. They watched the myriad lights blossom out in the tall towers of lower Manhattan, and even thought they could distinguish the particular pattern of light that had been their working home.

"Looks like fairyland," John said. "And it was our land of romance, wasn't it, dear?"

Elizabeth snuggled her arm closer in his.

"Yes," she said. "But there were times when I hated it. I'd been taught to believe that the only way to happiness was independence, and that to win it I must keep clear of men. I used almost to hate you because you made me like you so much. And you were afraid of me, too, weren't you, dear? You thought that a man got on best if he avoided entangling alliances with women. Wasn't it strange that love should have begun as fear?"

The deck was deserted. Merton put his arm about his wife and held her close.

"That's the way love ought to begin," he said. "It's a terrible and beautiful thing, and the part of wisdom is to fear it. We did, until we learned that the only way to any happiness for us was together—to happiness or to success in the world. We could use each other, but we were of no use to anybody or anything if we lost each other."

The lights of the tall towers astern were fading now, but it really didn't matter, for their audience was giving its attention to something entirely different.

Selecting Menu for June Wedding

Here Are Dishes, Old and New, for That Most Festive Occasion.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

By Jane Eddington.

IN THE old rhyme the bridal supper consisted of black eyed beans and bread and butter, sparse fare but adequate after all, if portions were large and there were second helpings. If something as simple would satisfy the bride today, a great deal of worry would be avoided, and since the table and decorations of it today are so overwhelming in the amount of attention they attract, and to prepare fitting food to the colors represented, and all, is so exact a task, the simpler refreshments are not without their justification.

Suppose the bride should take the rhyme about what she should wear—"something old and something new, something borrowed and something blue"—and work out a menu along this line.

As far as getting up something old is concerned that would not be difficult, for all ancient literature, it would sometimes seem, has mentions of weddings. Just the other day I found a reference to "nuptial plates," in an old book, and the brief description said they were broad and almost as deep as bowls. This interested me vastly for several reasons. If the meal was to be as simple as stewed black eyed beans and bread and butter this would be just the dish to use.

And the coincidence is that just a little while ago I bought an antique bread near bowl which the seller insisted was a plate and not a bowl, and truly old. It is certainly blue, very, like indigo, and the pattern suggests meanings. What do you suppose is the right food for "nuptial plates"? It is not to the point, but in that same book I read about the bride being led to the altar by her long hair.

The old books of etiquette give menus for wedding affairs and some seem curious enough to be revived to go with our china and glass "moderne." By the way, have you noticed that salads of that ilk have been devised, the ingredients cut in angles, etc.?

Finding new things for bridal meals is not really as easy as finding old, but for a gay party supper lately, or for the last half dozen years, the sandwich loaf has been used quite often. Since it is frosted and ornamented by pipings, it can be made a match for the wedding cake, and, because of its character as food, its use helps to lessen the number of items served. The cook books have not as yet told how to make this, but it is a favorite with those who demonstrate cooking. I have seen it demonstrated at least three times.

The Sandwich Loaf.

The last sandwich loaf I saw—just the other day—was quite a handsome piece, frosted with white cream cheese, decorated with tiny white cream cheese roses, and with bands of pink cheese roses and green leaves in an extremely dainty effect—not in the least mussy nor cheap looking, as it might have been.

The demonstrator advised slicing the freshly made loaf of bread—the whole length of the loaf—before removing the crusts, which might seem difficult at the first cuts but much easier for the last. So she began by cutting off the bottom crust entirely, and then slicing the loaf parallel to this, cut in slices of about ordinary thickness. Before putting in each separate filling she buttered the side on which the filling was spread, so that the filling would not soak into the bread, and also the lower side of the slice to be placed over the filling.

When all the fillings were added she used the same cream cheese she had used in one or two fillings, much diluted with cream, to ice the loaf. It was a pound brick of cream cheese she had, and not the little packets.

Fillings for Sandwich Loaves.

The first woman I ever saw demonstrate a sandwich loaf had as a base of each filling the cream cheese which she tinted and also used for icings. The demonstrator the other day—using the pound of cream cheese for the large loaf—used cheese and mayonnaise, and her mixture of items did not sound exactly harmonious.

Something over two years ago Miss Ethel Somers described in "Liberty" a sandwich loaf with the following fillings:

"Cream filling—One-half package cream cheese softened with sweet cream or mayonnaise; chopped nut meats may or may not be added.

"Red filling—Four slices minced ham, two tablespoons chopped pimento, one tablespoon minced celery, one tablespoon mayonnaise.

"Yellow filling—Two hard cooked eggs rubbed through a sieve and seasoned with one tablespoon mayonnaise, salt and pepper.

"Green filling—One-fourth cup chopped olives or sweet pickles, three tablespoons parsley, two tablespoons mayonnaise."

Other Cream Cheese Fillings.

A great variety of cream cheese fillings can be made by blending with the softened cream cheese either a fruit or vegetable puree. My own favorite mixture is the piquant sweet red or green pepper, chopped fine and blended with the cheese; but drained tomato is good. The green pepper chopped fine is also good mixed with butter and used as a filling or for open sandwiches.

Jams and jellies may be used to color the cheese. Dates make it sweet and tasty, while nuts make it heartier, but often most attractive. Just plain cream cheese, without color, may be used in the layer or storied sandwiches, or sandwich loaf. In the old days this was not iced, but put under pressure, and the slices looked like those of layer cake.

The Old Type of Loaf.

It was not the great, handsome loaf, looking like cake, that they used to make, but mosaics of brown bread and white, or pumpernickel and white, with butter binding them. The loaf was sliced before it was served, and the slices were called layer sandwiches, and the filling for all the three or four layers—now they may have six—was one and the same, and not Neapolitanlike.

A chicken filling, as always, was popular.

A Fancy Chicken Filling.

Grind or pound to a smooth mass one cup of cold chicken. Work into this three ounces of sweet butter and a tablespoon of cream, or several tablespoons, according as you can, after you have also added to it some tablespoons of grated cheese—Parmesan or Herkimer, but more of the latter if it is used. Add a little salt and paprika, or a few grains of cayenne pepper. You may also add, if you want to after tasting what you have, a dot or two of dried mustard or a little mixed mustard, but in adding the latter you are risking artificial flavor which may not please every eater, or those who would like the filling but for that.

This filling should be as smooth as butter, and the cream helps it to be. It can be worked through a coarse strainer to make it smoother yet. It is disagreeable to have the filling separate from the bread in eating any sandwich, but a sandwich loaf cannot have this type of filling and be a success.

Angel Sandwich.

In my files I have a clipping in which a sandwich loaf is called "angel sandwich," probably because of the white cheese icing. After it is filled, cream cheese softened is spread on the outside of it, as a cake is frosted; it is garnished [it cannot be as pretty as when the cheese is piped on], wrapped in a damp cloth and set away in the icebox for several hours. All such loaves must stand an hour at least.

In this description it tells how to use fillings that will make this a meat sandwich and others that will make it a sweet sandwich.

Piping Cream Cheese.

Cream cheese softened with cream can be piped, but there is always a chance that the figures made will break a little. A way to prevent this is to use with the amount of cheese in one or two cakes, one teaspoon of gelatin softened in two tablespoons of milk or cream, and then stand it over hot water with stirring until dissolved. Stir until it is creamy, add it to the mashed cream cheese, stir the two together until smooth, and use for piping at once.

The sandwich loaf may be decorated with this, or use it on salads and desserts. A little crimped mound piped at the side of a fruit salad, even a frozen one, may add to its gratifying qualities.

Bridal Meats.

Chicken, sweetbreads, lobster, and shrimps are favorite meats for wedding breakfasts and luncheons, often creamed. How to cook and serve these must depend upon the number to be served. With large numbers the chicken can be cold, with fine hot breads and creamed vegetables.

Salad Aurora.

Place halves of peaches—one or two to a serving—on blanched lettuce leaves, and pipe it with the cream cheese, always letting the peach show through as the orb of the morning.

Omelet Surprise or Baked Alaska.

For a whole bridal supper of loaves the ice cream could be served as a baked Alaska. Take an inch thick layer of sponge cake—it could appropriately be angel cake—and turn on to it a brick of ice cream, the cake being wider and longer, so as to jut out beyond the cream. Now ice the whole with a stiff meringue, which may be put on plain and covering the ice perfectly or may have roses, etc., piped upon it.

When covered and garnished, put this into a hot oven until the meringue sets and is lightly browned. Individual services may be made by using slices of ice cream on slices of cake covered with meringue.

Bridal Vegetables.

Cauliflower has been described as like a bridal bouquet, and when beautifully cooked it may be so and it need not smell up the house. When cauliflower is blanched quickly and then gently cooked it will not send an ugly odor through the house. Handsome salads may also be made of it.

A Fancy Pancake.

For an almost really, truly breakfast for a wedding party, we think a filled pancake is pretty. It could be served after an omelet and made as follows: One cup of milk, one cup of sifted flour, one tablespoon of sugar, a pinch of salt, two egg yolks, half a yeast cake, two whites of eggs, two tablespoons of cream.

Sift the flour into a bowl, make a well in it, pour in the milk and gradually stir the flour into it and beat it well, adding the sugar and the salt, then the beaten yolks of eggs and the yeast mixed with a little tepid milk. Let this batter rise for two hours, then fold in the frothed egg whites and the cream. Bake like any pancake and fill, or serve at once unfilled. For a filling cut fine three ounces of candied cherries, an ounce of angelica, the rind of half an orange and use its juice, and blend all these with a little sirup and add to them two tablespoons of apricot jam.

Or the pancake may be made thus: One cup of flour, one-fourth cup of powdered sugar, three eggs, one cup and a little more of milk to make an exceedingly thin batter, flavoring, and a bit of salt. Sift the flour before measuring it, then sift with the sugar and salt into a bowl in which make a little well. Beat the eggs, add them to the milk, pour this into the well and stir the dry into the wet until the whole is like a thin cream.

Pour on to a slowly heated hot griddle in as thin a sheet as possible. Turn in about two minutes and cook on the other side. It is difficult to get round cakes with so thin a batter, but since they are to be rolled with the filling it is better to have an oblong cake.

My Greatest Thrill

Write and tell us about the greatest thrill you ever experienced and if we print your letter we'll pay you $1. Make your letters short and snappy. Address them to "Greatest Thrill" Editor, The Chicago Tribune.

Almost a Tragedy.

A friend and I were keeping house in a small town where we were teaching. We took turns doing the work and one morning when it was my turn to start the fire for breakfast I had a great thrill. I had on a new wool bathrobe and as I reached over the stove the sleeve caught the flames and, quick as a flash, the fire ran all over me, burning off the fuzz.

It was beginning on my hair when I smothered it with blankets. I didn't have a burn, but plenty of thrills.

I. D.

Narrow Escape.

Thrill! That word don't express my experience to me.

I was teasing a spider with a blazing match. A portiere hung above. How it caught fire I never knew, but on hearing a crackling sound I glanced up and one entire side of the portiere was ablaze, just above my head. Excited and frightened, I climbed up and grabbed it and ran out with it. The wind blew the blaze back and scorched a few holes in my apron, but somehow I managed to throw the flaming mass into the yard without accident. I experience a creepy feeling yet when I see a spider. I might have been burnt, too.

A. F.

Scared by a Storm.

"Never go down to the beach when signs of a storm are in the air," warned the old gardener.

"But why?" my little friend and I asked.

"Because," resumed the old man, "in times of storms the lake rises to the top of the cliff."

At that time this seemed impossible, but later we children were to think differently.

It was on one of those still, sultry days when not a leaf on a tree stirred. My friend and I decided to take a walk, partly because we had nothing else to do, and partly because every one else thought we should remain at home. The hotel where we were staying was situated on a high cliff about 125 feet in height, below which was Lake Michigan.

By means of a stairway, belonging to the hotel grounds, my friend and I managed to reach the sandy beach. After walking for a long time we were compelled to rest. A low rumble of thunder sent our glances skyward. The sky was dark and foreboding. We looked at each other in terror, instantly recalling the warning words of the gardener.

The cliff was too steep and rocky to climb, so we started to run. The rain fell in torrents and the sky kept getting darker and darker. Upon glancing at the cliff I noticed one section that was not as bad as the others. Fancying that the water was lapping our heels, we reached the top after a hard climb. Not stopping to rest, we hastened on. By good fortune we came on a road which led to the hotel.

Tired and frightened, my friend and I burst into the room where all the boarders were seated. We told our exciting tale, believing that every one would proclaim us the heroines of the hour. Instead, all we saw was their amused glances. One of the men told us that the gardener had just been telling us one of his numerous imaginary tales that he loved.

Nevertheless, it seemed like a narrow escape and a great thrill to us.

PERISHABLE GOODS

by DORNFORD YATES

THE STORY IN RESUME:

JONATHAN MANSEL finds the safe in his London house robbed of a package of letters. He and his friends, George Hanbury and William Chandos, decide that their common enemy, "Rose" Noble, is the thief. Mansel tells them the letters are mere casual notes from Adele, wife of his cousin, Capt. Pleydell. He receives from the captain a wire announcing that Adele has disappeared in Austria. Accompanied by his two friends, Mansel dashes there by motor. Capt. Pleydell, in bed with a broken leg, reports that the search has led to a blank. Chandos discovers that Noble and his gang are secreted in the castle of Gath, situated on a mountain top. In the dead of the night Mansel and his forces enter an unoccupied wing of the old fortress. They are overheard, and Adele cries a warning to come no farther. They pretend to leave, but Mansel and Chandos hide in an archway until the next night, when they re-enter the castle and take Adele to their hiding place. They are discovered by Noble, who again gains possession of Adele. Mansel pretends to fall and hurt himself and is taken in hand by Noble. Believing Mansel unable to walk, Noble leaves him unguarded and goes up to the roof. Mansel locks him out of the castle. Noble finds Chandos hiding on the roof and takes him to a thicket that commands the castle's only exit. Mansel beats Noble to the thicket and there kills him with a single shot. He then returns to the castle, where Casemate, one of Noble's men, lays him low with a bullet.

INSTALLMENT XIII.

The Valley of the Shadow.

I SHALL never forgive myself for forgetting that Casemate was still at large. I had thought of him twice since my rescue—once as I lay by the brook awaiting Mansel's return and again whilst Mansel was gone to open the castle gate—and each time before he was back I had let some other matter thrust Casemate out of my mind.

I have no excuse to offer. It was a monstrous negligence, for which I can never account, though sometimes I strive to believe that Rose Noble's familiar possessed me to let Mansel down.

We bore him into the lovely bedchamber and laid him upon the king's bed.

When we would have taken his coat he shook his head.

"He's got me all right," he whispered, "so let me be."

I tried to say I was sorry, with the tears running down my face.

But he only smiled.

"Rot," he said gently. "Luck of the battle—that's all."

Upon the great bed sat Adèle, steady eyed as ever, but very pale. She might have been Eve, as Milton has pictured her, sitting upon the green bank, looking into the pool. Her left arm propped her, and she was sitting sideways, after the way of a child: one ring of the broken handcuffs was still about her slim leg. Her hand was in Mansel's, and their two hands lay in her lap; her beautiful head was bowed and her eyes never left the eyes of the man she loved.

On his other side lay Tester, close up against his lord. Mansel's left hand was upon him, but, though, I think, he would have licked it, the poor scrap never moved, but lay as still as an image, with his chin on his little paws and his eyes upon Mansel's face.

If the others came and went I did not notice them, and after a little I found the windows open and the doors of the chamber shut.

"Punter and Bunch," said Mansel. "Search them for money and take every penny they've got. Go to Innsbruck and buy them two tickets for London. Give them these and drop them outside the town. Some one must watch them and see that they go. And the caretakers must be dealt with. Perhaps the 'doctor' will help. It shouldn't be very hard to stop their mouths. But try and mop everything up before you go."

I could only nod, and when he had seen me do this he closed his eyes.

If he suffered he never showed it. Indeed, he seemed well content. And when Adèle stooped to kiss him a light that was not of this world came into his eyes.

Once I made to rise and leave them, but, interpreting my movement, Mansel lifted his hand and bade me stay.

So we three visited together, as we had waited together the day before, but this time under a shadow which would not pass.

My eye stole round the room.

The chamber was full of light and a broad sash of sunshine was lying athwart the wall. The black oak, the gold, and the crimson feasted the eye. The tapestries beckoned into the glades they pictured, and the four men-at-arms about the bed insisted upon the presence they had been set to keep. All I can say is that the presence was there. For once fate had not bungled, but had laid a king upon a king's bed to die.

Then I thought of Maximilian and of the exquisite surname which he had won, and at last I saw the writing which had been all the time upon the wall.

Destiny will be served. For more than four hundred years that room had been swept and garnished, had stood ever ready and waiting for "The Last of the Knights." Jonathan Mansel, gentleman, had come into his own.

My eyes returned to the bed—to read as dreadful a message as ever I saw.

We had drawn the coverlet before we had laid him down, exposing a silken quilt that had, I think, once been white, but was now yellow with age. Upon this there was now a great bloodstain, very slowly spreading about his hips.

The terrible sight shocked me and I covered my eyes.

Upon the great bed sat Adèle, steady eyed as ever,
but very pale.

Adèle was speaking. "Can we do nothing, my darling? No single thing?"

Very gently he shook his head. "If we were in London," he murmured, "they might have a shot; but I'm very comfortable, and it's a great relief to know that we're out of the wood."

A dry sob shook Adèle.

"Another wood's coming, Jonah; it's very near. I must go into that alone—and there aren't any leaves on the trees."

Mansel smiled very tenderly.

"The spring's in your heart, my darling. The trees will break at your coming, and the wood will become your bower."

Adèle shook her lovely head.

"Ah, Jonah, I've no heart left. If we could have gone in together, I wouldn't have cared; but it's . . . so dreadful, Jonah, to face it alone."

"Hush, my darling. William will see you through. Think only how rich you made me, that I'm going laden with a treasure which no customs can take away. Remembering that, my lady, how can you mourn? See what a tide I'm taking. It's never been half so high in all my life. I'm going out on the very full of the flood, and the ebb that might have hurt me will never run."

"It's our tide you're taking, Jonah—our wonderful shining tide. And I've got to stand on the shore and see it go down. I could have borne it with you. It never would have fallen, so long as you were beside me—to share our lovely secret and teach me to play the game."

FOR the first time a troubled look came into his face.

"It's better like this, my sweet. We might have slipped and fallen, or——"

"Never," sobbed Adèle. "You know it. Not if Boy were to live for fifty years. You love me, and that's enough. Your arms have been about me, and I've kissed your blessed lips, and I'd have lived on that memory——"

"Live on it still, my queen. Do me that matchless honor. Lift up the heart I touched because I touched it, the eyes I kissed because a man knelt and looked up and saw himself in them."

"O Jonah, if love could do it, it should be done. But it's strength alone that can help me, and all my strength is in you. You don't know your strength, my darling. You carry so lightly what no other man could lift. We've always leaned on you, Jonah: the first thing I learned of Boy was to lean upon you. When they took me that day by Sava, I knew you'd come. I wasn't afraid, because I knew you'd find me and pull me out. I wasn't afraid of Rose Noble—I told him so. I told him he hadn't an earthly and that, if he took me to hell, you'd follow me down and break him and carry me back. And I wasn't afraid to love you and take your love—to play with the fire of heaven, for I knew I could count on your strength to bring us through. But now . . . you're going, my darling, and I must fend for myself. And I'm lost and beggared and beaten, and—O, Jonah, I'm terribly afraid."

Mansel put up a hand and touched her hair.

"I found my strength in your nature, in the light of your steady brown eyes and the flash of your smile; in your beautiful voice and your laughter and the play of your little hands; in the lisp of your footfalls and, at last, in the brush of your lips. You gave me my strength, my darling; and the spirit that lighted my life can light its own. Two days ago in this room you made me a king—of your own sweet will, though death had his ear to the keyhole and terror his eyes on the latch. That's not the way of fear."

"But you were with me, Jonah. I tell you, with you to lean on, I knew no fear."

"A fiction, my beauty, a fiction. You mustn't bow down to an image that you set up. It wasn't I that set the stars in your eyes or gave that fine, proud curve to your beautiful mouth. Adèle was a great lady before ever she heard my name. So lift up your head in the old familiar way. Look fate in the eyes, my darling, and he'll always give you the wall."

Adèle seemed to brace herself. Then she took his hand and kissed it and held it against her heart.

"I'll try," she said quietly. "If Tester will let me, I'll do what I can to help him; and as soon as we've got our bearings, Tester and I will try."

I saw the dog's ears lift, but he never stirred.

"Poor little chap," said Mansel. "I'm afraid it'll hit him hard."

Then he spoke to the scrap and told him that he must look after Adèle and that soon he was to be her dog, "for you see, old fellow," he murmured, "I've got to go away. And it's not like the other times, for this time . . . I shan't come back."

A tremor ran through the dog's frame, and he gave a little whimper that wrung my heart. As plainly as if he had spoken, he was acknowledging the sentence which the man that he worshiped had passed. Devotion so piteous and so absolute would have drawn tears from any stone, and I was not surprised when beneath this turn of the roller Adèle broke down.

She slipped from the bed to the floor, buried her face in her hands, and shook like a leaf.

"I can't face it," she said wildly. "Three days ago I could have done it, but now it's too late. Two days ago the face of my world was changed. We changed it together, Jonah, you and I. But, when we changed it, we set a yoke on our necks. . . . I wouldn't go back for fifty million worlds—our yoke's my pride and glory, the loveliest jewel that ever a woman wore. They were going to tattoo me, Jonah—to write your name on my back. I wish to God they'd done it; but it wouldn't have been the same as the yoke we put on together two days ago. And now I've got to carry . . . our yoke . . . alone. Between us, its weight was nothing. It had no weight. Day and night I'd have worn it, and life would have been the lighter because it was there. But alone, Jonah . . . alone. How can I lift up my head with a millstone about my neck? How can I lift up my heart, when my fellow is gone?"

Great beads of sweat were standing on Mansel's brow; but his voice, though low, was steady as it had ever been.

"'The one shall be taken,'" he said, "'and the other left.' That is the private touchstone of the great Alchemist himself. Only the greatest hearts come to be put to such a shining proof, and those that pass it, my lady, emerge so tempered that no blow can ever dent them and they can turn the edge of any sorrow."

Adèle dragged herself up and knelt to the bed; as she leaned over blindly, Mansel put his arm round her neck.

And then, for a while, there was silence, and the whisper of the water, taking its leap from the terrace, was all the sound we heard.

Tester lifted his head and looked at the wall.

At first I could hear nothing; then came a step in the passage, and an instant later Hanbury opened the door.

As he looked at the bed—

"Ah, George," said Mansel, and smiled.

Hanbury glanced behind him, and a tall, fresh-faced man came into the room.

"This is Dr. Buchinger," said George. "He is an Innsbruck surgeon who happened to be at Lass."

The other bowed to Adèle; then he stepped to the bed.

I was just in time to catch Tester, who would have flown at his throat, but the surgeon ignored the flurry and, frowning a little at the blood stain upon the quilt, stooped to set his fingers on Mansel's wrist.

There was a breathless silence.

Then he took a case from his pocket and straightened his back.

"I must give an injection," he said. "Please see if the room is ready and bring a shutter or something on which you may carry him in."

. . . . .

"YOU see," said George, "it was like this. I knew it was a chance in a million, but there was the car waiting, and the bookseller ready to help. I would have gone to Innsbruck, for I hadn't much hope of Lass. 'Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?' But my father's a doctor, you know, and I knew we were up against time—hemorrhage. You don't die of the wound; you die of loss of blood. I tell you, I had next to no hope.

"All the way I kept wondering how I could smother the rumors my action was going to start. Call in a doctor and you always open the sluice. When I thought of the flood behind, my foot went out to the brake. It amounted to this—I was putting all our shirts on the rankest outsider that ever was saddled up. Then I thought of the shock his death would be to Adèle and the awful look in your face as we carried him in. . . .

"By the time we ran into Lass, I had a half-baked plan.

"We drove to the local surgeon's. His door was open and, by the grace of God, he was just showing Buchinger out. Then I made a most happy mistake. I took Buchinger for the local and the local for Buchinger's man. Before the bookseller could stop me, I'd asked if he could speak English, and when he said 'yes,' I dragged him into the house and started in. There was no time for finesse; my only card was the money, so I jolly well bunged it in. I said if he'd do the case, we'd pay him a thousand pounds—and another four thousand pounds three months from today, provided we'd reason to think that he'd held his tongue. Then I took out the wallet that Mansel keeps in the car and laid the notes on the table before his eyes. He seemed rather staggered and looked at me very hard. Then the bookseller put in his oar. 'I will give you my word,' he said, 'that there is nothing to fear. This gentleman is saving a lady's name.' That semed to reassure Buchinger, but still he wouldn't say 'yes.'

"'Dr. Rachel must help me,' he said, and looked at the wallah that I had thought was his man.

"Then I saw my mistake and that he must be another and bigger pot.

"'By all means,' said I, and added two hundred and fifty to what there was on the board.

"The two of them looked at the notes.

"Then Rachel made a noise like a siphon and picked his up. . . .

"Well, he has a kind of clinic attached to his house. All the stuff for an operation was ready to hand. Without Buchinger, he'd have been hopeless—forgotten from A to Z. But Buchinger knows his job. He called for paper and pencil and made out a list. When he'd done, he checked it over; then he gave it to Rachel and told him to 'get those things into the car.' Five minutes later we picked him up at a chemist's two streets away."

"You've saved his life," said I.

"That remains to be seen," said George. "But if I have, it's pure fluke. Buchinger was leaving the house to catch his train. He was actually on the doorstep. And Rachel could no more have done it than you or I. Clever enough, no doubt; but take him out of his groove and he loses his mind."

This estimate, if not exact, was unpleasantly near the truth. As Rachel was bidden he did—with an excellent grace; but the poor man's composure was gone, and his efforts to bring it to heel were as obvious as they were vain. This made us all fear for his discretion; but the bookseller presently insisted that the sight of familiar surroundings would send this disorder away and that, once he was back in his province, we could count upon his prudence as upon that of a sage.

This comforted us, for there was much to be done, and our cup of anxiety was full.

When the operation was over, Buchinger told us plainly that, so far from his life being saved, Mansel might die any minute during the next three days.

"When he thought he was dying," he said, "he was perfectly right. He was dying—and dying fast. He is now no longer dying; Dr. Rachel and I have stopped that. But he is standing still—on the very edge of death. And there we must try to keep him, for nothing that I can do can draw him back. If he should live for three days, he will himself draw back; and then a medical student could make him well. But if, before then, he slips—that is the end.

"I shall, of course, stay here. As luck will have it, my holiday does not end for another six days. But Dr. Rachel must go. You will fetch him again this evening, when he will bring my things and some drugs that I want. And, if you will keep your secret, I think I should drive into Lass by some indirect way. Of course, you should have a nurse—two nurses. But women would talk. Only, I fear for the health of that beautiful girl."

We drew what cheer we could from these solemn words and, since Adèle was with Mansel, turned with relief to the business of setting our house in order as best we might.

Rose Noble lay still unburied, for Carson and Bell had left him and rushed to the castle directly they heard the shot, and, finding the truth so dreadful, had rightly stayed within call. And, since another grave had now to be dug, we put these two matters in train before anything else.

THE surgeons had not seen Casemate, for, while George was gone for a doctor, the servants had taken the body into the dining room. For this I was thankful, for to help a man out of a trespass is one thing, but to stand accessory to homicide is, as they say, a different pair of shoes.

And here I may say that, if Rachel was too much bemused, Buchinger was far too wary to ask any questions at all; he must have suspected that Mansel's was not the only blood that had been shed, but he saw the danger of knowledge and held his peace.

When he had returned to the sickroom and George had gone off with Rachel to drive him to Lass, we carried Casemate's body down to the second car, and Bell and Rowley and I drove up to the wood. And there we laid the fellow to such rest as a murderer has; and I trust he will lie undisturbed for the rest of our days, for, do what we would, we could not withdraw my knife, but were forced to bury the dead with this document fast in his back.

Until these grim rites were over I could not rest, for, if dead men can tell no tales, a corpse can speak for itself, and I was determined to take no chances at all. George, who was very soon back, held the same view, and the four of us labored like fury until the business was done.

When we left the thicket we took with us Punter and Bunch and cast them into the kitchen, which they had turned into a gaol. When they saw their quarters, the two looked ready to burst; but, if they disliked their fortune, they had only themselves to thank. I do not suppose that hospitality was ever shown so grudgingly or taken so ill, but, though we hated their presence, we thought it wise not to enlarge them until we should leave the castle for good and all.

We then set the caretakers free.

As may be believed, they were half dead of apprehension. Indeed, their one idea was to fly the place, and, but for the bookseller, whom they had known for some years, we should have had no choice but to detain them by force.

Rose Noble, of course, had bought them; and once he was fairly installed they could not go back. They could not betray his presence without disclosing that they had betrayed their trust, and obeyed in fear and trembling their new and terrible lord. They had in the end made up their minds to vanish, but he had divined their intention and, coming upon them whilst they were packing some traps, had cuffed their right feet together and locked them into their room. In this miserable state we found them, full of lamentation and the expectation of death and entirely persuaded that, even if they were saved, as the result of their bondage they would be lame for life. Indeed, when we cut the links they both declared that they could not possibly walk, that the iron had set up gangrene, and other faint-hearted rubbish that wearied us all. With infinite patience, however, the bookseller took them to task, and when he had at last convinced them that they were whole, made it plain that they still had a chance of avoiding such penalties as they had justly earned. At this they pricked up their ears, and within the hour it was settled that we would repair such damage as might have been done to the house and would hold our tongues, provided they served us truly so long as we stayed. The terms were not to their liking, but since beggars cannot be choosers they had to agree, and the woman cooked us some luncheon that very day.

WHEN George drove to Lass to seek Rachel that afternoon, he fetched from the inn what few belongings we had left there against our return, and giving out that Mansel had crushed his foot and lay in a peasant's cabin in danger of losing his leg, sowed the seed of a story for Rachel to tell. Him we took back to a junction some miles below Lass and promised to meet him there at ten the next day.

The bookseller flatly refused to let us convey him at all, maintaining that it was to our interest that he should go as he came, and so be forearmed to affirm that, if there was trouble abroad, it was not at the Castle of Gath. His housekeeper, a notorious gossip, was aware that he had intended to visit the castle that day; any perilous rumors, therefore, were sure to be brought straight to him, and if he was able to disclaim an acquaintance with strife he would be able to crush them once for all. His one appearance in the car could be explained well enough; Hanbury had met him at the crossroads in some distress, and he had offered to show him the surgeon's house.

The debt we owe to that man can never be paid. He had a heart of gold. Most brave, discreet and understanding, he threw himself into our venture as though it had been his own, and would, I think, have cheerfully gone to the stake rather than have spoken one word to our embarrassment. We had purchased the surgeons' silence as well as their skill; the caretakers went in fear; but the bookseller held his tongue and gave of the best he had because he liked us and without, I am sure, any thought of any reward.

By dusk some sort of order had been set up. Rooms had been cleaned and prepared for Buchinger and Adèle, and each of us had his quarters and his particular charge.

That night a note went to Poganec.

> I am free and safe and sound—at a terrible cost. Jonah has been wounded and lies at the point of death.
> ADÈLE.

AND there he lay for three days, as Buchinger had said, in the room that Adèle had once used in the southwest tower.

Then the mists parted and they said he would live.

"I think," said Buchinger, "that he will recover fast. If all goes well, he can leave his bed in a fortnight, and in another week you may drive him home. But not before that. Tomorrow morning I shall return to Innsbruck, but shall visit him twice in each week until he is well. No doubt you will kindly convey me in one of your cars. Dr. Rachel must still attend him twice in the day; but when a week has gone by, once in the day will do. I have told Miss Adèle that now his servant may very well take the night watch, and if you do not want another patient upon your hands, I recommend you to insist that this is done."

Here something touched his leg, and we both looked down to see Tester wagging his tail.

"Ah, you monkey. Yes, that is all very well. I come to save your master and you fly in my face. You are carried off, breathing threatenings, and thirsty to drink my blood. And now I have done it in your teeth, I am your very good friend and must be noticed and honored."

Tester rolled over and put his paws in the air, and when the surgeon stooped, jumped up to lick his face.

I never saw the dog so use any other stranger, and he would not look at Rachel, for all his zeal. With this blunt discernment all his conduct was of a piece. We had set a box for him in the gallery of stone, and there he had lain, like a mouse, since the day on which Mansel was hit, never going farther than the terrace, the door to which stood open for him to use. He never sought to enter the sick-room, but always rose and listened whenever the door was opened by day or night, and anxiously scanned the faces of such as went. So for those three black days. After that he went out and about and took his ease and only kept his box when we went to bed. Then came the day when Mansel asked for him; and when I went to the door to go and find him there he was, standing on the threshold, with one paw raised and his eyes seeking confirmation of what he believed to be the truth.

I do not seek to magnify his instinct, but, well as we knew him, these things astonished us all, and if speech was denied him he had, I think, another and finer faculty.

There seemed little doubt that, so far, our secret was safe. We drew our supplies, not from Lass but from towns in other directions from twenty to fifty miles off; since the day of Mansel's wounding we had not been seen in Lass, and we fetched and carried Rachel by devious ways; when we left the drive we did so with great circumspection; the castle gates were kept shut, and no lights were shown in the building or on the cars.

An Unusual Grandmother.

I had been constantly bothered for a date by a young man who did not appeal to me very much. One day he called, asking whether he could take me to see a show the following Saturday. I had already been invited by another man to see the same show, and consequently refused the first man's invitation, giving the excuse that my grandmother was coming to town and I wanted to entertain her.

Imagine my embarrassment when in the lobby of the theater we met the first fellow. He said, "Good evening. What an unusual grandmother you have."

Needless to say, I didn't receive any calls from him after that. A. O. B.

"Yes, We Have No Teacher."

My most embarrassing moment occurred during my senior year at high school. My teacher had been absent from school for several days on account of illness. Although I did not wish her illness to be prolonged, nevertheless I much preferred that she be at home rather than at school.

One day, assuming that she had not returned to her post, I rushed into my classroom shouting, "Yea, she's not here!" I looked up, and there, sitting in her usual place, coldly staring at me, sat my teacher. Her look spoke volumes.

My classmates giggled. My embarrassment was immeasurable. If only I could have vanished from sight at that moment, but it was not to be. I was compelled to endure her cold glances and icy stares for the rest of the semester. J. W.

Caught in a Fib.

My most embarrassing moment happened just the other night, and I cannot think of it without blushing.

It was the first time I had gone out with this particular fellow. We were in a cab coming home from a show, when he began telling me how he admired my eyes, and particularly my "curly eyelashes," saying they looked so natural and beautiful without any makeup on them, and I assured him it was foolishness for any one ever to put mascaro on their lashes, when the cab gave a violent jerk and my purse fell on the floor of the machine, opening, and out came my eyelash curler, mascaro, and all the rest of my make-up.

Was I embarrassed? Oh! Oh.

Once Too Often.

I shall never forget my recent embarrassing experience. Getting off a street car I saw my sister walking home from her daily shopping, with her arms full of bundles. Catching up with her I snatched one of them from under her arm and ducked behind a parked auto.

No sooner had I discovered my mistake than I found myself face to face with an angry policeman and a curious crowd. Trying to explain my mistake, I was on the verge of tears.

Just then my real sister turned the corner with the same hat and coat on as my imaginary sister wore. Everybody had a good laugh, but I, never again! I. S.

Both Returned.

My dancing partner and I were not getting along so well together out on the floor, so by mutual consent we agreed we were both tired and departed. After escorting her to her home, which was only two blocks distant, I went back to the ballroom.

It was still early in the evening. After a few minutes my "date" met me, face to face, and our embarrassment was mutual. L. I.

"Just Crooks."

It was election day in our small town. I met an old friend who was also my former employer on the street. He inquired if I had been to the polls yet, to which I replied, "O, what's the use of voting; they are all just a bunch of crooks anyway."

Imagine how I felt the next day when the paper gave his name as one of the successful candidates.

Had to Vacate.

My most embarrassing moment happened when I was out with my girl friend. After the show we went into a drug store for some ice cream. After giving our order I reached into my pocket to see if I had my money. Finally, after looking in all my pockets, I had to tell my girl friend that I had lost it.

As she didn't have any with her, we had to walk out, much to her amusement and my embarrassment, before the waitress came with our order.

GESTURES LEND BEAUTY TO HANDS

by Antoinette Donnelly

Grace and Poise Lie in Ease and Expressiveness as Well as in Careful Grooming and Shapeliness.

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.]—We're looking for the girl with the singing hands. We just heard about her. She's off on a vacation right now, but when she returns we must see those hands of hers.

"Other women's hands may talk. But hers sing."

That's what her friends say, anyway. Meaning that every little gesture has a rhythm of its own.

What do your friends say about yours? What do you say, yourself?

There is a comedy to be released shortly, if it hasn't been already, in which faces are eliminated from the picture entirely. Proving, if nothing else, that you can tell a story without a face, which gives us the idea of suggesting a beauty contest with faces masked, and to ask what chances you think would be yours to win a trophy in the test?

As we've remarked before, we are getting to be a nation of beauty seekers whose quest is decidedly not confined to facial perfection. We've gotten beyond the need of advice about keeping the nails presentable. It's a shiftless one who doesn't tend her manicure faithfully. It's an indifferent one who isn't white under the nail tips and glowing with some shade of polish atop. It's a queer one who has to turn her fingers in to hide the chewed down nails or those that aren't on intimate terms with the cleansing implements.

Pride of hands is a current vanity. You see more cared-for nails than neglected ones. It's a golden age for hands, really, what with the labor-saving devices to preserve them against roughening, reddening, knotting and gnarling, and split and raggedy nail tips. Another reason for the common occurrence of good hands is the wholesale invasion of women in business fields where carelessness in this regard would create an unfavorable impression against their owners. It's an accepted fact that taste in stenographers and secretaries is guided somewhat [quite-a-what, in truth] by the ease with which they may be looked at.

Picture for yourself the lack of ease watching a flying pencil in unkempt hands. Speed and accuracy in transcribing notes would hardly relieve the untidy impression. Or, in stores, say, the customer's sensitive soul would shrink from an article presented with dirty hands. They're saved the shrinking, however, by the universal demand made of store employés that their hands be presentable.

Bridge, as the favorite game of the moment, contributes its share to the pride of hands we talk about.

So, we feel that advice about this phase of hand beauty is superfluous.

Gestures Create Grace.

But there is an angle which may be talked about, which yet awaits development in perfectly groomed circles even. It is grace and eloquence of gesture. Making the hands sing, in other words. Women of other races have this accomplishment more highly developed than we. Instinctively those of Latin blood possess hand expressiveness that is charming. Perhaps our idea of musical hands would be a modification of Latin gestures, since no national characteristic can be transplanted wholly onto another people thinking and talking a different language, nor is it desirable that it be. Someone says there is something about the English language that ties the hands, something about French and Italian that sets them in motion.

However, we're not advocating foreign gestures with the English language. In fact, we're not advocating a great many gestures, but rather, ease and grace with those we have, or learning a few nice ones if our hands go into the classification known as dumb hands—hands that say nothing at all. A beautiful hand lying limply in a lap isn't nearly so fascinating as the same hand playing upon the eye organ with vivid gestures.

Actresses have to learn gestures so that the hands do not become just appendages to be dragged along with the body. Sometimes their gestures become a featured part of their personality. You can think of a dozen prominent stage beauties, thought of whom conjures up certain hand mannerisms that are definitely a part of their personality.

One outstanding stage woman shows a marked trait of individuality in the way the back of her hand is carried gracefully over her cheek. Another has a way of "wheedling" with a loosely relaxed wrist and a hand that carries the pleading gesture with an up and out movement of the upturned palm. There is still another who, in sitting, lends a certain interested listening expression to her hands with the fingers pointed downward, one hand on top of the other as if poised for the verbal flight that will be her turn when the present speaker is through.

Putting Expression Into the Hands.

There are gestures that suggest motion and action although at the moment the hands may be quietly poised. They look ready to move on a second's inspiration.

Such are the things we mean when we talk of injecting expression into hands. A face that never changes expression, no matter how perfect its features and coloring, becomes, after a time, an uninteresting object to look at. The same face given to overemphasizing every remark with a grimace of one kind or another might become quite unpleasant to watch. But one with expression playing over it, as the mood and interest change, is spellbinding. And so it is with hands, or so hands may be made to be.

One cannot set down rules for these gestures any more than one can say for facial expression: Look happy, so-and-so; look sad, so-and-so; look coy, so-and-so. One can only say that hands may play a part in conversation and in playing it may create an impression of eloquence, or vividness, or charm, or personality.

There is a popular stage star whose gestures are particularly lovely. They held me fascinated during the entire performance one evening. Later I interviewed the woman. I looked for beautifully tapered fingers, for the perfect molded hand. My story was to be how she kept them so. Instead I found them large, not any too shapely, but with such infinite skill of gesture they were transformed immediately they were in action.

Flexibility Is Important.

There is a principle of grace that rules such hand charm. It is flexibility. Every movement of the hand must be done with loose wrist and fingers. In such manner are they ready to respond to any impulse. With this flexibility the fingers are usually slightly flexed—as they should be. One must learn to check a tendency to stiffen the hand and fingers. Every awkward gesture is born of stiffness.

One common experiment women might try the graceful gesture on involves the movements attending the application of powder from the small vanity case. One girl doing this is fascinating to watch; another embarrassing. It isn't in the prettiness of the hand, either, that the difference lies. It's in the gesture solely, and the flexibility or nonflexibility of the directing hand.

Practice your gestures before a mirror. Watch for a rhythmic movement of the hands while you talk. Don't be self-conscious about it. It's an added charm to those you already possess. Why shouldn't eloquence be added to those perfectly attended digits, anyway?

BIOLOGY, THE PRIME FACTOR OF LIFE

By Doris Blake

Reg. U S Pat. Off

The Viewpoints of Man and Woman Will Always Be Diametrically Different Because of Their Physical Natures, Says Doctor in a Book on the Human Body.

HOME CHURCH
Spiegler

WE poor femmes pause in the day's occupation to inquire why men act like that. What in the name of all that is good and holy prompts them to do those things we can't understand about them?

They're occupied, about the same time, with such questions as: Are Women People, or What Are They?

Why do men balk at matrimony, woman asks. Why aren't they as eager to be tied for life as we are? Why are they more restless under the yoke than we?

Why will men lie and coax and fawn in order to get a woman to accede to their wishes? And why will women go on believing those promises, regardless of the circumstances under which they're made?

Concerning the social problems usually encompassed by the term, "The Woman Question," why is man so non-understanding?

If you are to believe Dr. Logan Clendening, author of "The Human Body" [Alfred A. Knopf], men and women might just as well abandon the idea of ever trying to grasp each other's viewpoint on those problems that are of significance to the human race, because each has its own viewpoint and never the twain shall meet in a common understanding.

The problems are biological ones—therefore impossible of the same grasp by the sex that has one rôle to play in the process of reproduction and the sex that has another rôle to play.

All Boils Down to Biology.

The position of woman, the equality or inequality of the sexes, woman's place in the sun, the double standard of morals are dismissed by Clendening as social, moral or economic problems, and reduced to the straight biological problems he would have perspiring young dramatists and sociologists and other problem-solvers accept as the plain truth and nothing but.

"At times," says Clendening, "this is faintly recognized and even mildly mentioned, but in most discussions of the subject the biology and psychology of the sex are treated as if they did not exist."

From the beginning of time until its end Dr. Clendening insists that "males will look at the phenomena of existence from one viewpoint and females from another."

Illustrating His Argument.

To illustrate his point Dr. Clendening relates his experiments with a fiction tale by W. Somerset Maugham which he submitted for perusal to women, fairly representative as to intelligence.

In the story, "The Painted Veil," a wife is entertaining her clandestine lover, who happens to be the lieutenant governor of the province. Their seance is interrupted by hearing some one trying to turn the knob of the door to the room. The intruder goes away and the lovers convince themselves that it was merely a servant.

The next day the woman's husband discloses the fact that he was the intruder and that thus he assured himself of positive knowledge of the intrigue. The woman admits it frankly and says that if she is divorced her lover will divorce his own wife and marry her. At this the husband is highly amused. His amusement provokes her to the most positive reiteration of faith in her lover. Whereupon the husband,* a British government bacteriologist stationed in China, announces that he has been ordered to an inland city where cholera is raging. If he takes her with him it means very probable death for both. If he goes alone it probably means death for him.

He generously proposes that if her lover will make a statement in writing to the effect that when she becomes a widow the lover will divorce his own wife and marry her the husband will go to the cholera infested city alone. If the lover refuses she must either go with her husband into the danger zone or submit to divorce under conditions amounting to disgrace.

The lover, on hearing the terms of the proposal, is thoroughly upset. He fumbles around in an inglorious manner and finally flatly refuses. The woman is aghast with astonishment. She has believed every one of his professions. He points out to her how his chances of advancement in the service would be jeopardized.

She replies merely by saying: "But you said you loved me and would do anything for me." He acknowledges this, submits it was a justifiable overstatement under the circumstances, and hurries on to show that his wife is a perfectly innocent party and should not be required to suffer for their misdeeds.

He talks of his duty to his children and their right to be protected from disgrace. She keeps reiterating his protestations of love and his promises. Then she wants to know whether he is willing to allow her to go to her death. His answer is, in effect, that he is afraid he is willing to do just that.

They Call Him "Cad."

"Every woman to whom I have submitted this document," says Clendening, "has without exception applied exactly the same word to the lover. He is a cad. This is a female word, carrying with its use all the force and despotism of a shibboleth. The truth being that whether or not there is any word for him, the man is, under duress, exhibiting the quintessence of the male viewpoint. He is doing exactly what all wives, all safe women, all vested authority, have planned through all the ages that he should do."

If foolish women disregard the plain guide posts set up for the protection of women by church, state, home and Rotary, Clendening says, they have themselves to blame if they come to grief.

He does allow, for the encouragement of women fortunately, that if man and his viewpoint and his polygamous instincts cannot be understood, at least he can be controlled. And the only thing that can control him is the common sense of the female—the sense to lead him to the altar or the justice court, the sense to use the means her old mothers fashioned for her to bind him with hoops of steel.

Matrimony, according to our authority, isn't man's instinctive taste. "He will bow his neck to matrimony only if that is the only way out. He wonders all the rest of his life why he did it. He never submits tamely."

That's the nature of the critter, then, if you accept the word of one of him. So, instead of trying to understand him or make him try to understand you, it is enough to have him understand after you've attracted him that you require guardianship, protection and service because of the part you play in the process of reproduction.

If his biological urge is to roam the earth seeking adventure, a necessary mild interpretation of Clendening's analysis of the male-instinct, rejoice that you have church, state, home and Rotary ranged on your side to keep his neck bowed to the yoke.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped, addressed envelope.

Too Many Quarrels.

"Dear Miss Blake: My sister and her beau quarrel incessantly. When he comes back she always forgives him. Please advise. BILLIE."

Point out to her that they will eventually break up unless the quarrels are eliminated.

Vain Hope.

"Dear Miss Blake: What would you think of a young man whom you liked, and who you know liked you, making no attempt to get in touch with you for six months? UNHAPPY."

I wouldn't think. Just try to make yourself realize the futility of further hopeful waiting.

Don't Encourage Him.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 34 and a widow. A widower would like me to marry him, but I don't care to. Is it best for him not to see me? MARIE."

You don't return his love, so it would be wiser not to see him. Give him the opportunity to seek friendships elsewhere.

Give Up.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am in love. I try to talk to the fellow, but he gives me no satisfying answer. How can I earn his love? BROKENHEARTED."

He doesn't respond to your attempts at friendliness, so apparently they aren't to his liking. Don't try again.

Unsocial.

"Dear Miss Blake: I can't get myself a girl. I am not much on parties and do not fancy dancing. What's the trouble? BLUE EYES."

Girls love to dance, and parties are a favorite means of entertainment with them. Better cultivate a taste for them.

Play Fair.

"Dear Miss Blake: I go with a fellow who worships me, showers me with candy and various presents, but I do not love him. What shall I do? WONDERING."

Give him up. It isn't fair to accept his devotion knowing you can't return his love, Wondering.

Not on Speaking Terms.

"Dear Miss Blake: I love a boy, but we are not on speaking terms. I wrote to him, but he did not answer. Can I win him back? WORRIED."

There's nothing to do but wait until he acknowledges your letter or shows he's willing to make up.

No Explanation Needed.

"Dear Miss Blake: My friend saw me talking to another fellow and he has refused to talk to me since. Shall I talk to him first, or wait till he gets over his stubbornness? JUST ME."

Your actions do not call for an explanation, and to offer one would only encourage his unreasonableness.

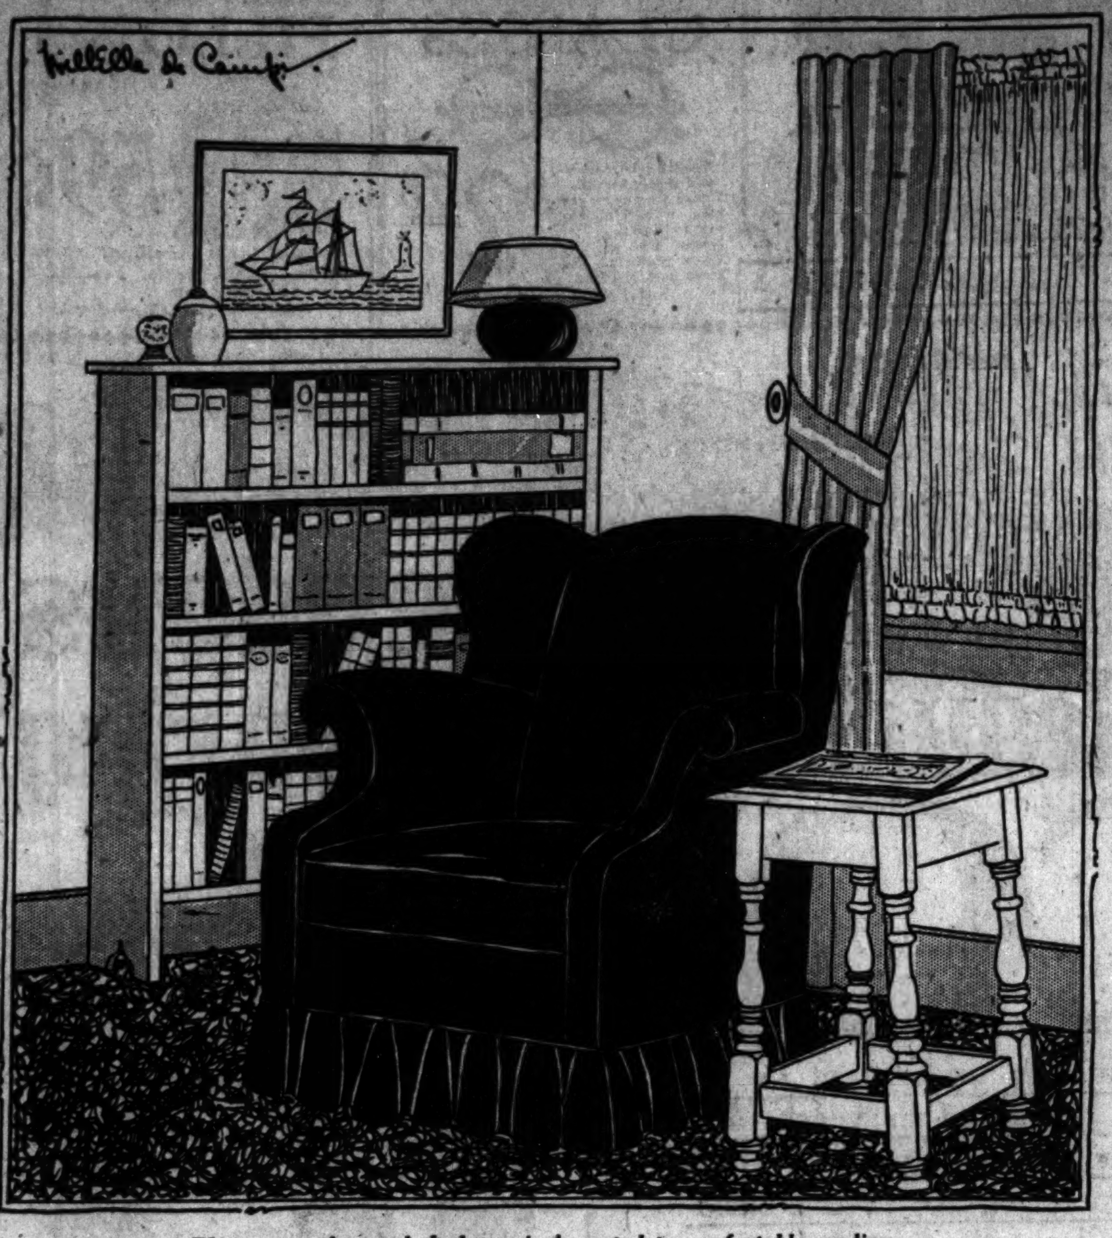
THE HOME HARMONIOUS

By WillElla de Campi

The Rooms Described Today Are Typically Masculine in Character and Will Please the Average Man of the Household.

Will Ella de Campi will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to, Will Ella de Campi, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped, addressed envelope for personal reply.



This corner of a man's bedroom is devoted to comfortable reading.

THERE can be no rigid law set down for the choosing of colors, materials and decorations of a man's room. Textiles of odd character and striking color schemes would surely dismay the conservative man, whereas on the other hand a more adventurous spirit should be allowed to indulge his own ideas of decoration in his own room.

Wall papers, hangings and carpets are often the cause of disputes. What the wife or mother would choose for herself might not satisfy the taste of the husband or son at all. Women are inclined to believe that men have no taste whatever. They forget that taste has male as well as female characteristics. Many a man is never in any way consulted about even the slightest point in the decoration and furnishing of his room. An undeniable feeling of dissatisfaction is liable to result.

Almost invariably it will be found if the choice is left to his discretion that the man will select something quite plain, and decidedly mannish—which is as it should be. Interesting decorative notes may be added, unobtrusively, of course, after the man has created a foundation for them, according to his own desires.

A room should reflect its occupant, his interests and pleasures. If he reads a great deal there should be plenty of book shelves filled with the volumes he cares for. If he smokes, well chosen smoking accessories should be conveniently placed. If writing is his pastime he should have a commodious desk, with a chair of the right shape and height, and his desk should be kept well stocked with all writing requisites. Always, always there should be at least one comfortable chair, accompanied by a good light and convenient table, for every man, no matter what his interests may be, enjoys luxurious relaxation.

As a general rule, a man does not care for color combinations which are frigidly cold and formal, though he strives to achieve a certain orderliness in color as well as in the arrangement of his furniture. He desires a quiet air of comfort and an expression of his own personality. He likes bold contrasts in harmony rather than subtle blendings of color. The materials he chooses are usually rugged in character and texture.

Delightfully expressive of an interesting individuality is the small study room which an enterprising young husband has interior-decorated for himself. Rough plaster walls are stained a pale, sunlight yellow. There are many built-in book shelves. These and the woodwork are painted black so that they make pleasing frames for the numerous books in their multi-colored bindings. At the windows are curtains of cretonne in a bright, bold flower pattern on a black ground.

At one side of the room is a fireplace with a black marble mantel. An arm chair upholstered in large black and white checked linen, piped with red, stands at one side. On a table beside it is a lamp made from an old brass candlestick, with a parchment shade. A red cigaret box and ash tray are decorated with black and white silhouettes. At the opposite side of the fireplace is a wing chair upholstered in red glazed chintz. A triangular table is conveniently tucked in beside it and it is lighted by a wrought iron reading lamp.

In the adjacent wall is another window. A flat top desk is placed with one end near the window sill so that the light comes in on the writer from the left, which is the most satisfactory and comfortable arrangement. The desk is accompanied by a rush-bottom, Windsor chair. A similar chair stands against the wall space at the other side of the desk. Inconspicuously placed in one corner is a file cabinet, painted black. The floor is covered by a taupe carpet and a colorful hooked rug is thrown down in front of the fireplace.

More conservative is the bedroom of a somewhat older man. He chooses dignified American colonial furniture, and the decorations are in keeping with this style. Woodwork is painted French gray. Two-toned gray wall paper is indistinctly patterned. At the windows are draperies of plain Indian red glazed chintz. Glass curtains are of white scrim.

On the low four post bed is a hand woven coverlet in deep blue and white. At each side of the head of the bed is a small table. A water glass and a red thermos bottle on a matching tray are placed on one table, and on the other are a pewter lamp with a parchment shade and a cloisonné box and ash tray.

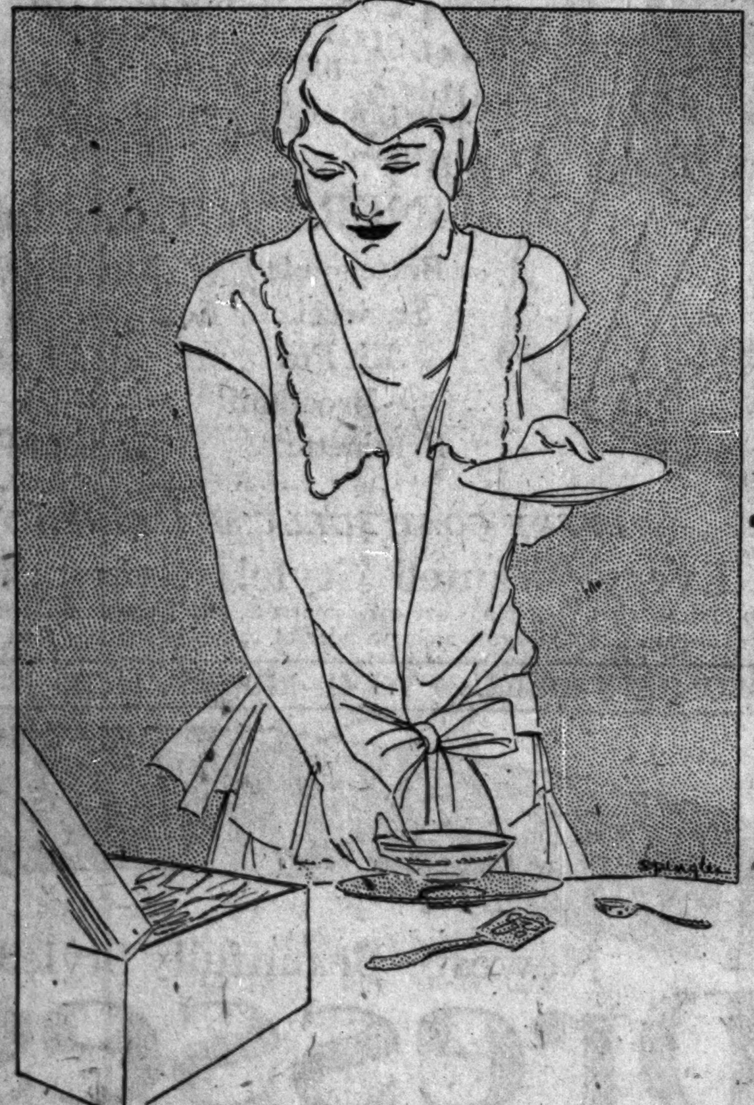
Immaculately orderly is the bureau. It holds a pair of ebony backed military brushes, a black lacquer box (for collar buttons and other small necessities which are usually scattered all over the place). Clothes brush and hand glass are backed to match the hair brushes. A tray in front of the lacquered box holds a comb, nail file, and scissors. Gray linen, hemstitched, with a simple monogram, makes a scarf which fits the top of the bureau.

In one corner of the room, as shown in the illustration, is a big, squashy wing chair. It is upholstered in serviceable dark blue denim, piped with red chintz. A low table is conveniently placed at one side. At the other is a set of open book shelves. For reading purposes this chair is most dexterously placed, as it is well lighted by a nearby window in the day time, and at night by a lamp with a wide parchment shade, standing on the book shelves. The floor covering is in a mixture of deep blue and gray. Nautical prints in dull gold frames are hung on the walls.

Old Treasures of Silver and China

Old Sheffield and Minton Are Greatly Appreciated, Nowadays, but the Uses to Which They Are Put Would Surprise the Original Owners.

BY PERSIS STANDISH.



NEW trends in table decorations make a difference in serving. Once upon a time each article of food was served in only the manner peculiar to itself and the perfectly proper fork, knife, spoon, plate, bowl, etc., accompanying. But since small apartments and informal meals are in the majority and since the craze for odd and even fantastic decorations for table and table service has come in, many things are done differently.

Once a chest of silver for a bride contained every imaginable kind of fork, knife and spoon. They were so numerous and so recondite that in some of the old services even the silversmiths are at a loss to know what they were meant for. There were duck scissors and grape scissors and partridge scissors; there were asparagus tongs and punch ladles and gravy ladles and relish forks and relish spoons. There were chutney spoons and cheese scoops; there were cake servers and sweetmeat spoons and sugar spoons with holes in them. There were fish forks and parfait spoons and ice spoons which were a combination of the spoon and fork—an instrument with the bowl of a spoon ending in the prongs of a fork. There were oyster forks which differed from clam forks, and there were small prehensible instruments that looked like diminutive daggers with which to eat hard shell crabs. There were—in a few of the mid-victorian services, the handles with which to eat corn on the cob and there were some tiny silver pinwheels with which to stir the bubbles out of champagne.

There are still to be had, of course, just such silver services—there are still some jewelers and silversmiths who will advise all manner of small differentiations in forks and spoons. They will tell you that you cannot possibly eat your asparagus with a fish fork or your salad with an asparagus fork. But who, nowadays, will listen to them? Nobody, thank heaven!

Brides, these days, have some common sense as well as charm and imagination. They can very well see that the asparagus will taste just as good eaten with the salad fork as with a fork of its own and they will have room to keep things and they will not be losing a valuable maid because she had time to do nothing but clean silver. Even though the bride has the wherewithal to buy anything she wants, she will buy only what she needs, and buy that in better quality.

Old Silver, New Uses.

With all this silver, in another generation, went also many serving dishes of silver or Sheffield. Lucky if you have inherited any of them, for they are a vogue and almost priceless now, albeit used in ways that would have shocked our grandmothers. For instance, right now on the Georgian dressing case in my husband's room repose two beautiful Georgian champagne buckets of Sheffield filled with the flowers that kind friends have sent him during his attack of flu. We are both enjoying the flowers in their delightful setting—and where, O where, is the champagne to cool in the buckets?

One friend of mine has a very fine Georgian breakfast dish with a warming pan under it. This she uses to serve vegetables at dinner because it has compartments that were meant for kidneys, bacon and eggs, but she uses them for beans, cauliflower and potatoes and so her one maid serves her party of six with vegetables that are hot when they reach the table.

Treasures Are Appreciated.

Also, in the old régime there were special dishes for each course. On the fruit plates usually there were printed or carefully painted the pictures of fruit. Such plates were never used for anything but fruit, and one never thought of eating the game course off anything but plates with paintings of pheasants or partridge or grouse, or off those delightful Staffordshire plates with printings in red or blue of gobblers and other barnyard fowl idealized out of all but an amusing semblance. There were platters to go with these, too.

Now if the housewife possesses any of these treasures she uses them as she sees fit. If she has a precious old game set in any of the finer porcelains, or even part of one, she may use the plates for service plates and if she is generous she gives the platter to a ceramic exhibition in a museum. If she possesses any of the fruit plates in the finer porcelains like Minton, these she uses under the fingerbowls on rare occasions and has them covered with a glass plate for the dessert so that they can be put away unwashed until the next time they are needed for a very special occasion, for certainly she would not subject them to the tender mercies of servants every day.

Finger bowls, too, are interestingly adapted. One hostess who has an Italian dining room with authentic old pieces uses an altar vessel of silver and its accompanying pitcher. One maid passes the bowl and another pours scented water over the fingers of the guests. A picturesque ceremony, but one that would be out of place anywhere else. Old Venetian glass finger bowls are so rare and precious now that they are used for nuts, sweetmeats, and flowers, as the finger bowls of the past generation, like everything else about it, were spacious and roomy.

THE PUDDLE

ELEANOR DUKE

BY ELEANOR JEWETT.

I found a puddle yesterday,
Not bigger than a minute;
And yet it was not very small,
For all the sky was in it.

I found it on the sidewalk
Between Jane's house and mine—
And at its edge were fallen leaves,
And in its heart, sunshine.

The puddle trembled in the wind,
Afraid that it might dry—
You see, it was so proud to be
A mirror for the sky!

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

Paris Serves a Refreshing Mixture of Black and White as a Summer Fashion Suggestion

By Bettina Bedwell.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—Now that fashions draw no color line all shades are in the running. This complicates the clothes question somewhat, because having all kinds of liberty in selecting our color schemes, we often don't know exactly what to do with it. It isn't a safe or sane course to follow our fancies of the moment in selecting colors. There is that inevitable style law that everything you wear must go harmoniously together, and tints of the same family may strike such a discord that the visual effect is painful. You know how it is when a royal blue and a purple blue get together. It is a battle in which chic is mortally wounded. This is true of any color at all. It is sure to have certain tones which simply will not behave nicely in close juxtaposition.

For this reason a good many women take one color, and a solitary tone of that color, make it their shade, and stick to it. Much easier, and in the end apt to be smarter than mixtures which are as dangerous to chic as mixed drinks are to the complexion. There are, of course, certain mixtures that never cause any such trouble, and these are combinations which can be said to be always in fashion. The leading color melange is black and white. It is part of every style season, and this season in Paris it is one of the preferred color unions.

There is nothing particularly new about black with white or white with black, but the ways that Paris has found to put black and white together are new, and the way in which these two opposites are combined is one of the important features of their vogue.

Two black and white novelties of the summer season are black and white lingerie trimmings, and black and white knitted sports ensembles.

It is a long, long time since organdy, linen, piqué, and other lingerie fabrics were so salient a part of smart frocks and coats. Black taffeta with white organdy or piqué is a favorite combination of Paris couturiers today just as it was in the Mauve Decade. So is black moire with white trimmings, black satin, black crêpe de chine, or what will you.

And the most distinctive sports costumes of the G. S. S.—Grand Social Season—in Paris are studies in black and white. The smartest of sports sweaters are done in real honest to goodness knitting just like the socks that grandma used to knit when socks were socks and built for durability and comfort. But the long lines of the tricot are the only point of resemblance that the smartest of Paris sports sweaters have to the product of grandma's knitting needles.

Black and white sweaters worn in smart Parisian society are modernistically decorated with all the figures of plane and solid geometry, beginning with simple cubes, squares and circles and going into all kinds of complicated designs. These, worked out as they are in striking black and white contrasts, and in the intermediate grays that come between, give an almost infinite variety to the basic black and white scheme of color. The jacket and skirt which completes the sports costume are usually either made of plain black or white jersey, shantung, linen, or crêpe marocai—a quartette of favorite fabrics in Paris fashions.

The first model illustrated in our sketch is one of these black-and-white, modernistically decorated sports ensembles which are Paris preferred. This model comes from Jane Regney. The jacket and skirt are made of white tuslikasha, which is much like tussor silk in appearance. It is a combination of silk and angora wool, and is so light in weight and so compact that this jacket and skirt could be put into an envelope.

The sweater is knitted in the fashion I have described, with curved bands shaded from gray to black. Notice the uneven line of the lower part of the sweater. This is a distinctive detail. A narrow belt of white indicates the waistline.

The geometric motifs of the sweater are repeated on the lower half of the jacket and the sleeves, in encrustations of gray and black tuslikasha. The collar is black. The white skirt is plaited, with three box plaits across the front.

One of the smartest and most practical phases of the black-and-white Paris mode is the black tailleur, worn with a white blouse. A single black tailleur may be worn with a blouse of white satin, white organdy, and piqué. Our second model is an illustration of the fashionable black tailleur, created by Brialix. This tailleur is shown with a blouse of white piqué. It might equally well be worn with a waist of the softer organdy or the more elegant satin.

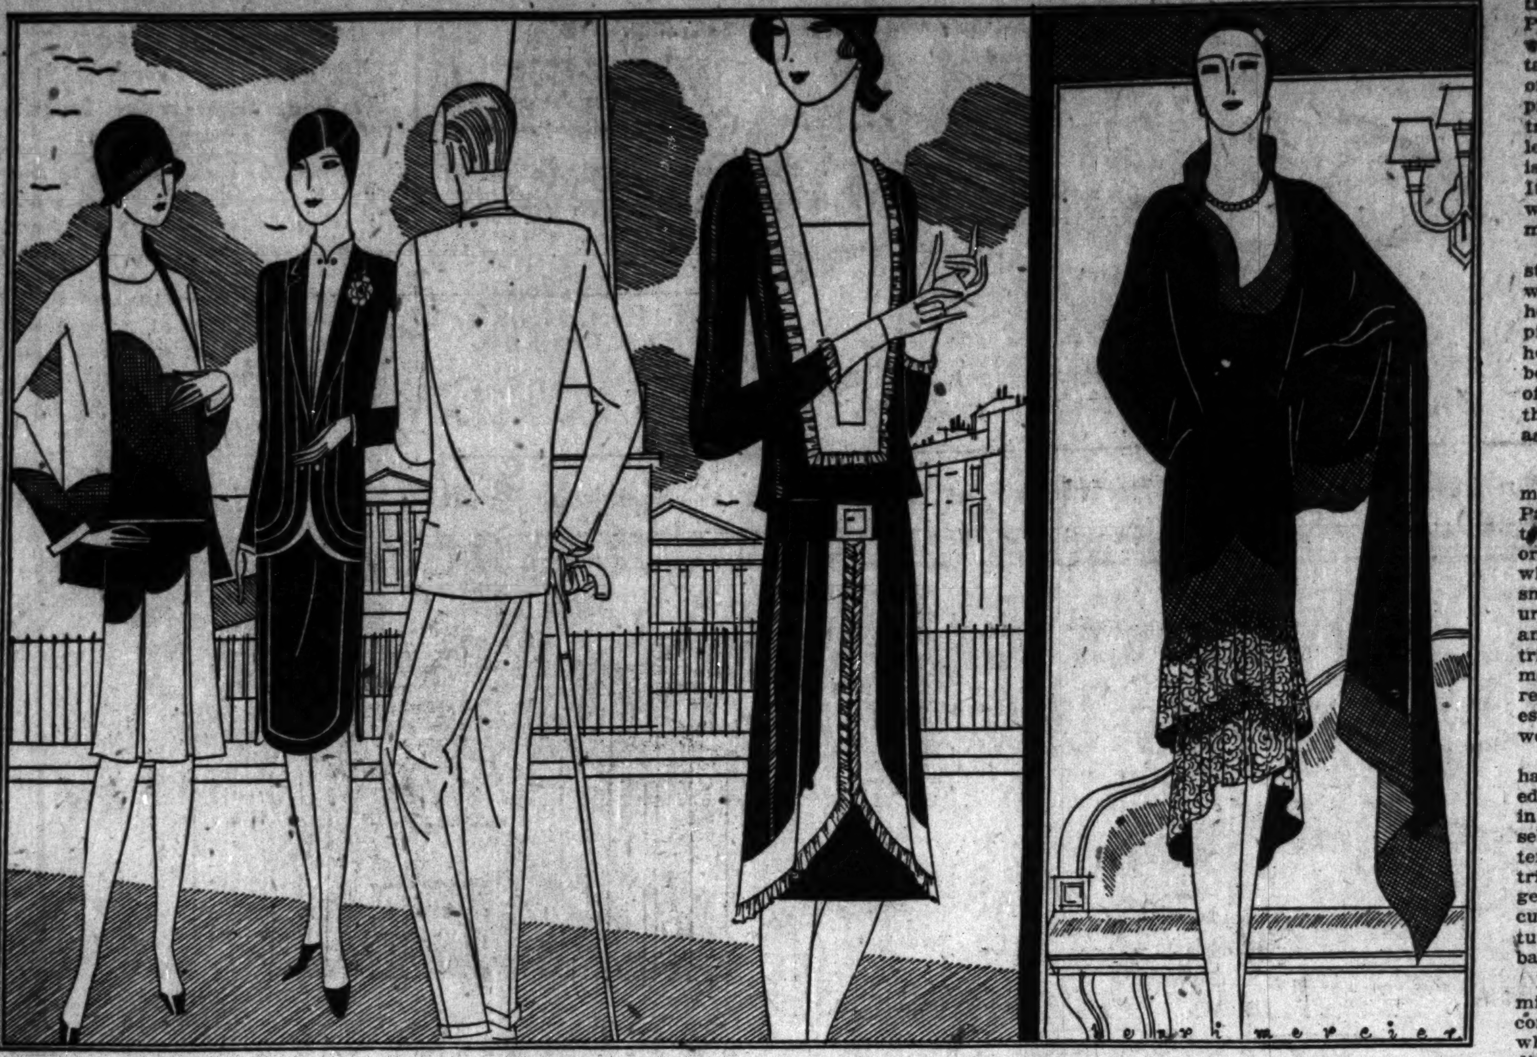
The lines of this tailleur are straight, but the curves of the jacket, with its encrusted band, and of the hemline, avoid rigidity. The white piqué blouse has a standing collar, held together by pearl studs, and the boutonniere is made of small flowers of white piqué. The lower edge of the blouse is curved in the same line as the jacket.

Choosing a summer frock which may be worn without a coat, the Parisienne often selects black satin, trimmed lavishly with white. White organdy, white georgette, or even white satin, are used to trim such smart daytime dresses. The third figure sketched here illustrates the black-and-white frock made of satin and trimmed with white georgette. This model is from Callot Soeurs, who are responsible for a number of the smartest black-and-white costumes being worn in Paris.

The blouse is cut bolero fashion, and has a deep vestee of white georgette, edged by bands of the georgette, which in turn, are edged by tiny ruffles of self material. When sheer white material is used by Paris couturiers to trim the black afternoon frock, it is generally ruffled in some way. The cuffs of this frock and the edges of the tunic are trimmed with white ruffled bands.

Black and white, as an evening color mixture, is often used in the striking contrast of pure black opposed to pure white. However, it is newer and more distinctive to have an evening frock made of some sheer black material, placed over white, as in the fourth model illustrated. This Champcommunal evening ensemble has a black chiffon frock with a square transparent yoke, and two irregular flounces of lace on the skirt, brought up to a point at the left side front, and down in a V at the center back. The lower half of these ruffles is encrusted with silver embroidery.

The wrap is a simple rectangle of black artificial velvet, with a deep border of black chiffon. This is draped, so that it hangs over the left arm in a long panel.



This white sports ensemble of tuslikasha, shown at the extreme left, is made striking by the modernistic design in black and gray on the knitted sweater.

Second, the all-black tailleur of moire is given an unusual chic by its blouse of white pique. The boutonniere is also of white pique.

Third, black satin is a favored fabric for the summer afternoon frock, and it is given distinction by ruffled bands and gilet of white georgette.

Last, black chiffon and lace, worn over a white foundation, make the smartest of summer evening frocks. A wide scarf of black velvet, edged with black chiffon, is the accompanying wrap.

LEAP YEAR PROPOSALS

Do you know of any girl who invited a man to leap into matrimony with her? Was her proposal met with eager acceptance or graceful refusal? If you'll send us a brief account of the affair we'll pay $1 if we print it. Address Leap Year Proposals, Chicago Tribune.

"Handsomest Man in the World."

I had known a young man with an unusually good profile and a conceited air. One evening during a dance I said, "Last night I dreamt that I married the handsomest man in the world."

"Let's make your dream come true," he answered with a grin.

Next afternoon we drove in his car to a nearby justice of the peace and were married. We now have two children and a happy home. C. N.

Alone No More.

One day a bunch of us had been driving around all afternoon. As the time drew near for us to return home, Mary, a girl who lived by herself in a hotel, said, in a joking way, "My, I hate to think of going home all by myself. I wish I were married."

A young man, whom we all had scarcely known a month, but wh

Mary, we get married? Then we w

"All right," Mary said, and to our surprise they were married

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

THIS smart design cuts from an amazingly small amount of material—for size 36, for instance, only 3¼ yards of 40 inch material are required—and is therefore economical and easy to make. You see there are many good points about this dress, and it is one that can be worn on numberless occasions. The pattern, 3302, gives clear directions about laying the pieces on the material for cutting, and there are helpful sketches about putting the various parts together correctly. Printed silk crêpe in a new Indian pattern, mauve gray flat silk crêpe, figured chiffon, silvery green georgette crêpe, navy blue Canton faille crêpe and parchment beige sheer kasha with silk threads are some of the newest combinations.

The bodice is becomingly long waisted, with the back cut in one piece and the front in two. If there is a right and wrong to be reckoned with in your material, be careful that the fronts are laid on so that each one will be for the side intended.

The skirt is circular in cut and has an irregular outline at the top that adds to its chic. The skirt seams should be put together, using French seams, and you should be careful not to stretch the material. After the bodice has been fitted and the seams finished, pin, then baste the skirt carefully to the bodice. Lay the work on a table so the skirt won't have any excuse to stretch at the top. You can join the two parts, using a narrow piping, or the seam may be a right side one, and covered with a narrow bias fold stitched down close to each edge, or a wrong side seam may be used, overcasting the edges and turning the seam towards the top, and stitching from the right side about three-eighths from the joining stitching.

Hang up the dress when not working on it, to give the bottom a chance to stretch before finishing it. A fitted, outside facing finishes the dress at the neck, and the cascading right edge of the front may be lined with the dress material, or something contrasting. Or the edge may be bound to match the finishing of the bottom of the skirt—for a narrow, bias binding is as pretty a finish as you can have for this shaped skirt. The shoulder tucks are a becoming feature, and the sleeves may be finished long or short. Ribbon is used for the belt, and the bow on the bodice.

The lower edge of the skirt, for size 36, measures about two yards.

Pattern No. 2786 is for a dress that will be sure to please the junior girls. It simulates a grown up style which is always sure to meet with approval, yet it is youthful and dainty looking and suitable for many different materials.

Of special interest is the shirring on the shoulders in the front, and at the sides of the dress, back and front. The dress is cut in two pieces—front and back—and it may be easier to run the gatherings in before joining the side seams of the dress. Adjust this fullness when the dress is being tried on. The fullness on the shoulders can be entirely finished — all threads fastened—before trying the dress on. The collar is a straight one, having long scarf ends that slip through two slashed openings below the V shaped neck.

Mark the slashed lines clearly and then baste a strip of material over each line, right side to right side, basting right over the line that is to be cut. Then stitch each side of this basting, stitching close to the basting, and running the stitching to a point just beyond the basting. Cut through the bastings, making the tiniest clips at the ends so there won't be any puckering, and turn the strip to the wrong side of the dress, letting it show on the right side as a binding. These small strips should be hemmed invisibly on the wrong side.

The sleeves may be long or short, the short ones being bound on the edges to match the rest of the dress. Challis, dimity, pongee, printed sateen or crêpe de chine will be pretty to use.

Pattern No. 3321 is for a dress simulating the two piece mode. It has a youthful looking plaited skirt in the front, a diagonally closed bodice—two of the latest fashion notes—and is especially smart for daytime wear. It can be made of printed silk crêpe, plain flat silk crêpe, jersey or kasha, sheer tweed, shantung, crêpe satin or crêpe de chine.

The back is cut in one piece, and is straight and plain. The plaited front is also cut in one piece, and the front of the waist in two. The long, close fitting sleeves are made with a dart up the outside from the wrist to just below the elbow, and are intended to be untrimmed. A prettily shaped collar finishes the dress at the neck, extending into rever facings that go to the bottom of the waist. The entire dress may be made of the same material, or something contrasting can be used for the narrow belt, collar and revers.

A FRIEND IN NEED
by Sally Joy Brown

I want to be the medium through which the friends in deed and the friends in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

Sick Room Supplies.

"I have a few things I'd like to give to some one who can make use of them. They are: 2 steam cabinets, 1 pair of crutches for a person 6 feet tall, arch supports for men's shoes, size 11½, and one or two other sick room needs. MRS. E. A."

Here, indeed, is a host of comforts for the invalid! If you can make use of one or more of these articles so generously offered, we will be pleased to have you write. Do not telephone.

For an Amateur Photographer.

"I have a developing and printing outfit with a frame for film negatives, 3¼x5½ or smaller. Some developing powders and 2¼x3¼ sensitized papers are included. I should be glad to give this outfit to some one who could use it. Mrs. W. A."

Here's an offer to interest amateur photographers who, perhaps, would like to try a hand at developing and printing their pictures. If you'd like this very complete outfit, I shall be glad to have you write me. Please do not telephone.

Needy Families.

"I am interested in several needy families who have recently moved into larger, healthier quarters and who still are in need of furniture. Three beds, dressers, living room chairs, a dining room table, kitchen chairs, a sideboard, cupboard or chest or drawers, rugs, carpets, and curtains are badly needed. Can you help us out? MISS S."

I am sure you'll have one or two of the above mentioned articles to donate to this worthy cause. The pieces that just won't do in the new apartment and will have to be disposed of, would be most welcome.

Boys Club Wants Orchestra.

"I am director of a boys' club and we are most anxious to start an orchestra. Most of the young members are poor boys and cannot afford to buy the instruments. If you can procure any for us through your column we will be more than grateful. Violins, guitars, or any other stringed and wind instruments are needed. "C. M."

Here is a venture which I hope shall be successful, and it will be if only we can donate one or more of the much needed instruments. Let me know what you can do for these youthful musicians.

Boys' Club Needs Gym Things.

"I am writing to ask if any of your kind readers has an old pair of boxing gloves, an old punching bag, or other equipment for a boys' club. We cannot buy these things and would be most grateful for any you may get. "K. K."

Can you supply any of the articles which will provide these young athletes with a well equipped gymnasium? The gloves or the bag you will have no further use for would make them extremely happy.

Want Camping Outfit.

"We are two young college students wanting to go on some hiking tours this summer. We wonder if any of your friends has a camping outfit they no longer have use for. V. P."

Ideal camping days are not far off, and already our young student friends are planning to make use of them. I trust their hopes will be rewarded with the equipment you've stored away for a similar expedition.

A Pathetic Case.

"I am an old lady, 60 years of age. I broke my leg a year ago, and since then I have not been able to earn enough to keep me. I have rented three small rooms, but I have no heating stove, carpet, table, or chairs. I do need a stove on cold evenings, as I have rheumatism in my hands and legs. MRS. J. K."

At her age, when she should be enjoying all that life has to offer, this poor woman cannot afford even the necessities. Can you provide the stove and other furnishings she needs to make her humble quarters a trifle more comfortable?

Little Girl, 2, Needs Baby Carriage.

"Little Marjorie is nearly 2 years old but she cannot walk far because she had club feet which have been straightened at the hospital. She has to return at intervals for further treatment and she needs a baby carriage to go in. Have you one which could be given to Marjorie? "C. S. K."

If your small child has outgrown his baby carriage, will you not pass it on to Marjorie? Besides being so helpful on her trips to the hospital, she could spend a great deal of time out of doors in it, enjoying the beautiful spring sunshine.

Keep Your Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty.
To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit. One ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

Plots of Ravinia Novelties Revealed

By Edward Moore.

WITH a commendable desire to forestall the libretto vendors ("Complete translation of the opera; you can't understand the performance without a libretto"), Mr. Eckstein relays the outlines of the plots that make some of the novelties to be heard at Ravinia this summer.

There is "Marouf," for instance, which has never been heard in this part of the country, nor for that matter in any part for the last dozen or so years. It has a score by Henri Rabaud, was first produced in Paris in 1914, and somewhat later heard in New York with Frances Alda in the principal female part, that of Princess Saamcheddine (pronunciation not guaranteed). Yvonne Gall will sing it at Ravinia, and Mario Chamlee will have the name part.

The story would seem to have come directly out of the Arabian Nights and to have ended as a variant on Aladdin and his lamp. Marouf is an oriental cobbler with a cantankerous wife, who, by way of establishing wifely supremacy, has him taken into court on the accusation of brutal treatment. The penalty for such doings is two hundred blows on the bare back, and Marouf preserves his epidermis by going away from there and joining a band of sailors.

After the customary shipwreck, Marouf meets a former schoolmate, Ali, now a wealthy merchant who persuades him to play the part of a rich man about town in the bazaar. He attracts the attention of the sultan, who promptly betroths him to his daughter, the Princess Saamcheddine. It must always be remembered that this story is oriental, where love affairs happen promptly and a wife or two, more or less, make no difference.

Marouf acknowledges the imposture to Saamcheddine, and they run away from the palace, she disguised as a boy. While plowing in a field, he uncovers a ring which, according to the best oriental customs, produces results when rubbed. By the time the sultan catches up with them, the pair are in possession of 1,000 camels, 1,400 mules, and other odds and ends of a prosperous household, so all is well. Mr. Eckstein does not promise that all this display will be exhibited on the Ravinia stage.

Ravel's "Spanish Hour" Will Be Performed.

Then there is Maurice Ravel's "The Spanish Hour," with another part for Miss Gall. Here she is the wife of a clockmaker of Toledo (Spain, not Ohio). During his absence from home she receives various masculine callers, among them a muleteer of great strength and good looks, and there is considerable comic conflict between his matter of fact demeanor and her dexterous charm and feminine prerogative of changing her mind.

The suggestion is freely offered here that this brief piece would couple uncommonly well with "Pagliacci," for it is a comic treatment of the plot which becomes melodrama in "Pagliacci," and both treatments derive directly from the ancient Pantaloon-Columbine-Harlequin farce. Also, the Italianate "verismo" of Leoncavallo's music would make a most entertaining contrast with the French sparkle, witty and dainty, of Ravel's.

Later in the season, when Lucrezia Bori and Tito Schipa check in at the Ravinia company, they will appear in Puccini's "La Rondine," which was unheard in this country until Miss Bori appeared in it last season, and in which she took fifty curtain calls during the first performance. It may therefore be considered to have been something of a hit.

In plot it is something of a "Traviata" or "Sapho," taking the first part of the one and the ending of the other. Magda, the "swallow" of the piece, is living in Paris during the second empire at the expense of a banker of that city. Meeting a young student, she goes to live with him in Nice. They are on the point of being married, when she becomes conscience stricken over a letter from his parents welcoming the "virtuous young fiancée" into the family, and runs back to Paris. This is the story, but Puccini's score is much more melodious and charming than that of either "Traviata" or "Sapho"; in fact, considerably better than the best of the two rolled into one.

There is also "Le Chemineau," though this classifies among the revivals instead of the novelties. Its consideration will, therefore, for the present be deferred.

Some Opinions of Sousa's.

John Philip Sousa paused briefly the other day while on his way to judge the high school band contests in Joliet, and spoke a few theories on bands in general. "Do you realize," he said, "that, with the single exception of the harp, every addition that has been made to the symphony orchestra since the time of Haydn has been a wind; that is, a band instrument?

"Every time a composer realizes a new tone color for the orchestra and wants to express it, he does it with a wind instrument. Wagner is a notable case. Do you realize again that, with the single exception of the Swan theme in 'Lohengrin,' every important theme in every one of his operas is first enunciated by a wind instrument? That was because he wanted to announce it in such a way that it would be heard and given attention. And Wagner knew something about orchestration.

"Perhaps I should say 'wind combination' instead of 'band,' because 'band' to the ordinary person means a crowd of players who walk in front of soldiers and play marches to keep them in step, and are very bad when they attempt to play anything else. But the kind of band I have in mind has all sorts of distinctive colors and combinations of colors. A body of stringed instruments without the winds is an Adamless Eden, all feminine in tone. The wind instruments give the masculine note. How could you appeal to the multitudes with string quartets alone?

"I used to play the violin, myself, when I was young—but I also used to blow a euphonium. Really, I have as much respect for a good band as I have for a good symphony orchestra."

How Opera Singers Suffer!

Would you know of the woes of opera singers, how their finer feelings are deliberately outraged, their honor and dignity unfeelingly flouted in the face of the multitude? Then draw near and consider with sympathy and tears the case of Maria Jeritza.

The Vienna Opera, Mme. Jeritza being one of its chief stars, recently visited Paris and sang a season there. At the end of the series the French government offered her and three other women singers the decoration of Officer of Public Instruction. This was a blow, but worse was to come. Richard Mayer, Vienna tenor, "although he was of lesser renown than the star soprano," says the cable, quoting Baron Popper, Mme. Jeritza's husband, was offered the Legion of Honor.

Wherefore there were alarums and excursions, with hectic excitement prevailing over Vienna. Jeritza says she intends to resign from the Vienna Opera, that she will send back to the Austrian government her title of "Honorary Singer to the Imperial Court," conferred upon her by Franz Josef while the Hapsburgs were still in power, that the proffered French decoration was of less rank than one recently conferred upon her by the King of Denmark, and that it is all the fault of the Vienna director because he failed to inform the French authorities of her preëminent position. She also says that she has sung her last song in Austria, and that Richard Strauss' new opera, "Helen of Egypt," in which she was to have sung the principal part, can remain unsung, as far as she is concerned.

It is a sad, not to say heart rending, case. Incidentally

Fine Cast 'n' Direction Make This One Splendid

"THE YELLOW LILY."

Produced by First National. Directed by Alexander Korda. Presented at the Chicago theater tomorrow.

THE CAST.

Judith Peredy	Billie Dove
Eugene Peredy	Nicholas Soussanin
Archduke Alexander	Clive Brook
Kinkeline	Gustav von Seyffertitz
Mlle. Ilona	Jane Winton
Mayor of Tarnavar	Charles Puffy
Archduke Peter	Marc MacDermott
Archduchess Ludovici	Eugenie Besserer

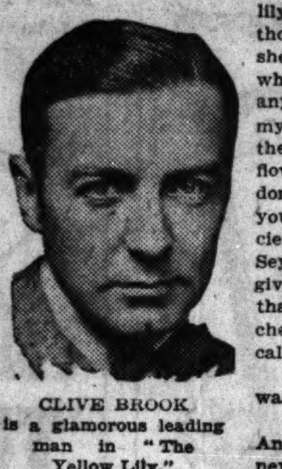
By Mae Tinee.

GOOD MORNING!

"There are many kinds of lilies," says my friend the Press Sheet, "but rarest of them all is the yellow lily. . . ."

So now you and I are no longer in doubt regarding the meaning of the title. Billie Dove is, of course, the yellow lily. When I saw the picture, though, I hadn't seen the press sheet, and I didn't just gather where "The Yellow Lily" meant anything at all; for only once, if my eyes served me correctly, was there any mention of such a flower. Says the archduke's major domo, or head valet, or whatever you call the piece of perfect efficiency impersonated by Mr. von Seyffertitz—and may heaven forgive him for having a name like that! I never will!—to the orchestra leader—(this is what you call a complicated sentence):

"Play the 'Yellow Lily' waltz."



CLIVE BROOK is a glamorous leading man in "The Yellow Lily."

The orchestra leader complies. And that is that, as Shakespeare never said.

The picture is an adaptation of a play, "Sarga Liliom," by one Lajos Biro. The locale is Hungary. The story is one of love and intrigue. And is Billie Dove one beautiful sight to see every inch of the action?

SHE IS!

Also, in Clive Brook she has a capable and glamorous (we critics are certainly making that word work, these days!) leading man.

The Cast Is Expert.

Besides Miss Dove and Mr. Brook the picture boasts an expert, sure-fire cast. Your attention is respectfully directed to that ominous visaged Man with the Name Hard to Spell, who has given so many superb characterizations to the silver sheet. Here, as the lean, alert, evilly complaisant head servant of a frivoling archduke of Hungary he presents another lifelike, unpretty portrait to his gallery of impersonations. Mephistopheles valeting!

Then, still fondly tabulating superior players, there is Nicholas Soussanin. Do you remember him as the valet in "A Gentleman of Paris"? If so, you know just how smooth and perfect his work is. He plays the doctor brother of Miss Dove, who, beautiful and virtuous, becomes the heart's desire of the archduke, whose tastes up to the time of beholding her have run to an entirely different type of woman. Which brings us to mention of Jane Winton, who is striking and colorful as a hectic light o' love.

And—so on—to the archduke's father, well played by Marc MacDermott, and his mother, put over with elegance and sincerity by Eugenie Besserer, one of the greatest of the older actresses of the screen.

The director, Alexander Korda, does nobly with his materials, as he should, he being a Hungarian and everything. He is, you will recall, the astute gentleman who made "Helen of Troy," starred in by his wife, Maria, who scorns a "K" and spells her last name with a "C," thus—Corda. (That IS, I guess, her maiden name.)

Now, reassured as to the excellence of the picture from the standpoint of production, you would like, perhaps, a soupçon (French) of information regarding the plot. You have, be reminded, received one soupçon already.

And the Story Goes Like This.

The handsome and blasé young Archduke Alexander has his shooting quarters at a castle just outside the little Hungarian village of Tarnavar, where live Dr. Eugene Peredy and his lovely sister, Judith. To this castle it is the nobleman's custom to bring whatever lady is occupying his attention at the moment. Judith Peredy's first sight of him is with the gorgeous Mlle. Ilona, toast of the theaters. And he is looking mighty handsome and feeling mighty bored.

No sooner does he get inside his castle than he hisses to the Piece of Efficiency: "Keep her away from me or . . . !!!!!"

The valet tries, but the valet no can do. The lady insists on cuddling. The archduke grows cruel. And the next thing you know, lo, Dr. Peredy's door bell is frantically rung by attendants of the archduke and the scorned femme is brought in, prostrate and, apparently, about to cross the Ribbah Jordan.

She has, it seems, taken poison.

Only she hasn't.

Anyhow, she is got out of the way presently by the model servitor and the archduke sees Judith. And desires her. And is snubbed. And—O, a lot of and's that I shall let the picture tell you about.

It is all MOST exciting and romantic, and if lives there a maid whose heart doth not quiver responsively to the archduke's wooing of fair Judith, why, then, I AM surprised!

Believe it or not (I confess to unworthy doubts on the subject), every "prop" and every costume has, we are informed, been imported from Hungary especially for this film. Be this true or otherwise, the production is colorful and picturesque, and looks decidedly Hungarian to one whose knowledge of Hungary is all founded on hearsay—and precious little of that!

Bits aBOUTem.

I know a man who went to Hollywood. He was telling me his impressions of the place and the people when I stopped him with uplifted hand:

"Please," said I, "desist for the moment—and write it—would you mind?—for the Sunday 'Bits aBOUTem' column!"

He desisted. He wrote. Here is what he wrote. I think it's interesting:

HOLLYWOOD.

A Commentary from Pluperfect Ignorance.

"My Dear Miss Tinée:

"Not having seen a movie since 'The Four Horsemen,' and not over two dozen in all the ages before—with not over ten movie names sticking in the old bean, I spent a little time in Hollywood recently.

"I made one discovery.

"They don't talk about themselves—certainly no more than ball players or newspaper men. I met at least a dozen and a half of them, and not one detected my utter ignorance of their art.

"Try that in some of our other little groups, and see how you get off.

"What do they talk about?

"What everybody else is talking about—booze, horses, money, stocks, women, etc.

"Are the girlies dumb?

"My impression is that there is a dash of the thoroughbred in most of them.

"Are the men sissy?

"I got the idea that most of them would have shone in

S. P. Q. A. The Senate and the People of America

By Clifford Raymond.

THE United States senate as at present operating itself is distinctly the greatest moral factotum of the American people. It is something of the holy office, something of the book committee of the First M. E. Sunday School library, and something of the Anti-Horse Thief association. It combines the functions of a federal grand jury, the privy council, an old California vigilance society, the modern Ku Klux Klan, the Monday morning ministerial association, the tribunal of justice and the knitting women, adding to them incidentally some of the assumed powers of the Watch and Ward Society of Boston and a racketeers' combine.

As a moral fact it is tremendous, but it becomes increasingly difficult to place it within the constitutional forms of the United States. It is beginning to show as an enlarged liver, a third leg or another ear.

As an equivalent of revolution the British and American systems of government have an interesting formula of experimental change. Where the impatient Russians would take army pistols to aristocrats herded into dungeons the British merely denature the house of lords by qualifying their veto of legislation and giving persistence by the commons the certainty of final success. When, then, a virtually independent commons shows signs of getting out of hand, the British consider ways and means of bucking up the check balance in the lords.

We get rid of the wolves and increase the gophers and want some equivalent of the wolf back again. Get rid of the tiger and suffer from the wild pig. Possibly some day when the mosquito has been exterminated society will be looking for a substitute.

Here in the United States, the people, imaginative and democratic, dance to the lure of direct primaries, recall of officials, the referendum on judicial decisions, etc. Change without violence in the main satisfies their desire for perfectibility.

Twenty years ago the senate was sitting pretty in the greatest contempt of all the liberal and altruistic impulses of the people. It was then the cynical and sinful old man of the nation. By tradition it was hard boiled. It was a tin hat in a bomb proof. Its chief concern was when did the chow wagon come up.

Since that time one of these quiet and unimpressive American revolutions has come along and the senate is something that Boies Penrose, Joseph B. Foraker, Shelby Cullom, etc., never would recognize.

It has queer directions. It goes backward and forward and down and up. In one direction it is plainly trying to establish a Tudor right of passing bills of attainder, something the American constitution was thought to have forbidden definitely. If the senate could find a way it certainly would outlaw Sinclair and Stewart, declare their blood and descent attaint and send them to the hangman. The senate's uneasiness in not finding a method of being the grand jury, judge, and public executioner in these and other cases is notoriously apparent and the public opprobrium under which the entire oil scandal rests gives the senate sanction for almost anything it finds a way to do.

A moral agency, generally accepted as such, can do almost anything in the United States. It is not required to pay any attention to the constitution. It is not required to consider the major and essential elements of freedom and security under government. Moral questions, presented as such, have their own law. That is seen under Volstead in the confiscation of property, the denial of trial by jury, the justification of murder and the obliteration of state law and police power by federal bureaus and the federal judiciary. A people who regarded the forms of their government as the containers of their welfare, happiness, and security would be shrieking at all this, but well intentioned Americans are developing a distinct disability to see beyond their own noses.

They no longer recognize agencies and causes. They are far enough from the struggles and anxieties of the formation of their free government not to recognize the impressiveness of the decisions, the import of the principles or the larger morality of their application.

Thus many of the moral people of the United States would prefer that Sinclair should be attainted by the vote of the United States senate than that he should be voted not guilty in judicial process.

The senate within its proper province is a peculiarly powerful body of authority in the world's experience with such bodies. Its control over executive appointments is one element of this peculiar authority and its control of treaties is another still more impressive. With the latter authority a minority in the senate ruined the proudest expectations of the most singularly experienced President the United States ever had.

It is probably still too near our own time for us to see that strange triumphal going abroad of Woodrow Wilson, the war chief, the deliverer of peoples, the Moses of new commandments and name of new European streets, the framer of a new constitution and moral law for the world. A minority in the senate wrecked the career and the program and since that epochal achievement the senate has been climbing higher on Olympus and stealing more and more of the thunder.

It now advises the Supreme court as to its thoughts regarding a law suit. It sets its judgment, in a prima facie case, against the unquestioned vote of a state electorate, not expelling the man with the certificate of election but denying the right of the state to elect him. It tells the President what motives shall govern him in making appointments and how his appointees shall conduct themselves. It prepares the indictments of a grand jury and tries to prosecute the indicted citizens. It passes special laws to reach suspected or guilty persons who have escaped it. It assumes inquisitorial authority as to any subject which attracts its attention.

What gives it authority now to bring before it the candidates for nomination in the two major parties? What earthly business is it of the United States senate to inquire into the campaign methods or expenditures of any such candidate? By what extension of delegated power does this strangely acting legislative body assume jurisdiction over what may have been done by a citizen of the United States to get the delegates of Ohio, Illinois, or California to the Republican national convention or by another citizen to get the votes of Iowa, Michigan, or Delaware to the Democratic national convention.

The United States senate is not the judge of presidential elections or methods of election. It is not the judge of qualifications or character. It is not a policeman. It has no control over such elections or nominations. It has nothing to say as to franchise qualifications or the use of them. It can't tell California how it shall elect delegates or what shall be corrupt practices in state elections in which such delegates are chosen.

The elections of delegates to national conventions are controlled within the party under state laws.

What has the United States senate to do with all this? What has it to do with nine-tenths of the activities in which it has been engaged?

An interesting inquiry and one of consequence. The next thing we know one of these unimpressive revolutions of the English speaking people will give the American republic a senatorial directorate supplanting the executive office, the Supreme court, the lower house, the state executive and legislative branches of government and it will be a government with the constitution in the nearest waste paper basket.

We surely are growing a third leg on Uncle Sam.

Lou Tellegen Resumes Old Corduroy Pants

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—I don't suppose Lou Tellegen could live, professionally, without his artist's outfit, any more than Tom Mix could live without his chaps and his sombrero.

Once I caught a friend wearing plain glass lenses in his white gold bows.

"What's the idea?" I demanded, "why the cheating cheaters?"

He smiled a little sheepishly. "I had to wear glasses for several years," he explained. "Then my eyes strengthened and I was able to do without them. But I discovered the glasses had become, in business, a part of my trademark, even a part of my so-called personality. Without glasses people didn't recognize me. Customers from out of town, who had seen my picture printed in trade journals, thought I was one of these here New York confidence fellows. So I compromised with the window glass and business picked up."

JUDITH ANDERSON plays opposite Tellegen in "Anna." [Raymor Studio Photo.]

Last week Tellegen, back temporarily from the movies, got out the old velvet jacket, the corduroy pants and the long sash and became a sculptor again, just for the night and matinée trade.

Lothar's Play a Trivial Whimsy.

The play is a trivial dido called "Anna" and comes from the studio of the Hungarian Lothar who wrote "The Command to Love" and "The Werewolf." This one, however, as adapted by Herman Bernstein, has no more than a touch of the naughtiness that distinguished the other two.

"Anna" (Judith Anderson) is the name of a rich man's determined daughter who falls in love with the picture of a sculptor and decides on the spot that he is the boy for her.

Disguising herself as a Kiki of the studios she invades his diggings and applies for a job as a model. He makes note of her good points and curtly bids her go behind the screen and undress. She does, standing forth (off stage) in all her birthday loveliness. Of course we only have Tellegen's word for it, but it seems her beautiful skin is exactly the kind you'd love to paint if you were an artist. Maybe you wouldn't even have to be an artist.

"You have never posed before!" observes the startled Tellegen. "Your lovely skin is not yet accustomed to being stared at." From which we assume the heroine was gooseflеshing in protest.

Wagers Him on a Sure Thing.

Thereafter the romance follows conventionally. They make one of those first act wagers, the sculptor and his model. She knows that he is being sought by the daughter of one of his richest patrons. And although he professes to hate the lady, Anna bets him that he will be holding her in his arms within the month.

Gold can never buy, nor goofy rich girls attract him, swears Lou. He will bet her anything she likes her prophecy never, never comes true. But, if it does he will give her anything she demands, even unto his most desirable self. If it does not come true she will have to pay him a like reward by becoming his mistress. (These Hungarians certainly do have the most original ideas!)

Anna, knowing her little secret, that she is herself the rich patron's daughter, as even the ushers guessed, wins easily. His pride hurt, the sculptor tries to back out of his bargain, principally because there has to be a third act. But Anna wins.

A silly business and really miscast in its leading parts. Miss Anderson is an emotionalist of super-talent, but a poor soubrette of the Lenore Ulric type. And I find Tellegen a fine actor in French, a good actor when cast in parts to which his foreign manner and method suit him, is a player of limited charm in the spoken romance.

Gotham Wild Over Paul Ash.

When it came time for the Paramount Picture people to move Paul Ash, the orchestra leader, from Chicago to New York, hoping with his aid to keep the Paramount theater abreast the Roxy as a popular gathering place for thousands and thousands of movie bugs, the town was placarded as for a world stirring event.

Reading the daily papers and the billboards, you might have thought two or three circuses were coming to town, or at least a couple of ocean flyers and President Coolidge. Even I, with no great passion for the inside of even a beautiful theater these almost spring days, gave up a Saturday night to help welcome Mr. Ash. Partly because I was curious to see the young man perform, and largely because I was interested in seeing how New York would receive him.

He is the center of an elaborate show at the Paramount, naturally. All manner of introductory stunts, including ten Ash girls, made up and trousered in duplicate of the maestro and holding curtain strings which they pull at the unveiling of the Ash orchestra. The orchestra itself rises from beneath the stage preceded by curtains of steam. Suggesting, I suppose, that, coming from hell the Ashes must be hot.

Then Paulus bounds out from the wings wearing his red mane and his harmonious brown and tan ensemble. Opening night he was modest and nice, bowing stiffly from the hips with the left knee coyly toeing in. He made a short speech of explanation of why he is here, saying that he had started

ENGLISH WITHOUT A DON'T ONLY

By Wallace Rice.

"ONLY" has given more trouble and more needless trouble to the grammatically pure in heart than almost any other word. Yet Prof. Kittredge could say everything needed in two words, "Shun ambiguity."

Good old Goold Brown is the only other grammarian I've found who wasn't, or isn't, troubled by it. He says: "The word 'only,' when it relates to a noun or a pronoun, is a definite adjective, meaning 'single, alone, exclusive of others.' When it relates to a verb or a participle, it is an adverb of manner, and means 'simply, singly, merely, barely.'" He goes on to approve two sentences with "only" before the verb.

When Churchill, another grammarian, writes, "Thus people commonly say: 'I only spoke three words': which properly implies that I, and no other person, spoke three words: when the intention of the speaker requires: 'I spoke only three words; that is, no more than three words'"; Brown comments, "One might just as well say, 'I spoke three words only,'" calls it hypercritical, and states that "I only spoke three words" is good English.

The great Oxford dictionary says "'Only' was formerly placed away from the word or words which it limited; this is still frequent in speech, where the stress and pauses prevent ambiguity, but is now avoided by perspicuous writers." "Which," the Dictionary of Modern English Usage adds, "implies the corollary that when perspicuity is not in danger it is needless to submit to an inconvenient restriction," and says of the purists in this connection "if they are not quite botanizing upon their mother's grave, they are at least clapping a strait-jacket upon their mother tongue."

If not used before the verb it makes endless trouble. If others refuse to take your meaning, give them time to recover from a severe grammatical infection.

This Thing and That Thing of the Theater

By Frederick Donaghey.

ONE of the letters to this desk last week was from a prominent, if not an eminent, producer of plays who sought, in writing it, to adjust my understanding to what he called "the real grievance" of the producers who are said now to have in common as a chief objective the [illegible] drama-critics and pro-forma criticism of drama in the daily press. The letter, of itself, is not important: the especial play-producer who wrote it—or, rather, who signed it—hasn't managed to tell me anything that I didn't already know; and what I already knew was that what play-producers in general have to say about such things doesn't matter a tinsmith's dam to anybody save themselves. And, since most of them shift their position on any subject and on all subjects at least once in every two hours, what they have to say doesn't much matter even to themselves.

RICHARD BENNETT He's due next Sunday in the Harris Theater in "The People."

But a phrase in the letter served for a moment of consternation. Half-way in its reasonable length, the producer said: "We have no objection to what is written about our plays by a fair-minded, square, honest critic like yourself, but we do feel that we are being injured by these second-hand, make-believe Alan Dales who pass as critics." And, as I smiled at the inevitable cliché, the cable-editor handed to me the AP bulletin that Alan Dale had died that day in England. I was shakey for a moment: not that I had intimately known or especially cared for Alan Dale, but because of the coincidence. The foolish, hedging communication from the producer of plays had for me an unpleasant "kick" he had not planned.

Play-Reporting That Was Dreaded.

Alan Dale was for twenty years unique among all the men and women who wrote about the stage here or in Great Britain. That imitators sprang up throughout the United States did not take away from his being unique. He was the first of the wisecrackers, although a long, long way from being the First Wisecracker: most of the men who deliberately and consciously imitated him were far cleverer than he. That, in his heydey, they failed to achieve his prominence was not due to lack of real ability, and was due to their being insincere in affecting or in trying to affect his so-called "style." The fact is that Dale knew pitifully little about the theater in any of its aspects, although in what may be called his second period—meaning in recent years, in which time he had a chastened and a pepless attitude toward his chore—he appeared to be earnestly bent on acquiring a knowledge that would permit of his passing as literate in the idiom, if not in the bases and foundations.

Authors, play-producers, and actors feared him as if he were some supernatural creature of evil. A thousand times, at least, I heard dramatists with high talent, producers with experience and judgment, and actors with something to exchange for wages say at a New-York première marked by all the logical indications of success: "If Alan Dale doesn't kill us in the morning, we're good here for all season!" Some of the producers barred him from their theaters while maintaining the statutory business-relations with the New-York American, the paper he wrote for. I knew one author who, considering respective offers for his play from a producer of great resources and one who just managed to get by, gave the rights to the latter because he was known to be friendly with William Randolph Hearst, Dale's employer. I knew not fewer than four stars of high popularity in the decade from 1900 to 1910 who insisted on a clause in their contracts that Alan Dale would not be permitted to review their respective conveyances in New-York. And there were managers in that period who added to their New-York overhead by giving to Dale's paper advertising out of all reasonable relation to the paper's circulation, direct or relative, and to the costs of operating their venture, in the hope that the spectacular display and the added revenues therefrom would in some measure serve to mitigate what they assumed to be Dale's power for harm at the box-office.

Ticket-Buyers Heeded Him Not at All.

Dale never possessed with the public the influence credited to him by persons of the theater. Although his name was uttered ten times a minute wherever two or more actors or managers or authors met, it meant nothing ten yards in any direction from the arbitrary and shifting district that is still called the Rialto even by those who haven't the slightest notion of the derivation of the term. I doubt if Alan Dale ever influenced the sale of tickets ten dollars either up or down. In short, those playgoers whose attitude makes a success or a failure didn't know Alan Dale existed. If a play reviewed "unfavorably" by Alan Dale failed, the blame was put on him. If it turned out a success, the tribute was still to him in the philosophy of the foolish fauna of the business: they would tell you that it succeeded "in spite of Alan Dale."

The men and women who felt this way about his writings were without pride or dignity in their efforts to win his favor. I've seen managers at a première roughly and rudely elbow their way through an incoming line of paying patrons to intercept the critic on his arrival and to wish him a smirking, solicitous good-evening. I knew a play-producer who gave one hundred dollars to a down-and-out reporter on the latter's promise of an introduction to Alan Dale. The producer who, of all the producers, was most eloquent and persistent in denouncing the critic wired thus to Hearst on a day when Dale had published an unflattering article about a new play: "That notice of Dale's this morning will cost you fifty thousand theatrical votes." (Hearst at the time was a candidate for Governor of New-York, or Viceroy of Mexico, or, maybe, Vizier of Boulder Dam; but, whatever it was, he knew that there were not at the time five hundred "theatrical votes," so that Dale was not blamed for his employer's defeat at the polls.) Two or three seasons later, this producer put on in New-York two plays that didn't wholly displease the critic; and within as few hours as were required to do the work, huge printed bills bearing these respective legends were juxtaposted for all who ran in Broadway to read:

"MOTHER"—THE PLAY THAT MADE ALAN DALE CRY!

"OVER-NIGHT"—THE PLAY THAT MADE ALAN DALE LAUGH!

Miscellany.

George Baker, here not long since as MacHeath in "The Beggar's Opera," is to have the rôle of Chopin in an operetta about the Polish composer soon to be staged by the Messrs. Shubert.

Robert Woolsey, an actor who has been seen here in one thing or another, is said to be the author of "Tell Me Again!" a song-and-dance piece recently put on in Los Angeles.

Surprising news is that William Anthony McGuire has been hired to rewrite "Strike Up the Band!"—surprising because the libretto was written by George S. Kaufman. . . . And George Gershwin, who wrote the score, is said to be amending it.

That Miss Gertrude Lawrence is returning to this country and that "On Approval," a failure here, has had a year's run there are items of news from London.

Plots of Ravinia Novelties Revealed

Mostly About Music.

La Chorale Francaise will give its final concert of the present season at the Goodman theater tonight. The chorus, directed by Charles Lagourgue, will sing a variety of French songs mostly dating back to a past age, but will end with a group in modern English. Margery Maxwell, the soprano, will sing four songs by Mr. Lagourgue which have accompaniments for wood wind quartet, to be played by Alfred Barthel, oboe, Dominico and Angelo De Caprio, clarinets, and C. Kessler, bassoon. Miss Maxwell will later sing a group of songs by other French composers, and Messrs. Barthel, Dominico De Capric, and Kessler will play a wood wind trio by Charles Huguenin.

A children's chorus of 500 will sing Jewish songs, Sabbath chants, and folk music at Orchestra hall this afternoon. The singers are members of twenty picked glee clubs of the Hebrew and Congregational schools affiliated with the board of Jewish education. In addition, there will be an adult mixed chorus, and Raphael Spiro, violinist, as soloist.

Other music of the week will be a recital by Louise Fernald, soprano, assisted by Louise M. Evans, pianist, in the Florentine room of the Congress hotel Tuesday night. On Friday night Jacques Gordon, violinist, and Sophia Brilliant-Liven, pianist, will appear at Kimball hall, playing sonatas for the two instruments by Brahms—in D minor—and Saint-Saëns, opus 75, No. 1, and the Schuett suite, opus 44.

Aida Doninelli, soprano, who has already appeared at the Dill Pickle club, will give another recital there on Thursday night, and again on June 7. She made an unmistakable hit when she gave a recital at Kimball hall last season, and has since been engaged by the Metropolitan Opera company.

Leo Sowerby, organist, and the choir of St. James church, Huron and Cass streets, will present a program there on Thursday night. The choir will sing processional and recessional hymns, also anthems by William Byrd, Rachmaninoff, Bortnyanski, and Charles Wood. Mr. Sowerby will play works by Herbert Howells, Fletcher, Widor, Bairstow, and himself.

The Lithuanian Singing society, the South Slav String orchestra, the Freiheit Singing Society and Mandolin club, and the Ukrainian Singing society will present songs in their various languages at Wicker Park hall tonight. The concert is under the auspices of the National Miners' Relief conference, and all funds will be forwarded to the areas of the striking miners of Ohio and Pennsylvania, to be distributed in the form of food and clothing.

The annual series of free public concerts at the Naval (Municipal) pier will be inaugurated by the Commonwealth Edison Choral club of eighty voices under the direction of Hobart Sommers this afternoon. The Moss String trio and four soloists, Grace Dorothy Myers, soprano; George Marbach, tenor; Herman Buehler, baritone, and Harry Henderson, trombonist, will also appear.

The cables tell of a great success scored by Fernand Ansseau as Samson in "Samson and Delilah" at the Covent Garden Opera house, London, last Tuesday night. The information is a bit poignant, since at present there would seem to be considerable doubt whether he will return to the Chicago Opera next season. The Delilah was a new singer from the Paris Opera, Georgette Frozier-Marrot. The stage production was directed by Charles Moor, who is expected to return here.

Los Angeles sends word that its fifth season of grand opera will open Oct. 6, and that "Tosca," "Butterfly," "Carmen," "Faust," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Pagliacci," "Andrea Chenier," "The Love of the Three Kings," "Turandot," and "La Cena delle Beffe" will be sung. Among the principals will be Maria Jeritza, Elisabeth Rethberg, Edward Johnson, Riccardo Martin, Marion Telva, Guiseppe Danise, Armonda Tokatyan, and Lawrence Tibbett. The chorus of eighty is being trained in the Los Angeles Grand Opera association's chorus school. Pietro Cimini and Gaetano Merola will be the chief conductors and Armando Agnini the stage director.

A program of original compositions by the pupils of Dr. Albert Noelte will be presented at 1 o'clock at Kimball hall this afternoon. The form of compositions will vary from string quartet to vocal quartet, songs, and works for violin and piano.

DOUBLES IN SONG-AND-DANCE

MISS GEORGIA CAINE

SHE is, as many delighted Chicagoans have had occasion to learn in the last six weeks, in "The Baby Cyclone," the comic success in the Blackstone: her performance as the practical, pragmatic, fed-up wife in the final act of that good farce is, doubtless, what George M. Cohan had in mind when he wrote the lines. . . . And, should it fall out that Mr. Cohan will not have something new for her in the coming season, Miss Caine will, doubtless, revert to what is still called "musical comedy," meaning farce sprinkled with songs and dances: she has been asked to be ready for one of the new pieces in kind. She knows what she is about wherever she is placed: she is, so adept that, had she less charm than she has, some goof would describe Miss Caine as "that sterling actress."

THE ARMCHAIR PLAYGOER

By Fanny Butcher.

For those who do their theatergoing in the armchair, or who like to read the plays they see.

IN NEW YORK.

A dramatization of "The Picture of Dorian Gray," Oscar Wilde's most famous novel, had its debut this week in New York, the dramatization made by some one by the name of David Thorne. Most of us are too young to remember the furor with which Dorian Gray was received by the reading public. Nowadays it has settled down into the groove of a classic. But in those days it was tremendously and shockingly daring. It owed almost its life to a French writer by the name of Huysmans—for Wilde always said that he would never have written it if Huysmans had not written his famous trilogy before, but few English readers bothered to read the brilliant French work, and almost no Americans did, so that "The Picture of Dorian Gray" was a tremendous sensation. Any one may read it now, in any number of editions, the most popular the Modern Library.

IN CHICAGO.

"A Companionate Marriage" is not a dramatization of Judge Ben Lindsey's famous book, "The Companionate Marriage," but it is a play on the same theme. Judge Lindsey's book is the foundation upon which all of the books and plays and articles on the subject have been written . By the way, Fulton Oursler, who wrote "Behold this Dreamer," which was played here last spring by Glenn Hunter, has just written a novel about companionate marriage. It is called "Poor Little Fool," and it is about a companionate marriage that didn't work. There are no plans, so far as any one has heard, of its being dramatized.

IN PARIS.

One of the events of the Paris season was the production of a play called "Siegfried," by Jean Giraudoux. If you wonder how that news can possibly be of interest to armchair playgoers, it is because "Siegfried" is an adaptation of one of Giraudoux's novels, called "Siegfried et le Limousin," which was awarded the Balzac prize in 1922, and which was translated and published in America in 1923 under the title, "My Friend from Limousin." It is a story of a French author who was wounded and lost his memory in the war, was found by the Germans and made by them into so admirable a German that he became a political savior of his country. It has always been looked upon as a remarkable picture of German life. The diplomatic, the social and the literary world attending the opening, which was, so the dispatches have said, a complete success. That the rather discursive, ironic observations of the book could be worked into a brilliant and dramatic play was a surprise to the critics. Anyway, if you want to be really cosmopolitan, read "My Friend from Limousin" (published in 1922 by Harper and Brothers).

PUBLISHED.

"The Twelve Thousand," by Bruno Frank, was one of the lessor successes of Broadway during the season. The author is one of the most popular post war writers in Germany and is known for his "The Day of the King." "The Twelve Thousand" is a drama in the modern manner, in the time of the American revolution, and placed in a princeling's domain in middle Europe somewhere. The princeling has sold soldiers to the British to fight their rebellious subjects, and as the play opens is being approached by an English envoy, who is bartering for twelve thousand more. He is more than willing to sell them, since his mistress wants jewels and—though he does not know it—a famous coiffeur to add to her court. The secretary of the prince, a man of lowly origin, takes one chance in a thousand to save the people from the further draft, and by chance wins his point. It is a bitter piece about the ways of kings and rulers.

"Open Collars," by Erik Barnouw [Princeton University Press]—With a letter from the Princeton University Press calling it "the most successful play ever produced by the Theatre Intime of Princeton University," there arrived "Open Collars," by Erik Barnouw, a play of undergraduate life in Kingston university. The author is an undergraduate at Princeton, a member of the class of 1929. If "Open Collars" is the most successful play ever produced there, the standard must be subnormal.

It is all about a very popular boy who wants to write, and who gets a crush on the college radical who is one of the most unpleasant young men in present day college life, one would say. The open collared laddie tells him he is a fool to be anything but "different," gets him to write insulting pieces about the college and its management, persuades him to resign from his club after having written an unforgivably nasty piece about the members, and storms and raves and rants when the boy having been kicked out of college for flunking his exams, the normal young thing accepts the fate of having to go into his father's garter factory because a girl has promised to marry him.

The attitude of the author is that we need in our great universities the leaven of young men who make epigrams, talk with an affected English accent and go around being professional radicals. It sounds like a pretty juvenile point of view, and as a drama it also has its callow side. The comic relief is a janitor, and the big laughs are those which follow the announcement "There comes the typical one hundred per cent Kingstonian" and the arrival of the janitor.

TYPICAL

HOMER BARTON

He's cast as one of the chatty, cheery golfers in "The Nineteenth Hole," and is cast properly: there's a fellow just like Mr. Barton's characterization in every locker-room where the game is played all over again after the golfers have quit for the day. . . . He is a brother of Ralph Barton, whose illustrations and caricatures are known well to readers of Liberty, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," and other periodicals and books.

Berlin Opera House Brought Up to Date

THE most brilliant company assembled anywhere in Germany since the revolution gathered in Berlin on April 28 for the reopening of the rebuilt State Opera house in Unter den Linden, says the London Telegraph.

"Brought together exclusively by invitation, the house was representative of the country's highest distinction in official service, in law and learning, in the musical, literary, graphic and plastic arts, in finance, industry and commerce and, of course, in the drama. The heads of the diplomatic corps completed a dazzling social picture which more than made up in intellectual eminence for the loss of the guards' uniforms, always thrust into the foreground on such occasions in Wilhelmian days.

"Though it is true to say that the theater has been rebuilt, the external alteration has been comparatively slight. The façade, with its double set of steps leading up to the never-opened doors, has been preserved by superstitious piety. The chief outside change which strikes the eye is the disappearance of the hideous skeleton staircases which crawled about the walls like gigantic centipedes and which were built between twenty and thirty years ago, when it had become clear to everybody that in the event of a fire panic the opera house would be a death trap and that the great majority of those imprisoned in it by the insufficiency of its exits and corridors would inevitably perish.

Crown Is Gone.

"In the auditorium, too, the spell of the past has sacrificed thoroughness of reform to gilt moldings, supposed to have an irreplaceable artistic value. Unless attention had been called to the fact in the press, the great majority of last night's guests would probably not even have noticed that the crown had at last disappeared from above the old royal box, where Hindenburg's impassive features successfully concealed his notorious detestation for music, and that the angelic figures whose outstretched hands once held this kingly emblem over the head of its legitimate wearer are now apparently only seeking one another's embraces. The actual increase in the seating capacity of the house does not exceed 200 places.

"On the other hand, the work behind the proscenium has been so fundamental that the vast pit into which any one of the six segments of the stage can be sunk to a depth of over thirty feet had to be constructed as an impervious caisson in order to prevent the intrusion of surface water.

Perfectly Equipped.

"It is claimed, and no doubt the truth, that so far as scenic contrivances and lighting are concerned the Berlin Opera house is now better equipped than any other theater in the world. To demonstrate its qualifications in these respects, the pleas that the occasion required honor for a modern German composer were disregarded and the 'Magic Flute' was chosen for the reopening."

The management of the State Opera has permanently placed at the disposal of organizations for the blind forty-eight seats from which a view of the stage is blocked by pillars or other obstacles.

BEST PLAYS

"Richard III."

The best play I ever witnessed was Shakespeare's "Richard III.", with the late Edmund Keene in the name part.

Keene was said to be the greatest "Richard" ever on the stage, even surpassing Booth in that one part. Certainly the audience was spellbound when he came upon the stage, uttering the famous words, "Now is the winter of our discontent turned into glorious summer."

As is perfectly natural, there were highlights in the rendition of the play that persist in memory. One of these was the scene in which the wicked king, with insidious eloquence worthy of the greatest Mephistopheles, seduced a mourning Annie from her husband's memory and got her consent to marriage. Another was the troubled dreams of Richard just before the battle on Bosworth field.

With wonderful art, Keene depicted the conflict in the heart of Richard between remorse and the selfish, sordid ambition that consumed his soul. One, although deprecating such perfidy, could not but sympathize with the king in his agony of spirit, so perfect was the art of the actor. A. J. R.

"Turn to the Right."

Although I have seen many good shows since, I still consider "Turn to the Right" the greatest of them all.

The pledge of the young ex-convict to take "the first turn to the right" was most touching, and the peach orchard was beautiful and romantic. I found plenty of humor in the table manners of the prison pals, and the final scene of the young couple driving to the "little house on the hill" was very picturesque. M. C.

Ten Years Ago in Chicago Theaters

From The Tribune of May 26, 1918.

A STONE replica of "The Mourning Woman" has been placed over the grave of Sir Herbert Tree at Hampstead. It bears the inscription "Ars Luget," followed by Sir Herbert's favorite line from "Richard II": "Mount, mount, my soul." On the curb which incloses the grave will be engraved Milton's lines:

> "In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love,
> There entertain him all the saints above
> In solemn troops and sweet societies."

Tree's death, in 1917, followed hard on a fairly-successful American tour, in the course of which he took down a large sum from one of the Hollywood plungers for performing for films—one of "Macbeth" and one of "The Old Homestead"—or, perhaps, the second was "Uncle Tom's Cabin." He is said to have asked to be let out of this contract for the reason that he was unfamiliar with the correct dialect—whether of Uncle Tom or of Josh Whitcomb is forgotten by the writer of these memoranda. Then, having leased his London theater, His Majesty's, to Oscar Asche for the run of "Chu Chin Chow," that foolish piece turned out to be such a success that Tree, although barred from resuming in his own playhouse, found himself unexpectedly in possession of an immense revenue as its landlord. . . . As Beerbohm Tree, he had had a long and good vogue in London, although he never succeeded in his real ambition, which was to be regarded as the true successor to Henry Irving as actor, director, and producer.

Mr. and Mrs. Coburn will make a tour of the cantonments, cheering the soldiers with performances of Molière's "The Imaginary Invalid."

The lads in the cantonments (a word added to the common vocabulary in war-time) had troubles enough, what with unpreparedness and inefficiency, without Mr. and Mrs. Coburn's depressing efforts in Molière's farce. But, then, that was the kind of a war it was in the cantonments.

Miss Bordoni, late of Raymond Hitchcock's revue, is planning to be the star of "Julie Bon-Bon," after Victor Herbert writes some music for it. Miss Clara Lipman wrote the play and produced it several years ago.

Miss Bordoni did nothing of the sort: for the reason, maybe, that Herbert didn't write tunes for it. The play served Louis Mann and Miss Lipman [Mrs. Mann] for a season or more here and in London; and it was Miss Lipman's expressed belief at the time that a manager who had read and had promised to produce "Julie Bon-Bon" had, instead, unscrupulously taken her plot and ideas and had made them into "Mlle. Modiste."

Miss Maude Adams was gracious enough recently to play "A Kiss for Cinderella" for recruits at Camp Lewis, near Seattle, breaking her rule against Sunday performances to do so. She paid all the expenses and charged the soldiers not a cent.

That was a nice thing for Miss Adams to have done. She was never better than in Barrie's "A Kiss for Cinderella," although she is said to have cared not at all for the play. Nor, for that matter, did the American public: attendance on it was a tribute to her popularity rather than to the exquisite bit of fun and sentiment, with its war-background, by the gifted Scotsman.

In Miss Mizzi Hajos' new musical comedy, "Head Over Heels," the young star appears as an acrobat and performs feats of gymnastics. Jerome Kern is the composer, Edgar Allen Woolf the author, and George Marion the producer.

Mitzi was an amusing little thing in "Head Over Heels"; but the piece, itself, wasn't too much of a click.

A new stock-company has been organized to play in Oak Park at the Warrington Theater. Walton Pyre is the manager and Miss Marguerite Hertz and Warren Wade the leading players. It will begin operation next Saturday in "A Single Man."

And somebody or other was then, as now, forever assembling actors to play in Oak Park, whose theater-goers seem to have preferred then, as they prefer now, to come in to town for their entertainment.

PLAYBILLS:

Cohan's Grand—The Cohan Revue, with Charles Winninger, Miss Lila Rhodes, Miss Nora Bayes, Frederick Santley, and others.

Palace—"Doing Our Bit," a spacious Winter Garden extravaganza, with James J. Corbett, Henry Lewis, Charles Judels, Ada Lewis, Frank Tinney, Venita Fitzhugh, and others.

Studebaker—"Odds and Ends," with Jack Norworth and Harry Watson.

Powers'—"Sick-a-Bed," a farcical comedy by Ethel Watts Mumford.

La Salle—"Leave It to Jane!" Final week.

Princess—"Over There." War-melodrama.

Woods—"Friendly Enemies," with Louis Mann and Sam Bernard.

Garrick—"Getting Together," with Blanche Bates and Holbrook Blinn.

The foregoing inventory for the corresponding week of a decade ago shows that Chicago was buying tickets then for just the number of plays offered tonight in the Loop. The best of those of ten years ago were the Cohan Revue (the third he had written and staged, and the second shown here) and "Leave It to Jane!" The most popular was the tripe named "Friendly Enemies." . . . Powers' is no more; the La Salle is "in films"; Cohan's Grand is now the Four Cohans; and the Palace is the Erlanger.

Twenty Years Ago

From The Tribune of May 24, 1908.

JEFFERSON DE ANGELIS, Maude Raymond, and Alexander Carr will next season continue in "The Gay White Way." The piece will be taken through to the Coast. Blanche Ring may be starred alone or with Joe Weber's company.

Miss Ring, as told last week, went to Mr. Weber to perform in his chowder named "The Merry Widow and the Devil." . . . Miss Raymond was the wife of Gus Rogers, of the Rogers Brothers, and a good, rough, bold, and self-confident soubrette with a gift for putting over what was then still called a "coon-song."

Secretary Taft evidently anticipates a safe and sane campaign. He will give several theater-parties in Chicago during June. He has reserved boxes at the Garrick and at the Grand Opera-House on the supposition that "The Flower of the Ranch" and "Paid in Full" are sure to be with us.

Whether or not he saw either or both of those delectable contributions to the Drama, Mr. Taft had a good campaign, and was elected President in the November next following. While President, he said that "A Gentleman from Mississippi" was a good show; and it was. Doubtless, he said, while President, other things; but that is the saying most easily recalled by the editor of this department, who was deeply interested in the commercial outcome of the play.

John Barrymore in "A Stubborn Cinderella" will play his first engagement in a musical comedy. "The Boys of Company B," "Toddles," "Glad of It!" and similar comedies have previously engaged his talents.

And now look where he is—in Hollywood! And how much he gets—hundreds and billions, as the little murderess said in "Chicago"! He was immensely liked in "A Stubborn Cinderella," put on by Mort H. Singer for the opening of the Princess, where it was successful through some months. It was Mr. Barrymore's business in the piece to make love to Miss Sallie Fisher. . . . The drama-editor of THE TRIBUNE in 1908 did not, seemingly, know that Mr. Barrymore had been in Richard Harding Davis' good farce of "The Dictator," and that therein, as a drunken wireless-man, he was held by the New-York play-reporters to be as good as the star, himself, although the star was so good a one as William Collier.

EACH IS LIKED FOR WHAT SHE DOES

MISS REA MARTIN

YOLANDE

MISS MARTIN is in "The Nineteenth Hole," acting in a personal style a golf-playing flapper who has the saving grace of being measurably on to herself. Patrons of the amusing comedy in the Erlanger express delight with the scene between her and Frank Craven in Act I. . . . Yolande is the good-looking girl of the "team" of Velos and Yolande, who interpolate a dance in the final act of "The Love-Call," in the Olympic. And, apart from her good-looks, she dances well.

Brutal Compulsion.

A recent dispatch from Milan, concerning the première of the opera "Sly," states that "the artists were forced to take eighteen curtain-calls."

As Roget might have elaborated, "The artists were, at the point of the bayonet, under a lash, against one's will, under protest, in spite of one's teeth, forcibly, by a strong arm, coerced into taking eighteen curtain-calls."—From the New-York World.

New in Manhattan

The theater-week in New-York does not seem to be what is known as so hot. There is one novelty—a revue; but it will be the Grand-Street Follies, which, as I have said a number of times in THE TRIBUNE, was a bang-up revue in three annual issues I saw when it was the Summertime reason for going to the Neighborhood Playhouse, down where Manhattan Island runs off southeasterly into nothing at all. Although the authors and the players could have properly been classified as professional amateurs, they made better topical fun in 1923, 1924, and 1925 than did those who provided and performed the great big revues in Broadway theaters. Albert Carroll, a comedian and mimic whom I have warmly lauded in these columns, is in the new issue.

Another "event" of the week down there will be Mr. Tyler's revival of "Diplomacy," with the cast about as it was recently in the Blackstone. If the performance be no better there than it was here, it will be rather bad: so bad, indeed, that I shall not be surprised if the New-York play-reporters call it good. . . . The revival is said to have been prosperous since it left the Blackstone.

"Porgy," with its cast of Negroes, is to be returned to Manhattan exhibition by the Theater Guild, which is of the expressed belief that there's something of a run left in the odd play. . . . And this is to be the final week of the Guild's performances of O'Neill's "Marco Millions," which has been acted in alternate weeks with "Volpone": the latter will be continued indefinitely when, next week, it is resumed.

Last night marked the finish in New-York of "The Outsider," a futile revival by Lionel Atwill; "The Waltz of the Dogs," an up-an-alley production of Andreyev's play moved into the Rialto in the belief that ticket-buyers would care a rap; "Whispering Friends," one of George M. Cohan's pieces; "Keep Shufflin'!" a Negro show; and Mr. Tyler's revival of "She Stoops to Conquer," which the local play-reporters found, as I had found, to be heavy, flat, and inexpert save for the respective portrayals by Lyn Harding and Miss Fay Bainter.

The Trouble Is, Jascha Does!

From an accidental eavesdropper who was seated near-by, we have this story about Alma Gluck and her eight-year-old son at the Heifetz concert the other afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Between numbers, the youngster [he is, of course, Efrem Zimbalist (jr.)] read the program and finally fell into a deep study of a testimonial from Heifetz printed in the Steinway advertisement. This read: "It [the piano] is in my opinion a piece of superb craftsmanship that demonstrates the finest musical possibilities." The boy read this not only with difficulty, but apparently with a growing suspicion. At length, he turned to his mother and said: "I don't believe Jascha ever said anything like that, mother. He don't know words like that."—From the New-Yorker.

With and Without.

SIR: In the matter of good diction by our actors, what is the matter with that of

Richard Bennett?
Lionel Barrymore?
Francine Larrimore?
Al Jolson?
Spencer Tracey?
Georgia Caine?
Eddie Cantor?
George A. Schiller?
Frank Craven?
Dorothy Blackburn?

(Please note that there isn't an English player in the list.) I know there are many playgoers who don't like Mr. Barrymore's voice. Nor Miss Larrimore's. . . . And, Sir, what isn't the matter with Glenn Hunter's? That fledgling could profitably go to school even in the sloppy precincts of a weekly-change stock-company!

JUST JIM.

Chicago: May 19, 1928.

Well-Remembered Strains.

SIR: You made mention this morning of Lécocq's "Giroflé-Girofla." (My belief is that it was composed by Offenbach; but I don't care to argue.) This, coupled with your delightful articles on the Gilbert-and-Sullivan season in the Studebaker, makes me wonder if there wouldn't be both prosperity and kudos for a permanent organization like The Bostonians, who for fifteen years or so, from about 1890 to about 1905, gave comic opera as it had never before been given in the United States. They used a rêpertoire of standard operettas until they hit upon "Robin Hood," and thereafter made that and Reginald De Koven's "The Serenade" their chief reliance.

ELMER B. RASCH.

Chicago: May 22, 1928.

["Giroflé-Girofla" was composed by Lécocq. "The Serenade" was composed by Victor Herbert.—EDITOR.]

Entr'Acte Orations.

SIR: Surely, if I get your attitude from what you write in THE TRIBUNE about the theater, you cannot be in sympathy with the growing habit of actors in the matter of speeches between the acts! What is the matter with them?—or, perhaps, what is the matter with managers who permit actors to do this? Of course, there may be emergencies or special occasions when a few words from an actor, stepping out of his part, are permissible and legitimate. Nor do I object to comic chatter from actors who, like Hitchcock and Hopper, have through the years made an entr'acte speech a sort of trade-mark. I'm one of a hundred or more men and women I know who become definitely ill when some jackass of a performer thinks he adds to our joy by talking from the "apron."

H. K. G.

Chicago: May 23, 1928.

Not So Much.

SIR: What do you think of this for an idea? I mean, for Miss Beatrice Lillie. I've been reading, through the courtesy of a theatrical friend, the plays, most of them short, in which the late Rosina Vokes was an American star for years, and am of the notion that Miss Lillie, who has trouble in getting material worthy of her, would be in just right in a bill made up of three of these little pieces, such as "My Milliner's Bill," "A Tinted Venus," and the like. I ask you, what do you think of it?

CHEYNE WALK.

Chicago: May 18, 1928.

TAKING OVER A NEW PART

MISS CHARLOTTE LEARN

SHE goes tonight into the character of the seasoned small-time soubrette in "Excess Baggage," replacing Miss Julie Ring. . . . The Tribune has frequently had occasion to mention that Miss Learn (who is, off-stage, Mrs. J. J. Garrity) is the best all-round understudy of feminine parts on the American stage—a belief shared with The Tribune by play-producers; but she was an experienced actress in important assignments before she became a resident of Chicago.

"Names Make News"

Mr. Ziegfeld, who at the time of Eddie Cantor's defection said that he would not again stage a Follies, now says that he will again stage a Follies, and that he will do so for the reason that Otto H. Kahn has asked him to do so.

Kenneth Mackenna, here earlier in the all-but-gone season in "It Makes a Difference," is to have in New-York the principal rôle in "The Big Pond," by A. E. Thomas, not recently among the acted authors, and George Middleton, whose chief distinction as a playwright continues to be that the late Senator La Follette was his father-in-law.

Miss Lina Abarbanell, so popular here in the respective runs of "The Merry Widow" and "Madame Sherry," is billed to appear this week in Brooklyn in the rôle first acted by Mrs. Carter and then by Miss Florence Reed in "The Shanghai Gesture."

Glenn Hunter, who was pretty bad in "Behold This Dreamer!" and worse than that as Tony Lumpkin in "She Stoops to Conquer," is to be vis-à-vis with Miss Katharine Cornell in "Jealousy," a two-characters play made by Eugene Walter from a French original called something else. . . . Guthrie McClintic, who is Miss Cornell's husband, is to have the masculine rôle in the impending Los Angeles try-out. An earlier try-out, months ago in eastern towns, had Miss Violet Heming and Kenneth Mackenna as the actors.

Miss Sophie Tucker is the theme of more space in the London dailies and weeklies than any other performer now active in England. She has been greeting her night-club audiences there with a rimed expression of regret for her absence and of reasons why they should be glad to have her back, with the refrain starting

> 'Cause I'm the last of the red-hot mamas:
> They've all cooled down but me.

Miss Ann Pennington will be in the impending issue of the Scandals, whose founder, George White, seems bent on reassembling the personnel of the eighth issue, which was the good show given last Summer in the Erlanger; for he has announced the engagement of Harry Richman, Willie and Eugene Howard, Miss Frances Williams, Tom Patricola, and Miss Rose Perfect.

¶ ¶ ¶

Miss Florence Johns, here last season in "Ned McCobb's Daughter," has the principal rôle in "Married—and How!" which is to be tried out this week in Jersey.

Joe Laurie, last here two years ago in "If I Was Rich!" is at length on the way to appearing as the star of "The Showman," whereof he is part-author.

Harry Wagstaff Gribble, author of "March Hares" and held by many to be what is known in rarefied circles as "a bitter sophisticate," has written "The Gambler," which he says is "a satirical farce about a revivalist."

Walter Catlett, absent from Chicago in the five years since the run of "Sally" in the Colonial, is to go into "Here's How!" a current Manhattan enticement which is said to be suffering at the box-office for lack of comicality on the stage; and it is explained that a part has been written into the piece for the comedian.

Harrison Owen, whose "The Happy Husband" seems to have restored Miss Billie Burke to box-office vogue in New-York, has written another comedy, named "Wages of Virtue," which is to be staged down there by Charles Hokins, an ex-Philadelphian who is so affluent that he can afford to operate a theater seating but 299 persons.

Charlie Chaplin, according to the London correspondent of the Toronto Star, may soon obtain from King George V the right to be addressed as Sir Charles.

Maurice Chevalier, who often has been paragraphed as about to come to this country for either a revue or the two-a-day, is now said to be under contract to one of the Hollywood movie-makers.

Bozo Snyder, for some years an idol of those who make up the dwindling clientèle of the burlesque-shows, is to be the star of something named "Under Your Hat!"

Miss Florence Moore, recently here in "Artists and Models," is to have a go at the larger film-houses.

Avery Hopwood, reported to be active in London, has just had the experience of having a play of his, "Our Little Wives," taken off after five performances there.

Buster West and his father, here recently in a Palace program, are in the bill in the Paris Ambassadeurs, a café. So also is Miss Katheryn Ray, here once in an issue of the Vanities, and at the time said by the management to be a beauty.

Ted Lewis, whose popularity is as vast as it is inexplicable, has been engaged to take his band to Deauville, France.

Carl Randall, now here in "Sunny Days!" and Miss Peggy Cornell, who dances with him, expect to dance together in Paris, in the Château Madrid, after they shall have finished their engagement in that handsome show.

Tellegen Resumes Old Corduroy Pants

By Burns Mantle.

years ago from California, but, like so many others, was held up in Chicago.

Cryptic Message from Al Jolson.

Then he read a telegram of congratulation from Al Jolson which, I assume Al meant and Paul read as a joke.

"Dear Paul," ran Al's wire, "all the people in California are glad you are in New York."

But nobody laughed. No, sir! We're too polite down here to laugh at any poor little redhead trying to make his way in the world unless he tells us to. If he had followed the wire by clapping his hand suddenly to his jaw with an exclamation of "Oy, oy, what a business?" or had covered his mouth with his hand and grinned with his eyes we would have known it was a joke and laughed right out. But we have our signs and we know our etiquette.

The feature picture on Mr. Ash's debut bill was one of Bebe Daniels in "The Fifty-Fifty Girl." I thought it was pretty terrible, but the other eight thousand laffed and laffed. Especially when Bebe lost her skirt and revealed her lace panties.

I suppose if Jesse Lasky ever decides to create a Paramount museum, Bebe Daniels' various panties will be displayed as among the greatest laugh getters of the screen; though, like actors, I don't suppose they are ever so funny off as on.

Ancient Farce Lacks Genius.

George Tyler, who is in Italy in the flesh, but in New York in spirit, routed the lesser of his two histrionic circuses, the star cast playing "She Stoops to Conquer," so it could play two weeks on Broadway. This to appease the stars and also to help the laity to an acquaintance with the classics.

But, if we shall be truthful about it, the revival, aside from the sentiment attaching to seeing so many good actors in one troupe who would otherwise be out of work, is a pretty dull affair.

The Goldsmith farce is one of the old timers that demands a touch of genius of its players if it is to be saved from being anything but a stupid and heavily artificial entertainment. And there are no geniuses in this group. No players, at least, with a particular genius for the task set.

Thus, Fay Bainter, a likable and especially capable young woman playing "East Is West" and "Willow Tree" heroines, or any other part definitely touched with character, finds Kate Hardcastle no great opportunity. And Glenn Hunter, supreme with his own line of adolescents, is pretty floppy and uninteresting as Tony Lumpkin. Lyn Harding, I think, gives the best performance of the cast as the squire. O. P. Heggie gets a lot, or at least enough, out of the Diggory bit, and Wilfrid Seagram is excellent as young Marlow. There was quite a reception for Mrs. Leslie Carter the opening night, and she was as good as need be as Mrs. Hardcastle. But of course the old lady calls for a comedienne and Mrs. Carter knows little of the comic spirit.

Anyway, the star cast is a bargain show for any one interested in actors and likewise the older drama. They are playing it, too, for prices scaled from $3 to $1, which helps.

Winona Lake Offers New Music Courses for Summer

UNUSUAL opportunity is provided at Winona Lake, Ind., this summer for teachers, students and musicians as the result of special arrangements made by Homer Rodeheaver, the well known song leader, who is also president of the School of Sacred Music at Winona Lake. The regular session of this school will be held Aug. 6-25, with a sacred music festival Aug. 13-16, and the annual commencement and the oratorio of "The Messiah" Aug. 25.

In addition to this intensive and practical session, a new feature will be in charge of the school of music of De Pauw university through its extension division and with the leadership of Dean Robert G. McCutchan. This school will be in session June 18-Aug. 25. Dean McCutchan will give his personal attention to both schools and will have a faculty which will assure systematic, comprehensive and thorough training, and students will have opportunity to follow different lines of study, both in applied music and in theory, history and appreciation and public school music.

It will be possible for a student to earn a maximum of ten semester hours of credit during the ten weeks' summer term. These credits may apply toward a degree or a teacher's license. For those students interested in band and orchestra work, and in choir and chorus singing, opportunity will be offered for public performance.

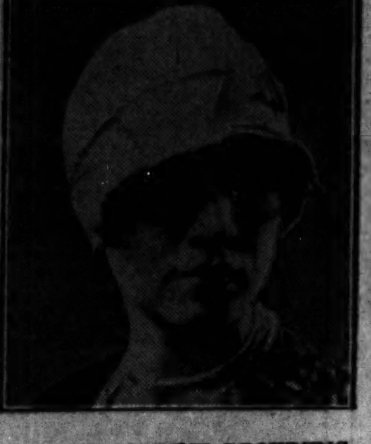
ONE OF THEM



MISS GERALDINE BROWNING

She's in "Two Girls Wanted," the week's revival in the Kedzie. Miss Browning plays one of the title-rôles: Miss Rhea Diveley plays the other.

Now It's Told on Shaw.

Kelcey Allen, the drama-defender, was discussing George Bernard Shaw again last evening, and asserted that the Irish playwright was a supersensitive person, as well as a savagely-vindictive man. "Once," said Allen, "he had sent a play-manuscript to a London manager, who returned it with his regrets. 'I'm sorry,' wrote the manager; 'but I'm afraid I cannot produce your play.'

"'That's fine!' answered shaw: 'I was afraid you would!'"—From the New-York Graphic.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

Lots of Praise for Pola.

Dear Miss Tinée: Remember that nice letter by J. C., in the March 25 paper? Sure you do!

He certainly "hit the nail on the head!" I agree with him entirely, except with his (or hers) opinion of "When a Man Loves." But that doesn't matter.

J. C. is right about Miss Negri's predicament since "Passion." Why, she has done a half a dozen films that surpassed that production, and yet, the only thing you hear is: "Why hasn't Pola Negri done anything as fine as 'Passion.'?"

If one would recall the great variety of rôles Miss Negri has had in America and with what accuracy and talent each has been depicted, he would discard the old belief that the great Polish actress has not fulfilled her promise she gave to us in "Passion."

"Barbed Wire" and "The Secret Hour" were not only splendid pictures but the performance could not be improved upon—they were remarkable.

By the way, Miss Tinée, you said nothing about "The Secret Hour" in "the best pictures of March." Me thinketh that it was better than any one of those you mentioned. Of course, like all great men, I'm sometimes wrong. As far as the seven productions you mentioned, I agree with you, but I would put "The S. H." first. Let a good picture lead all the rest.

Pardon my unwelcome and insignificant opinion. You know, Miss Tinée, sometimes we get the "writing bug" and off we go!

I enjoy your column very much and seldom do I miss it.

Merci,
SOLLY H.

COMING ALONG

SPENCER TRACEY

He's still in "The Baby Cyclone," and still is, as he was when the run began, just the actor for Gene Hurley, the sorely-tried bridegroom. . . . Mr. Tracy is an actor on the rise. He was capitol, last year, as one of the bad brothers in "Ned McCobb's Daughter," in the Princess.

Best Movies

If you will tell us what movie, in your opinion, rates above all the others you've seen, and why this particular movie is deserving of praise, we'll pay $1 for your letter if we print it. Address Best Movies, Chicago Tribune.

At the Top.

"The King of Kings," in my opinion, is the best movie. It does not matter if you go to church or not. When you leave the theater after having seen it you will feel like a new person. Your hopes have been recreated.

When selecting such a great group of stars the director knew his business. H. B. Warner as the Christ excels all others. The film's woeful scenes are many, but that should not keep any one away. The crucifixion was splendidly directed, and the two thieves crucified with Jesus were acted with heartfelt reality. The scene where Judas hanged himself sent cold waves up one's back. So did the storm and earthquake scenes following the crucifixion.

The reality and fine acting of the picture made it great. You feel a great liking for Peter, wonderfully acted by Ernest Torrence, while you detest the supposed greatness of Judas and gnash your teeth when he betrays Jesus. Judas is acted by Joseph Schildkraut, also a great star.

I will always call "The King of Kings" the best picture ever made. I am sure I am not the only one with that idea.
P. C.

"The Life of Abraham Lincoln."

Though perhaps not the most pretentious picture I have witnessed, still to me one of the most impressive was "The Life of Abraham Lincoln." It left with me a greater appreciation and deeper sympathy for the Great Emancipator than all the histories I have studied and gave me a keener understanding of this finest of characters our country has produced.

The beauty and pathos of those love scenes with Ann Rutledge, the romance with Mary Todd, the hardships of the war when every one seemed against that sad, lonely figure in the White House, and the death of little Tad—it was all so heartbreaking, so beautifully handled by the capable cast headed by George Billings. Yes, it was perfect.

TWO-A-DAY

BENNY DAVIS

He's in the new week's bill in the Palace—he and his "twenty Broadway stars," the press-agent says; and maybe Mr. Davis' reckless acquisitiveness in the matter of stars explains why there are so few in Broadway when one goes there to look for them.

Fox Movie Buds Launch First Year Club; Even Trees from Streets Go Into Movies

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., May 27.—[Special Correspondence.]—J. Farrell MacDonald, came into possession of a large and talented family this week, when he was asked to be official godfather of the First Year club, at the Fox lot.

Winfield Sheehan, Fox executive, decided that the old wheeze, "The first years is always the hardest," was perfectly true where young folks in films were concerned, and at his suggestion and enjoying his hospitality, the young folks on the lot who are working on their first year at the studio, got together at a dinner.

Farrell MacDonald, who has been in pictures for twenty-one years, was considered a suitable mentor by the young people, and along with a lot of serious advice, they got also a lot of fun.

They Were All There.

The budding stars of the Fox lot who attended the dinner were Marta Alva, the Spanish beauty contest winner, and her Italian rival, Lola Salvi. Their screen names replace the Maria Casajuania and Marcellia Battelini of real life. Marjorie Beebe, June Collier, Nancy Drexel, Charley Morton, Barry Norten, Sally Phipps, Dave Rollins, Nick Stuart, Don Terry, Lia Torra, Gino Conti, Warren Burde, Rex Bell, Jack Pennick and Olympic Guilherme composed the rest of the party.

"Don't be hoggish," was MacDonald's first piece of homely advice. "Don't demand a huge salary when you think you have begun to be valuable to your company. Keep working and the money will catch up with you. Most actors, and God knows the paths of Hollywood are strewn with them, have made that mistake. 'If you don't give me the money I want I won't play,' they have said. And mostly, boys and girls, 'They don't play.'"

"Don't be a kicker. Keep your temperament for before the camera, where the world can appreciate it. Try to learn all you can and bend your efforts towards becoming valuable; don't worry about selling yourself till you have something to sell."

Farrell related that in his career, he has three times in the last four years been given an unsolicited advance in salary because he has followed that philosophy. He wound up by giving his comedy gesture of shaking back the mane of hair on his bald head and quoting Chico from "Seventh Heaven." "Really, I'm a very remarkable fellow."

Movies for Entertainment.

Following the dinner, which included fried chicken eaten catch-as-catch-can, a movietone program was given in the studio theater. Lolo Salvi, the Italian beauty, gave a sequal of delight when Mussolini was thrown on the screen; the bells of Rome ringing through scenes which showed the Vatican and dome of St. Peter's, and the young Fascisti singing outside the ancient wall of the Eternal City.

The Yale-Army game player at the Yale bowl last autumn brought a near riot near the head of the table, where Don Terry [Donald Loper], recently of Harvard, and Farrell MacDonald, Yale '02, exchanged digs at each other over the backs of the seats. MacDonald has never been back to New Haven to see the Yale bowl, and he certainly was impressed. "Did you see that?" he would yell, clapping the young Harvard football man on the back when the screen showed Yale making a play.

"Hoot Gibson," Universal's western star, has been invited by the city of Sacramento to be the guest of the city at the "Days of '49" celebration there on Jne 1, 2 and 3. Gibson won the Pendleton, Ore., roundup cup in 1912, and he will exhibit some of the horsemanship that got the cup for the citizens of Sacramento.

City's Loss, Studios' Gain.

Hollywood is doubtless the town that made the California bungalow famous, for it is the only and first city in the world where that form of architecture became a contagion. Unfortunately many of the picturesque narrow streets with the huge peppers and their drooping fronds, and the tall, ragged eucalyptus trees in the parkways that gave shade to them in the heat of day will soon be no more. Street widening projects usually mean tree destruction projects, as the parkways are shaved off to the sidewalks and the lovely trees summarily sawed down.

Plenty of artistic asphalt and cement paving now treat the tourist to a thorough scorching. However, some of these trees have not lived in vain. The studios are shooting films against a background of unusually plentiful verdure. The chopped down trees are usually hauled off to a studio and set up with props to form part of the scenery.

A recent visit to the Paramount studio, in the heart of Hollywood, revealed the set for Esther Ralston's "Sawdust Paradise" beauties unusually wooded and rural looking with the trees just cut from Orange Grove avenue. Fifty years' growth waves coolly for fifty feet of film, and in a few days ends in the rubbish pile on the back lot.

Insists on Grand Piano.

A grand piano on a movie set—that is, one not before the camera as part of the prop—means just one thing about Hollywood. It means that Victor Schertzinger is directing on that set.

When there is no piano there usually is a huge harp, or perhaps there are both. Schertzinger will have none of the tiny wheezy portable organs that usually grind out the love motifs, the tragedy chords, or the tripping cadences of comedy action to inspire the actors on the set. Himself a musician and composer of "Marcheta" and other songs, he insists on really good music on a good instrument, and when the need arises he can do it himself.

Schertzinger's sister frequently performs on the harp for his set music. Right now he is directing Mary Bryan, Clive Brook, and William Powell in "The Perfumed Trap," at Paramount.

An Ideal Location.

Charley Farrell and Mary Duncan are to make Tristam Tupper's story, "The River," under the name of "Back Wash," shortly, and Frank Borzage, the director, is to take the company up to Banff and Lake Louise in Canada for location work. All of the company are looking forward to the summer outing in the mountain resort. As soon as Dwight Cummings, who did the screen story of Harold Teen for First National, is through with the screen story for "Back Wash," the company will leave for the north.

Dolores Del Rio has a new pet. While her company was on location near Chatsworth, working with thirty bears in "The Beartamer's Daughter," being screened as "Revenge," she found a six weeks old cub in the troupe. He has been groomed with gumdrops, jelly beans, and soda pop, and has been christened "Goof," and taken to live in his new mistress' back yard.

News of Films and Actors.

Mrs. Edyth Shaffer, mother of Norma and Douglas Shearer and mother-in-law of Producer Irving Thalberg, did not have the good fortune with the immigration officials that befell Mrs. Hulda Chaplin, mother of Syd and Charlie Chaplin. Mrs. Shearer was ordered last week to return to British soil—in her case, Canada—because she was in the United States without legal permission.

The spirit of Sherman's fighting men lives on, though the colors are now held in faltering hands, and the blue uniforms become fewer and more faded on parade days. Norma Talmadge was making picture near Sawtelle recently. While she wore peasant clothes all day and dug potatoes in the fields, she came to work in her very elegant limousine, which stood parked behind a friendly hedge of cypress bordering the old soldiers' home and farm.

As the star tripped to her car after she was done with her work she saw an old fellow with a pipe clenched in the gap between his remaining teeth, leaning on a cane and regarding the limousine fixedly.

"Wish I had a car like that," he said in a cracked voice, which he lubricated with a shot of saliva accurately aimed at a flowering shrub.

"What would you do with it?" inquired the star, with an honest curiosity.

"Well," said he, replacing the dislodged pipe with a shaking hand, "I could get me six gals I can't get now."

Emil Jannings is quite pleased with his new found mastery of English. Though born in New York nearly forty years ago, he went back to Germany with his parents as a child and never till now has he been able to speak his native tongue. Emil and his wife, Gussie, are living in the former Joe Schenck mansion on Hollywood boulevard, and are blossoming out socially. Gussie, of course, speaks English very well, having been on the stage in the east.

The historic San Fernando mission, once one of the most powerful of the old Spanish missions of California, has been used as background for several shots with George Fawcett as the old Spanish don and Renée Adoree as the beauteous señorita of "Tide of Empire," by Peter B. Kyne. Alan Dwan, the director, is enthusitastic about under the historic arches and galleries of the old building, with many folk in old Spanish costume, carriages, horses and gorgeous trappings, in the background. M-G-M is making the picture.

PEPFUL

JACK HALEY

He's vis-à-vis with Miss Dorothy McNulty in "Good News," and is, as she is, quite in sympathy with the spirit in which that successful show was conceived and put on.

$5 for War Letters

If you're a world war veteran with vivid memory of some thrilling experiences ten years ago, back in 1918, tell us about it in 300 words or so and we'll send you $5 if we print your letter. Address War Letters, Chicago Tribune.

Wipe That Smile Off!

The three months' training school for the "making" of second lieutenants was nearing its end and every prospective second louie looked forward—and with no eagerness at all—to appearing before what was known as the "benzene board," which was known to make or break second lieutenants at will, its decision hinging upon the answers the prospective officers gave to the many and peculiar questions. This was at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga., ten years ago.

For nearly three months the fear of the "benzene board" was held up before the outfit. It seems that the numbers of the board often strayed from the subject of military maneuvers and asked some trembling young candidate what he would do if he saw a locomotive coming up the road. "Hey there, Johnson," some officer instructor would shout out while the outfit was on the drill field or on the march, "snap out of that. You don't think you'll get by the 'benzene board' do yuh?" And so on and on.

Well, the time for going before the board had come. My name was called and I walked briskly into the room and gave the colonel a snappy salute and then reported in the required fashion. Scared? Nervous? You tell 'em, buddy! It seemed to me that there were 980 officers on that board.

"Mad?" asked a colonel, smiling, O, ever so sweetly.

Now, if there is one thing that the instructors had drilled into us during that period it was the urge to give snappy answers, right or wrong, when we were called before the board. So quick as a flash I said:

"Yes, sir!"

"Well, what seems to be the trouble?" the colonel shot back.

"Nothing, sir," I replied.

"Well, then, what are you mad about?" the officer asked.

"Nothing, sir," I again replied.

"But you just said you were, didn't you?"

"No, sir," I answered.

"What?" the colonel demanded with apparent heat. "Do you mean to say that you didn't tell me you were mad?"

"I beg the colonel's pardon," I began, "but I understood him to ask whether I was married and I said I was."

This caused a general uproar, of course, but I couldn't quite see the funny side of it.

"Well, now, you're not mad just because you're married are you?" the colonel asked next.

I replied that such was not the case.

"Well, you might smile a little," he told me, and I did, and it was then I realized that I would soon wear the coveted gold bars of a second louie.

And I did. L. V. S.

When Dreams Come True.

On three different occasions, while on duty at a first aid post at Montzeville, near the German lines, I fell asleep in a soft arm chair, and dreamed that somewhere in a hollow, between Montzeville and Esnes, which was closer to the front, there was situated another French first aid post, with a British ambulance outfit doing the evacuation.

My dream told me vividly, each time, that the medical personnel along with some patients and the ambulance crew, had been wiped out by a direct hit from the German lines.

I awoke each time with a start, only to be kidded by the French brancardiers and my American buddies. I did not mention the ghastly dream.

On the last tour of duty I had no more than shaken myself out of my gruesome dream when I heard the ambulance men coming from Esnes call down the staircase of the dugout, "Next man up."

My orderly followed me up the staircase to the road, and we started toward the lines in our ambulance.

We had gone about 600 yards up the inky road, feeling our way cautiously, when out of the gloom came the form of a man, staggering toward us. I stopped the ambulance and we both jumped down.

The staggering form fell into my arms, and I perceived he was terribly battered by éclat. His dying words were, "Yank, I'm done in," and, with a gasp, "beyond that caisson——"

We found a battered caisson and a guide rope, and followed the latter about 500 yards, locating the first aid post of my dreams.

The sight was indescribable; we evacuated none. Our orders were, "Only the sick and wounded are to be carried in ambulances." My horrible dream became a reality in every detail. J. S.

Siberia Bound.

The heading, "Where were you ten years ago?" stirred up some vivid memories, among which was a wild day in Japan. The scene was a tiny seaport, Hakodate, which happened to be a coaling port for the transports Logan and Sheridan, carrying members of the A. E. F., Siberia, to Vladivostok.

Twenty weary, seasick days on the Pacific were behind us. At last we saw the longed for sight of land on the horizon, a purple haze which proved to be the foothills of Japan.

The bustling village was a welcome scene for sea weary eyes. Chantung fishermen unloading their skiffs, fruit vendors, money changers [who called a yen a dollar, when it was only 50 cents], pompadoured misses in gay-colored kimonos, hundreds of doll faced kids who smiled and stared at us as if they thought we might have dropped in from Mars—all were passed up. What we wanted was some edible "chow," and perhaps a drink or two.

In thirty minutes the khaki colored mob had taken possession of the town. The powerful drink, saki (the beer with a kick), helped the excitement along. The poor storekeepers were powerless to take care of the two shiploads of "starving Americans," and many of the shops looked liked a Kansas town after a cyclone. Not being able to savvy Japanese, the boys helped themselves to canned goods, rice cakes, and drinks (for which they sometimes paid).

It was long after midnight when the last explorer was rounded up. The previously empty guardhouse on the boat now accommodated forty guests.

Every one agreed it was a wild day and even worth the headaches that the national joy drink presented to the departing gang, Siberia bound. A. W.

ABOUT RIGHT

DWIGHT FRYE

He has the character of the title in "A Man's Man"; and his acting in the rôle is, apart from the merits of that good play, a reason for seeing it. . . . He was last in Chicago in 1925 in "The Knife in the Wall."

Fine Cast, Direction Make This Splendid

old fashioned saloon society—which, I regret to say, is my anachronistic test of wit and manhood.

"Still, I rank the electricians and property men on the lots a little better.

"They are a fine upstanding lot of mechanics.

"As to beauty, Hollywood wouldn't rate with a Northwestern co-ed party. A cross section of it, it seemed to me, would stack up with Michigan boulevard or Market street, San Francisco, on a fine spring day, with all the ritzy Janes out for matinees or nut sundaes.

"I rank the girls higher on brains than either mugs or shape.

"I am glad few efficiency engineers visit Hollywood. They would die if they saw how that $77,000,000 annual pay roll is spent. The work looks like play and time is no object. It's just the sort of mixed work and play that a lot of Merry Andrews would like, and undoubtedly is part of the charm of a job in the movies. But the actual acting must be tough going. Looks harder to me than work on a regular stage—just as talking into a mike is harder work than making a speech to a crowd.

Wolheim Gets a Hand.

"Mr. Wolheim is impersonating our own Al Capone in a show they are concocting—and I'll have to give the boy a hand.

"There's another show being cooked up—a court scene with some real newspaper reporters in it at $10 per day as extras—that is, Los Angeles reporters, but they are almost real.

"Anyhow, I've seen Hollywood—and when I get back to my home town this summer vacation I'll be considered almost as sophisticated as the home town boys who saw Paris in 1918.

"I didn't see nothing there 'like you read about in the papers.' I did hear that you can go to the bad in Hollywood. I have seen many successful attempts at that all over this country."

See you tomorrow.

Embarrassing Moments

"Hoo-hoo!"

I am a country woman. I was taking some fresh eggs to an uncle who lived in town. We drove right up to the side door as usual. I hopped out, opened the door, "hood-hoo'd," as I was in the habit of doing, and walked in.

A strange man came to see what it all meant, and I asked for my aunt, never dreaming of not finding her there. She had moved several blocks away.

I was both embarrassed and amused, but not nearly so much amused as the strange man. J. L. G.

Vanderbilt Rift Finally Brings Suit for Divorce

By Nancy Randolph.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK, May 26.—[Special Correspondence.]—Emmy Vanderbilt's final decision to institute suit for divorce against her husband, William H. Vanderbilt, in Newport, came as far from a surprise to New York.

Ever since the Paris fiasco, when the divorce that was quite settled was permitted to drop, every one knew that matters between the former Emily O'Neill Davies and the son of Mrs. Paul Fitz Simons were in a hopeless condition. Neither had any intention of living together again; and the trips abroad of friends of the family and the efforts of Mrs. Fitz Simons proved equally fruitless. Bill and Emily were done with each other, and whether they got a divorce or not, they would never resume the status quo.

Wife Happy with Gay Friends.

For a time the young Vanderbilts decided to let things go. They would live apart, Bill dividing his time between Newport and New York, and Emily at peace with her Bohemian friends in New York. But this hasn't worked out at all well. Both have plans in mind, and the Newport divorce is as much Will Vanderbilt's wish as Emily's. That Emily will marry again is a moot question. She is quite happy dashing about New York. One meets here at all the night clubs. She is fast becoming an establisher of traditions. It was Emily who started the fad of coming into a fashionable luncheon place without a hat, and sporting amazing cigaret holders.

Matters of the heart seem to have passed Emily by. Will, on the other hand, is almost certain to remarry within a short time after he obtains his freedom. His old friend, Mary D. Strange, is the leading choice to be the next Mrs. Vanderbilt, but there is also Elizabeth Larocque to be counted in the running. In any case little Emily Vanderbilt will not be long without a stepmother, and society hopes Will Vanderbilt will be content the next time, for he is essentially a home loving fellow, and aching to settle down for good at Oakland Farm, Newport.

Busy Newport Season Foreseen.

Speaking of Newport reminds me that that famous resort, which has been socially popular since the 17th century, is to have a whooping big season this year.

No end of people who have not been in the Queen City in years are dashing up to make arrangements for taking a cottage. The last week saw Robert D. Huntington, brother-in-law of Vincent Astor, and son-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Taylor, make a flying visit to the Rhode Island resort. He came from New York by plane, spent an hour or so looking at different cottages, and then left by plane for town again. The Huntingtons are to arrive in Newport in July, and this will mark the first time they have taken a cottage for the season.

Country Club to Open June 1.

The country club will open officially on June 1, but the links are already in use and many notable people are making longer stays each week when they go up from town. Mrs. W. Watts Sherman is decidely happy. She is already in her Shephard avenue cottage and not too far away are her daughter and son-in-law, Lord and Lady Camoys, at Cave Cliff.

Mrs. Prescott Lawrence is at her estate on Belleview avenue and Dr. and Mrs. Roderick Terry have returned to Linden Gate for the summer. The Aymar Johnsons are at Armseas Hall, while Mrs. Andrew Dulle, with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Romano Fontana, is at Rosevale.

The Casino is beginning to look populous. Visitors are many during the day, and the courts are well patronized by players. Indeed, tennis is getting a bigger hold on Newport even than in the days when no national championship was held other than on the courts of the casino.

Other notables arriving include Mr. and Mrs. John Russell Pope, who were in Italy last summer; Mrs. Henry Clews, who was absent from The Rocks last summer, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Lorimer Worden who are coming to Nethercliffe, which has undergone extensive repairs.

Duchess of Manchester Sails.

Her Grace the Duchess of Manchester, and erstwhile Helena Zimmerman of Cincinnati, was in town until Friday night, when she sailed once more for London via the Leviathan.

Helena's interests in this country make it necessary for her to pay almost annual visits but she seems to give little attention to the social activities in town and beyond attending a few very quiet dinners makes no appearances at all.

On her arrival in town her grace was joined by the heir to the duchy, Viscount Mandeville and his wife, the former Neil Verestead, daughter of a wealthy Australian. The son of the duke and duchess of Manchester met his bride two years ago in Colombo, Ceylon, when they bumped into one another in a swimming pool. The bump started a friendship that ended in marriage.

Her grace was not present at the marriage of her son to the former Miss Verestead, but the duke graced the ceremony with his presence, as did Lady Mary Montagu, sister of Viscount Mandeville. Yet it would seem that it was not disapproval that kept the former Helena Zimmerman away, for she and her daughter-in-law are very good friends now.

An Approaching Wedding.

Evalyn Dun Douglass has chosen June 23 as the date of her marriage to Edward Gardner Prime at St. Bartholomew's church. Her matron of honor will be the Countess Andrea Soranzo, who was Marqueene Stevenson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Stevenson.

It was the countess who, some little while ago, was named defendant by Mrs. Alice Bland Corbett, in a suit for $250,000 for alienation of the affections of one Mr. Corbett, whom the countess married secretly in 1925.

Marqueene won the suit, and now her choice as Evalyn's matron of honor is further vindication on the part of society.

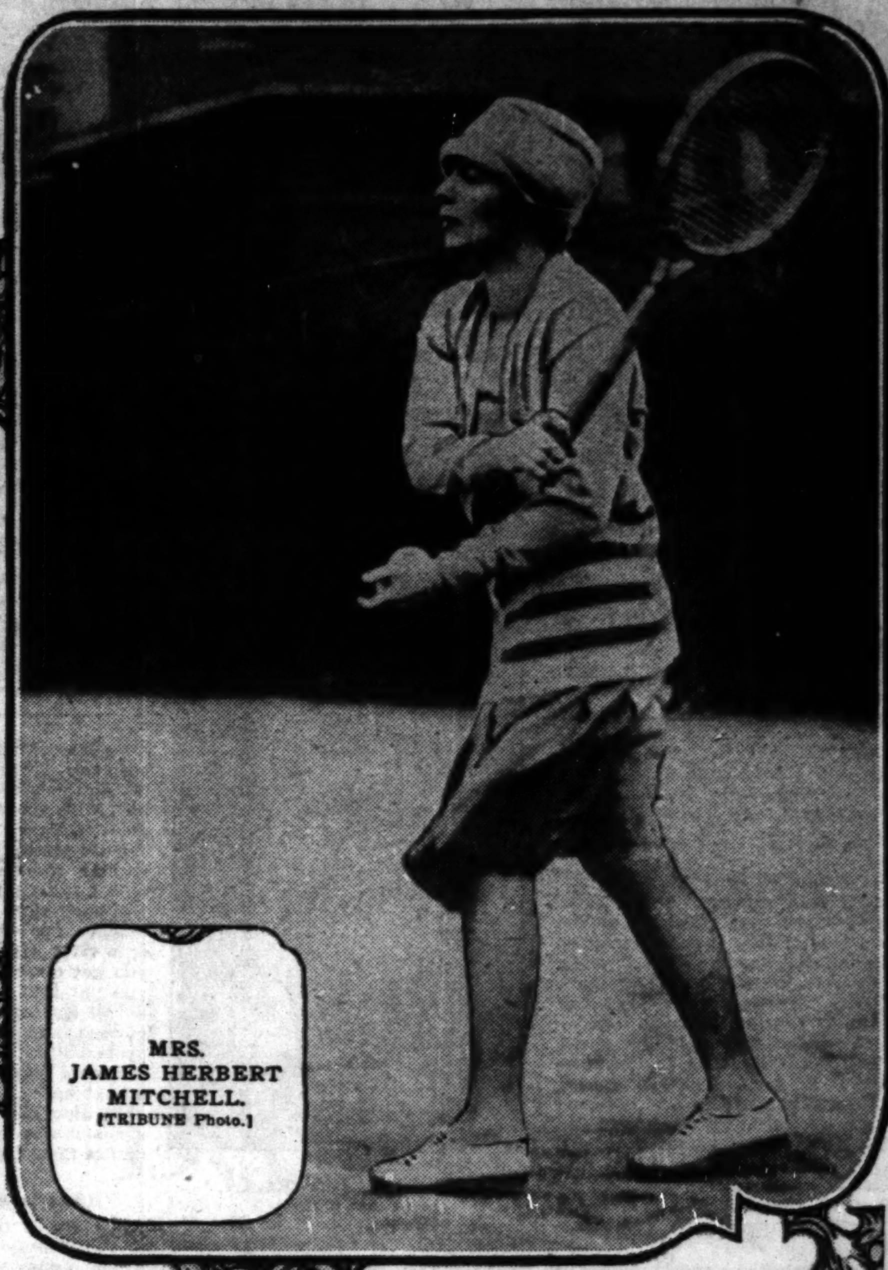
Jane Coats will be maid of honor and the bridesmaids are to include Mrs. Glover Johnson, Mrs. Walter Ganley, Laura Leigh Fletcher, and Jacqueline Hollingsworth.

Edward Prime, son of the Ralph Earle Prime Jrs., is to have his brother, Ralph III., as best man. The ushers are to be Count Soranzo, Abbot Low Moffat, William S. Olmstead, Linden W. Burch, Robert McKenna, and David W. Richardson.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Darlington will perform the ceremony, which is to be followed by a reception at Sherry's.

MRS. WILLIAM H. BUSH, MRS. CHARLES HUBBARD, MRS. PAUL SHOREY, and MRS. SILAS H. STRAWN.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

When the American Friends of China held their annual meeting a week or so ago Mrs. Silas H. Strawn was elected the new president. Mrs. William H. Bush, the retiring president, is now first vice president, Mrs. Charles Hubbard the second vice president, and Mrs. Paul Shorey is one of the directors. (Top, left.)

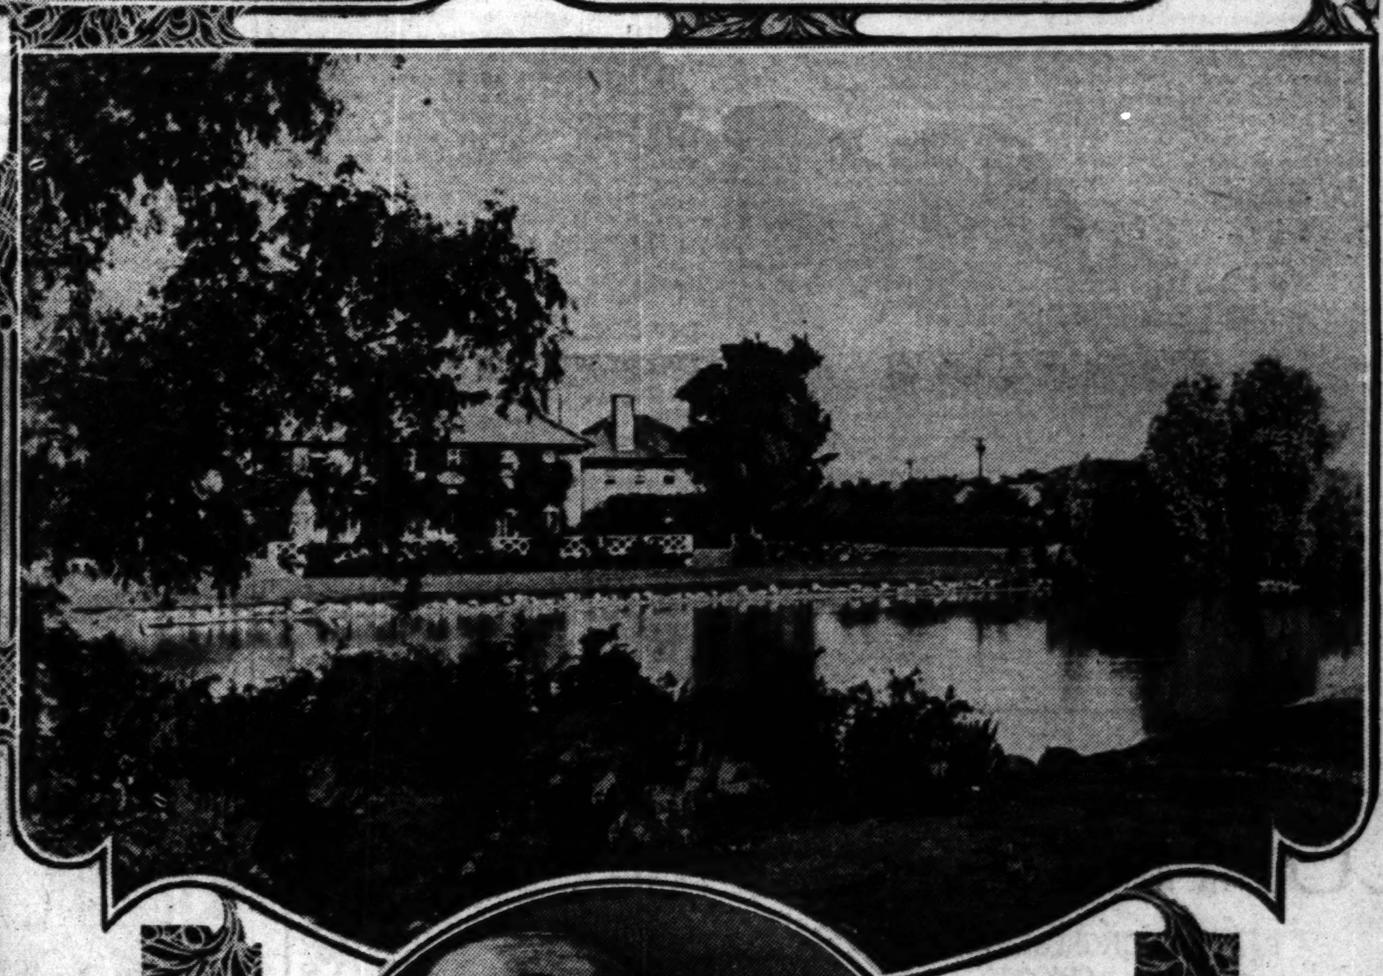


MRS. JAMES HERBERT MITCHELL.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Mrs. James Herbert Mitchell, who is more widely known by her pen title, Marion Strobel Mitchell, finds diversion of a late afternoon in a good, fast game of tennis with Dr. Mitchell. (Top, right.)

MISS PORTIA BARTLETT.
[Sykes Photo.]

Miss Portia Bartlett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Bartlett of 3400 Sheridan road and Lake Geneva, whose engagement to Arthur Farwell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lincoln Farwell of 1301 Ritchie court, has been announced, doesn't look like this now, because the picture was taken when Miss Bartlett was demonstrating what the well dressed little girl wore in the way of flossy millinery, petticoats, and the like, quite a few years ago.



THE WALTER S. BREWSTER RESIDENCE IN LAKE FOREST.

[Photographed by George Henry High.]

The Walter S. Brewster residence in Lake Forest is just now at the height of its spring glory. Mrs. Brewster is a member of the committee for the Lake Forest Garden club show to be on June 16 and 17 at the service buildings on Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick's estate in Lake Forest. George Henry High, whose hobby is making camera studies, took this photograph.

BETSY GORDON DRAKE and KEITH DRAKE.

Betsy Gordon and Keith Drake, children of Mr. and Mrs. Carlos C. Drake of Paris, will accompany their parents when they come to this country in July to spend the latter part of the summer with Mr. and Mrs. Tracy C. Drake at Aloha lodge at Lake Geneva. Betsy is 5 years old and her brother is 3.

Lake Forest's Lure Keeps Many from Distant Resorts

By Mme. X.

EACH week sees Chicago's "pretty world" losing its town dwellers, many of whom are betaking themselves to their nearby country places, while others are arranging for a summer exodus which will hie them to delectable places either on the eastern seashore or the mountainous districts in New England, or to California's long coastline, or to the lofty regions of Arizona, where it has in recent years been much the fashion to seek health and recreation.

Old Santa Fé, renowned in recent frontier days as being an outpost of civilization, is achieving lately a great reputation as a desirable refuge, either in summer or winter, for those in quest of health and recreation in a picturesque environment. The Arthur Cables of Winnetka and Chicago have built a house out there and propose to make Santa Fé their summer residence. The Hubert Galts closed their Chicago home ten or fifteen years ago and took their lares and penates to that more salubrious climate.

Artist Makes Money.

William Henderson, the well known painter, betook himself and household there about the same time, and, artist though he was, is reported to have done so well in New Mexican real estate as to be quite independent of the usual vicissitudes of artistic life. Mr. Galt is likewise said to have found added prosperity by this route.

The place is popular with writers as well as those of esthetic tastes, and many others who delight in sunshine, bracing air, good company and pleasant conditions of living are flocking there. Among these is that popular young Chicago matron, Mrs. Kenneth Sawyer Goodman, who ten days ago betook herself, her two children and her household staff there to occupy one of those quaint little adobe houses that are the specialty of the architecture of that region.

She took her Chicago domestics because in Santa Fé there are only Mexicans to provide such indoor service. The Mexicans always live at home, and one has to import cooks and housemaids if they are to live under their employer's roof.

Appropriate to Its Setting.

The adobe houses which are the principal dwellings of the residents there are made from the very soil of that region and are therefore as much a part of the landscape as are the cacti and other indigenous plants. A New England colonial cottage would be quite out of place in Arizona. We are growing in knowledge of what is correct in architecture and more and more are appreciating the necessity of having man-made structures conform to their environment.

Spanish palazzi are suitable to Florida or southern California, while being out of setting in New England or our northern landscape, where English, French and our own early American styles of building are harmonious.

Apropos of this and creating much discussion and highly interesting to the dwellers along the north shore is the stately mansion which the William E. Clows Jr. are completing in the very heart of Lake Forest on what is probably the most traveled crossroads in that community, Green Bay road and Deerpath avenue. This is the very last word in "moderne" [be sure to pronounce it "maudairne" in the French manner, for it means much more than our word modern]. One member of the architectural firm which is creating it describes it as "neo-classic" or "neo-Greek"; another one styles it as "moderne and directoire." Whatever it is, it is one of the most attractive and impressive houses yet added to the north shore's fine architecture.

Excellent Work Here.

A recent visit to New York and its environs made me appreciate the excellent work being done out here by those of our Chicago architects who are designing and putting up residences in Chicago's environs. This latest of Lake Forest abodes has a classic façade, with imbedded pillars and roof lines that recall the Parthenon. Its air of spacious and aloof solidity is most impressive to the observer.

To protect the dwellers therein from the sizable traffic that passes the house almost every hour of the twenty-four, the builders have inclosed it on three sides with a wall of great height and an even more unusual thickness, a piece of work that makes the famous ramparts built by an ancient Chinese dynasty to protect the celestial kingdom from the barbarians seem puny and ineffective. Sheltered behind this the Clows will not know that there is an outer world hurrying by.

Many New Features.

An advance guard or agent of the much heralded moderne in interior in style and decoration is the interior. The dining room ceiling rises from the cornice in a series of shallow tiers to the central space in a most enchanting manner. I don't know what this mode is termed in architectural terminology, but it's something quite new and extremely effective. The complicated interweaving arches in the ceilings of the high and narrow hallways is another touch of the very new and smart. The rooms are spacious, especially the fine salon and the dining room. There are many new features, too, in the charming bedrooms and boudoirs, while the kitchen is royal in size and most up to date in equipment. The whole structure is palatial and dignified. If the ground which it occupies seems somewhat inadequate as a setting, the mighty wall that almost encircles it does away with any inconvenience the occupants might suffer from a too curious public. That wall shuts out both sight and sound, and gives the house, to the motorist passing by, an intriguing air of privacy and mystery, an aspect of seclusion not often attained by American homes.

Those who have not kept up with the new in architecture and do not understand or grasp the trend of today's designers gape at this striking and delightful house and say that it looks like a Christian Science temple. This is merely an unintended tribute to the Christian Scientists, one of whose chief achievements is the classic and beautiful style of their places of worship. If anything would induce the writer to join this numerous band of seekers after truth and comfort it would be the fact that their temples are so inspiring in their architectural design as to turn the thoughts to uplifting heights.

In some way the enterprising builders of today must be kin to those pioneers who, especially in New York state, in the first half of the last century, built for themselves homes with Greek pediments, pillars, and other classic features, at the same time that they named their towns Utica, Rome, Pompey, Carthage, Syracuse, and such other historic and romantic names. The classic in architecture has a satisfying quality; it doesn't tire one, and conduces to a more tranquil state of mind than a more frivolous type does. There is even today a lovely quality to some of those old houses along the Mohawk valley in central New York that time and decay cannot diminish.

It is safe to predict that the Clow house will always be beautiful, no matter how much taste changes and develops. Its modern touches blend into the ancient and long accepted accents in its design.

Lake Forest Is "Full Up."

While we are in Lake Forest, so to speak, it is interesting to record that that fashionable and popular village is, as the real estate agents put it, "full up." Every house in the place that was for rent for the summer has been taken. A gay young outfit will be neighbors in that tranquil retreat known as the inner campus of the Lake Forest university, where, in winter, live the professors and their families.

Among those who, when the spring term is over, will be settled there are the James Mitchells, the Robert McCormick Adamses, the Dudley Rutters, the John S. Broeksmits, and the Milton Morses, while the Culbreth Sudlers will be in the Charles Edward Popes' house on Vine avenue and Mrs. Sudler's mother, Mrs. Robert Newberry, will be near by in the same street in the Charles Haffners' abode.

It is good hearing for Lake Foresters that Mrs. Edward Hasler, whose charming English cottage is just across the street from the last named residence, is going to occupy her house this summer instead of, as has been her wont in recent years, letting it to some summer tenant.

The Chauncey B. Blairs, who have spent the warm months for some seasons at Lake Geneva, Wis., are to be in Mrs. J. M. Mann's pretty house on Green Bay road this summer. Other summer folk who will play a social part in Lake Forest's many sided life are Mr. and Mrs. Silas Strawn, who have taken Mrs. Ambrose Cramer's attractive colonial house on the bluff overlooking the lake. This belongs to the pleasant little group of residences that is approached through that rustic archway labeled Stone Gate, which gives its name to the roadway leading to this and three other nearby mansions, property of John and Frank Farwell and the latter's daughter, Mrs. Aimé Millet. The last named house, by the way, is to be occupied this summer by the Walter Paepckes, as Mrs. Millet is taking her small family to Annisquam, Mass., where Mr. and Mrs. John C. Mechem, also of Lake Forest, are planning to spend the three warm months.

Taking it altogether, every sign points to a cheerful, social time for the residents in this part of the land, what with our beautiful open air opera, the North Shore's most distinguished and far famed asset, and the innumerable golf clubs, tennis courts, and other outdoor sports, of which the horse is by no means the least important, and which are all to be had hereabouts.

An Interesting Summer School.

Nor is this pleasure loving community without its offerings to the esthetic side of life. That interesting summer school known as the Foundation for Architecture and Landscape Architecture [a somewhat ponderous appellation] starts its fourth session here by mid-June. This enterprise was devised and given its first impulse by that well known garden expert, Mrs. Tiffany Blake, who saw the need of a harmonious union between country houses and their setting or gardens. Eligible to this school are four chosen scholars from the state universities of Illinois, Ohio, and Iowa, and two from Armour institute, making fourteen in all.

Carefully selected experts from the east and other parts of the country are brought here to inspect and criticize the work of these students, before whom a special set of problems are placed at the beginning of their term. The one whose work during the session is adjudged the best is given a foreign scholarship, which gives him or her [for women are eligible] the opportunity to study abroad the work that has been achieved by older civilizations.

There is a governing board of trustees, of which Walter S. Brewster is the president. The late Edward L. Ryerson was much interested in the development of this school, and to help it in its work left it a generous bequest in his will, thus helping to put it on its feet and make it a permanent institution.

No older eastern community surpasses the countryside about Chicago in the beauty and correctness of its landscape and garden design. The writer, not long ago, drove out along the North Shore of Long Island and also up the Hudson and through the upper part of nearby New Jersey, and while she saw some lovely natural features, such as a hilly landscape provides, she saw nothing quite so universally gay, charming and altogether correct as the gardens, large and small, that lie by the wayside on every hand as one motors out from Chicago. The W. G. N. garden contests have done a work of incalculable value in encouraging the owners of small gardens to develop these as a landscape feature.

Hamilton McCormicks in Town.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton McCormick and their son, Edward McCormick, are making an almost unheralded visit in Chicago, and expect to be here for two or three weeks. Mr. and Mrs. McCormick are stopping at the Drake, while their son is dividing his time between his two brothers, Leander and Alister McCormick. Edward McCormick, who is married and has two children, has made his home in England for many years, although he keeps his American citizenship.

Ever since she came here from England as a bride—well, it must be admitted that it was several decades ago—Mrs. Hamilton McCormick has been one of the best beloved members of Chicago's social world. Handsome, gay, with a keen sense of humor, she also seems to see life through rose colored glasses and to get more out of it than most of her contemporaries. It is a great gift and may account for the fact that old Father Time has touched her with gentle fingers. She is a vivid example of the adage that you get out of life pretty much what you put into it. The dull get tedium out of existence; the gay find joy; the earnest and serious quickly find responsibilities; and the peevish and ill tempered meet an ill humor and lack of sympathy. Alas, that these are facts that cannot be taught and that it sometimes takes a whole lifetime to realize their truth!

Chorale Francaise Concert.

Tonight is the annual performance of the Chorale Française of Chicago, which, under the direction of Charles Lagourgue, will give a concert at the Goodman theater. Miss Margery Maxwell, the well known operatic soprano, will be the soloist of the evening. The music will be chiefly by French composers. Wood and wind instruments and a chorus will provide the rest of the program.

Mrs. Milan H. Hurlbert is president; Mrs. William S. Monroe is both a vice president and chairman of the concerts. The French consul, Count de Ferry de Fontnouvelle and Frederick A. Stock are honorary presidents. Many other well known lovers of music and people of high standing in our socio-musical life are backing this fine institution, which gives delightful concerts several times a year.

Another enterprise to which the attention of this p. p. p. has been drawn this week is the Jack and Jill theater, which has moved from its little Rush street shrine to the French room at the Drake. This is a children's playhouse to which the youngsters of our public schools are invited to become Thespians. Several hundreds of them are already members of it and find there a wholesome and inspiring outlet for that dramatic quality which, unrecognized, drives many of our

CLUB ETHICS - - -

By Maude Swalm Evans

"MRS. RENSHAW is a funny one," commented the board member to a group of members who were visiting in the club lounge. "She's had a falling out with Mrs. Meck and she expects all her friends to enter the fray."

"I know about that fray," said the finance chairman. "I heard Mrs. Renshaw say that a friend of Mrs. Meck's was no friend of hers."

"That's the trouble with women. They always expect their friends to assume any grievances they have against one another," claimed the charter member.

"Now, now, it's hardly fair to generalize from a case or two," objected the auditor. "I'm sure there are but a very few women who take that attitude."

"O, I don't know," countered the charter member.

"Do you expect your friends to shun those with whom you've had disagreements?" came back the auditor.

"Of course not," answered the charter member.

"And I don't, and I doubt if any other member of this group does, so you see it's not so general after all."

"At the last federation meeting I roomed with a friend who was very much against the woman I was inclined to favor for state president," recalled the board member.

"Wonderful possibilities in such a situation," put in the finance chairman.

"She said what she thought and I said what I thought," continued the board member. "I didn't assume her quarrel and she didn't ask me to, and it never made a particle of difference in our friendship. We've often laughed over the matter since."

"Going back to Mrs. Renshaw," interposed the finance chairman, "her trouble with Mrs. Meck is purely a personal matter—began with their families, I believe. I haven't a thing in the world against Mrs. Meck. We've always been friendly, and I see no reason why we shouldn't continue to be."

"My sentiments exactly," approved the board member. "I'm fond of both women and I'm going to be as friendly to them as they'll let me."

Question.

"Should a federated woman's club take part in politics? MABEL S."

Reply.

The census of opinion seems to be that if it does it should present all sides of any political question discussed; that principles and policies be indorsed, not candidates; that politics be studied as a science of government.

Women the World Over

Miss M. V. Burr, deputy attorney general of Pennsylvania, has been admitted to practice before the United States Supreme court. She will be the youngest woman ever to have this privilege, which is held only by two other members of her sex.

When the Korean village of Kek-kiri was deserted by the men, who sought jobs elsewhere, the women of the village undertook the cultivation of the surrounding fields, founded a night school and took other steps for the welfare of the village. It is once more coming into its own and prosperity is returning.

Esther Dale, American soprano, will be the first American guest soloist to make an appearance at the famous Isle of Man festival.

According to a recent survey made by the Illinois Federation of Women's clubs, a man's chances of getting an ideal wife are only 3 out of 10.

Mrs. Florence Brooks-Aten of New York City has made a gift of $25,000 to provide better understanding between the United States and Great Britain. The income will be used to buy of the library at Yale books, pamphlets and newspapers on the relations between America and Great Britain from 1750 to 1816.

Business Buildings Deserve Title of 'Temples of Trade'

Build me a house and build it tall!
With towers and spires
High in the air—so high they catch at dusk
The sunset fires.

Build me a house and build it deep!
Strike through the clay;
Send the steel roots down into mother rock—
Build it to stay.

Build me a house and build it wide—
My soul is great!
The world will come to enter in my doors,
And none must wait. B. J.

By Eleanor Jewett.

BUSINESS is speaking. The great driving force which is impelling all kinds of enterprise onward and again onward is speaking. Commerce which has become international is speaking. There is no activity today which is not yearning and pushing toward larger development, and larger quarters in which to house it, as the development takes place.

The homes of yesterday, houses of modest height rooted to the ground, are today giving way to apartment hotels stretching to staggering heights. A bungalow on the roof, thirty stories above the street, is much commoner now than a bungalow built on level land. Houses are following where business has led. Cities which cannot easily spread out may spread up, and have done so and are continuing to do so.

This is a welcome tendency to those who enjoy a broken skyline of majestic beauty. A Gothic influence is marked in many of the buildings under construction. If not overdone, Gothic lines are superb. The Gothic is, possibly, of all architectures the most effective, the most majestic, and the most dramatic. And it stands crowding well.

Good Tendencies Pointed Out.

The Chicago Architectural league's exhibition current at the Art institute points out most of the good tendencies in the trend of building today. There are office buildings illustrated, buildings which are in sincerest truth temples to industry. Mark particularly the purity and simplicity of the lines in the Board of Trade building, Holabird & Roche, architects. With its massive columns at the base and its graduated heights rising above, has it not the air of a commercial cathedral into which business enters as God and men as priests?

Among the photographs and illustrations of houses, those of the Edwin H. Clark residence in Winnetka, of which Mr. Clark was himself the architect, are of note. Those of the residence of J. Seward Johnson at New Brunswick, N. J., Thomas Harlan Ellet, architect, are extremely interesting. From Graham, Anderson, Probst & White come the model for the Civic Opera house and the perspective of the Civic Opera house and 20 Wacker drive building. Again are found gorgeous lines of new structures, business, again, and artistic enterprise calling for larger and more sumptuous quarters.

Mayers, Murray & Phillip have a varied showing. Buildings in Honolulu and churches in New York, both are planned with exquisite taste. Holabird & Roche have an extensive exhibit. Included in it are the designs for the Board of Trade, 333 North Michigan, the Chicago Motor club, the Schroeder hotel in Milwaukee, and the Chicago Daily News building.

To the sister arts of etching and watercolor and pastel, Charles L. Morgan contributes gloriously and others who add beauty and color to the exhibit are J. Edwin Petersen, Eugene Savage, T. Gerald Kronick and Ralph W. Hammett.

Women's Work Noteworthy.

The exhibition of paintings and sculpture at the Woman's World's fair was a notable one. Lucile Kaltenbach shows a charming peasant boating scene, probably translated from the canals of Holland, "Stout Heart, Staunch Boat," the woman at the tiller, the two children crouched in the lea of the cabin, a roistering wind billowing the sail.

Lucie Hartrath showed two lovely landscapes, "The Valley-Morning" and "October in the Hills," the first, perhaps, the lovelier. Anita Willits Burnham showed her bewitching "Ann and Rags" and near that hung Pauline Palmer's fascinating "Sally." Helen West Heller had an amusing contribution in her "Cry of the Whip-Poor-Will," a medley of Alice in Wonderland creatures engaged in the most peculiar tricks. A feeling of the title penetrated and held together the nonsense rhyme of the picture.

By Alice L. Bidwell were two landscapes, refreshing in treatment, "After the Rain" and "Landscape." Irma Rene Koen was represented by a stunning composition, "The Harbor" and "Along a Lane" and "The Street that Turns." A. Lou Matthews showed a portrait of a sensitive little girl, "Barbara." Anna Lynch showed two figure studies, one of a gypsy girl, the other of a Spanish senorita, both beautifully handled and very effective.

Painting From Florida.

From Florida, where Mr. Neebe is recovering from the stroke that overtook him last summer, Minnie Harms Neebe sent the "Cypress Swamp," a canvas in which the trees take on a sinister significance and the atmosphere is full of witchcraft. It is a strongly painted picture and interesting.

Increase Robinson had another effective canvas in "Brick Kilns." A spirit of rebellious youth saves this artist's work from being commonplace. It is modern and sincere and, one feels, it is adventurous work. There is always a straining, not forced but unconscious, toward new effects, new combinations.

Josephine L. Reichmann showed a gay painting of flowers in her "Cinerarias." Mrs. Robert R. McCormick, a new name to enter the lists of exhibiting artists, was represented by the portrait of a young woman: "A Study." It has quality and feeling and splendid character analysis. The interest is centered on the face which is that of a proud and petulant girl, the beauty of whose eyes redeems the sulky promise of the lips.

An Exquisite Picture.

Kate A. Townsend had an exquisite picture in her "Spring Flowers." It possessed a bit of the sweet, French touch reminiscent of Madame H. Amiard Oberteuffer. The playing up of the gray strain was exceedingly like Mme. Oberteuffer's delicious type of painting.

Margarita Weaver showed a delightful portrait in her likeness of Katherine Kales. The details of jewelry and dress were as charmingly done as the face. The portrait is in a light key and is a vividly decorative piece of painting whether one takes it as a portrait or simply as a lovely painting.

Mary H. Wicker showed again her superb "In Corsica;" Florence White Williams had a nice but jerky still life, "Bronze, Brass and Spring Blossoms;" and Maud Wilson had a rather dull portrait, "The Blue Hat." Signe Palmblad showed an effective winter scene and in the Swedish booth won all hearts with her group of paintings on cloth of Swedish peasants, their entrancing costumes and gay customs.

Among the prints, the division of which was fairly small, there was a great deal of fine work shown. Among those who contributed to the success of this part of the exhibition were Bertha E. Jaques, Elizabeth Colwell, Lucille Douglass, Eliza Gardner, Helen Hyde (deceased), Vernon Kirkbride, Beatrice Levy, Eileen Soper, Elizabeth Telling, Diana Thorne, and Edith Wilson.

In the sculpture division Agnes V. Fromen, Elizabeth Tuttle Holsman, Ruth Sherwood, Nellie V. Walker, and Mabel Landrum Torrey showed particularly fine pieces.

News of Art and Artists.

Louis Alexander Neebe and Minnie Harms Neebe are enjoying an exhibit of their Florida sketches in Orlando, Fla. Mr. Neebe lost the use of his right hand last year through a severe illness but he has acquired a remarkable dexterity with his left. Mr. and Mrs. Neebe are both to be congratulated on their courage and their faith.

Joseph Birren is enjoying a one man show of his pictures in Cincinnati. Mr. Birren is one of our most popular artists. He has originality and his sense of beauty is never at fault.

Carl R. Krafft is planning to conduct his outdoor painting class again this summer. The classes will meet every Friday and Saturday afternoon, beginning June 1 and 2, and will continue through Sept. 6. They are conducted under the auspices of the Oak Park Art league and will be held just across from the headquarters of the league in the beautiful grounds of the Henry W. Austin estate. The classes are open to men and women, professional artists, amateurs, and beginners.

Mr. Krafft expects a good sized class, as many of his former students are returning to him. He writes that six of his students of last year have exhibited in the Chicago Artists' show and the American exhibition held this season at the Chicago Art institute.

Any one who wishes more information relevant to the work may write to Mr. Krafft at 1017 Lake Street, Oak Park, or telephone Euclid 6274.

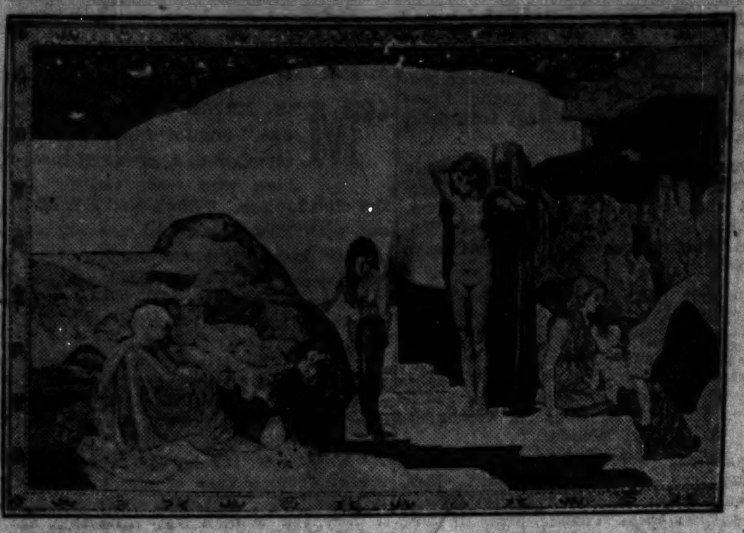
Robert B. Harshe, director of the Art institute, has been in Washington attending the annual meeting of the Association of Art Museum Directors, of which he is president.

An exhibition of work done in the Chicago settlements is now being shown in the Children's museum at the Art institute.

An endowment fund of $30,000 has been given to the School of the Art institute during the last ten days by Mrs. Anna Louise Raymond of Chicago. This fund, to be known as the Anna Louise Raymond Traveling Fellowship Endowment Fund, will yield a fellowship to the amount of $1,500 annually to be awarded a student of the fine arts for a year of travel and study abroad. This honor will be conferred next June for the first time, as the result of a competition.

Mrs. Raymond has previously established eleven full tuition Day School scholarships under the name of the James Nelson Raymond Scholarships, and three known as the Anna Louise Raymond scholarships.

Beginning Tuesday, May 29, the Goodman theater will put on the Hindu drama, "The Little Clay Cart," written by King Shudraka and translated by Arthur Ryder. The production is directed by Cloyd Head.



"DECORATIVE PAINTING," by A. Clemens Finley of the American Academy at Rome, to be found in the Chicago Architectural League exhibition current in the east wing galleries of the Art institute. The exhibition will run to June 7.

Duc de Nemours, Husband of U. S. Girl, Boasts Royal Line

By La Dauphine.

THE Duc de Nemours, by his recent marriage with Marguerite Watson of Washington and Newport, considerably fluttered certain dovecotes in Europe—not to mention the heart, or at least the pride, of this American damsel. Although his sister chaperoned the couple in London until the knot was tied, it is said that his parents, the Duc and Duchesse de Vendôme, were strongly opposed to the match. The Duc de Nemours, however, is quite a modern young man of 22, thoroughly up-to-date in dress and general bearing, and exercising the prerogative of present-day youth to marry where he pleases.

Educated at Oxford, his intellectual interests center around the extremely modern subject of chemistry, and he is especially intrigued over the invention of a powder which it is claimed will produce ice. A favorite pastime is shooting big game in Africa. He will soon take his bride to Spanish Morocco, and then proceed south to bag a few lions and elephants. Thus he hopes to let family opposition blow over, for he is not very far removed from the heart of Orleanist pretensions to the throne of France.

Lives in the Present.

As the contingency of a revolution or a coup d'état becomes more remote, he wisely concludes not to live in the past. Ferdinand Philippe, the Duc d'Orleans, son of King Louis-Philippe of France, had two sons, the Comte de Paris, whose line is extinct, and the Duc de Chartres. From the latter descends his grandson, Jean, Duc de Guise, born in 1874, who is the present pretender, having married at Twickenham, England, in 1899, his cousin Isabelle, daughter of the Comte de Paris. Although the Duc de Nemours lays no stress on the title, he has the rank of royal highness; but as he has no designs on the throne, he may live in France, which is not true of his cousin, the Duc de Guise, who passes his days near Brussels.

The present Orleanist branch claims direct descent from Philippe d'Orléans, brother of Louis XIV. Perhaps the most notorious of this outfit was the prince known as Philippe-Egalité, who actively promoted the French revolution, and for his pains was guillotined in 1794. His son, Louis-Philippe, later to be king, and the latter's two brothers, the Duc de Montpensier and the Duc de Beaujolais, fled to the United States about 1790, and became identified with the considerable colonies of French refugees in New York, in New Orleans, and especially in Philadelphia.

Adventures in the Back Woods.

Louis-Philippe had many adventures in the back woods of Pennsylvania and Kentucky exploring much of what was then known as the western country; visiting Aaron Burr when his brilliant daughter Theodosia, at the age of 14, presided over her father's household; meeting Andrew Jackson, who, as President many years later, arranged with Louis-Philippe the king an amicable settlement of the spoliation claims for damage caused by Napoleon; and accepting the hospitality of the great Creole families of New Orleans.

Louis-Philippe once gave a dinner in New York, attended by the painter Copley, where half the guests sat upon the bed for want of room to place chairs on that side of the table. Louis-Philippe's grandson, the Comte de Paris, served as a volunteer for two years in the northern army during the first half of the civil war, and of that struggle wrote a book which is often consulted by historians.

A Long Line of Dukes.

The present duc de Nemours is descended directly from King Louis-Philippe's second son, Louis, who also had the same ducal designation. In 1840 he married Victoria, princess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and his family were obliged to pay 40,000 francs to keep Louis' favorite opéra danseuse away from Paris during the wedding festivities.

Of this union the second son was Ferdinand, who died at Belmont house near Wimbledon in 1910, grandfather of the present Duc de Nemours, who earnestly urged his infant grandson, just married, to lead a devout life. Prince Ferdinand married Sophia of Bavaria, who was burned to death in the terrible charity bazaar fire in Paris in May, 1897. The only son was Philippe-Emmanuel, Duc de Vendome, who not only has the honor of being the Duc de Nemours' father, but through his own grandmother, Victoria of Saxe-Coburg, is a cousin of George V. of England.

SOCIETY

youths to commit crimes. Interesting and worth while occupation would keep many of our youthful sinners within the lines of moral conduct.

Those backing this young theatrical troupe are seeking for sufficient support to be able to build their own theater somewhere on the near north side. Mrs. Howard Willet is president of the society supporting the theater. She is much interested in dramatic matters and is also president of the Drama League, which has justified itself during the twenty-five years of its existence in various ways; among others being its discovery and recognition of George Arliss' now famous performance of the rôle of Disraeli in the play of that name.

He was struggling along with small audiences and scant press notices here in a Chicago playhouse, twenty odd years ago, and was thinking of giving up his engagement and abandoning the play, when he was discovered by the Drama league, then a young association. From that time on he played this rôle for years with unvarying success.

Aviation is still sufficiently in its infancy to make noteworthy air trips by our well known citizens across the Rockies. That attractive young girl, Miss Edith Walker, daughter of Mrs. Ernst Walker and member of two of our pioneer families, the Walkers and Rogerses, recently made the trip from Reno, Nev., to Chicago in twenty-two hours by a mail airplane. So thrilled was she by the trip that she never closed her eyes the entire time of the journey here.

The night was, she said, the most thrilling part of the adventure. Soaring high above the Rocky Mountains, the riders of the sky seemed to be up among the stars, and far away from this insignificant little globe. Nevertheless, they were reminded of our terrestrial sphere by the brilliant flares which at regular intervals have been set up along the air routes to guide the birdmen on their way.

Last summer Robert Allerton and John Gregg of Chicago made the journey to California and back in eight days, five of which were spent traveling up and down the coast of California by automobile, so that the air trip covering those many thousand miles occupied but a little over three days. This is an amazing record and but a herald of what lies immediately ahead of the traveling public of this country.

But this will not be without a toll of death beside which that of the prevalent motor probably will be as nothing. Young Horace Chase, son of Horace Chase of Duluth, and nephew of Samuel T. Chase of Chicago, recently lost his life in a plane of his own which he was driving and which took a nose dive into the sea off Palm Beach, Fla. Last of the name of Chase in the prominent and once numerous family who used to live in a large and hospitable house in what was then known as Lake View, he ends a family line in what is called "the male issue" in a manner quite up to date. It hurts to think how many will go his way before flying becomes established as a safe mode of travel.

Opera and Sports Vie in Paris Social Calendar

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—Paris is in full season, having a great diversity of interesting entertainment. A brilliant revival of Mozart by the Vienna Opera company is having an aftermath in the form of a Mozart cycle just opened in the Theatre Champs Elysees, continuing four weeks.

The first night attracted the most fashionable audience seen in Paris in many years, and boxes already have been taken for the entire season. Three performances each will be given of five great Mozartian operas.

The series is under the distinguished direction of Bruno Walter, who is now in charge of the state opera in Berlin after long experience with Mozartian traditions in Vienna. Recognizing the widespread interest in the eighteenth century composer, who in his best moments never has been surpassed, and perhaps never equaled, Prof. Walter has gathered a troupe of leading representative artists from several countries with a chorus from the old imperial opera of Petrograd.

With the opening on the outskirts of the Bois Du Boulogne of beautiful tennis courts, sports likewise are claiming a good share of attention from the fashionables. The games opened with an exhibition match featuring Francis Hunter and Helen Wills, and drew a tremendous crowd.

New arrivals at the capital find it difficult to choose between sports events, with the most important races of the season now taking place at all the courses. Longchamps draws thousands of Americans on Sundays, and next week the races will reach the very height of interest with the opening of the summer season at Chantilly.

Chicagoans figure in all these events. Edison Dick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert B. Dick, has seen the races, having just arrived, and is planning an extensive motor tour through France before spending the summer at Biarritz.

* *

Mrs. Michael T. Spades is making her annual visit. She is often seen at fashionable affairs, but is leaving soon for southern France to spend the summer.

Mrs. Carroll William Johnson of Evanston, with Mrs. Paul L. Roche of Wilmette, just has returned from the Riviera and will be here until June 10.

Mrs. William Bruyn Requa and her daughter, Eloise, just returned after an extensive trip through Europe. They spent part of the winter in Spain and also in northern Africa and are now planning to go to London for some weeks.

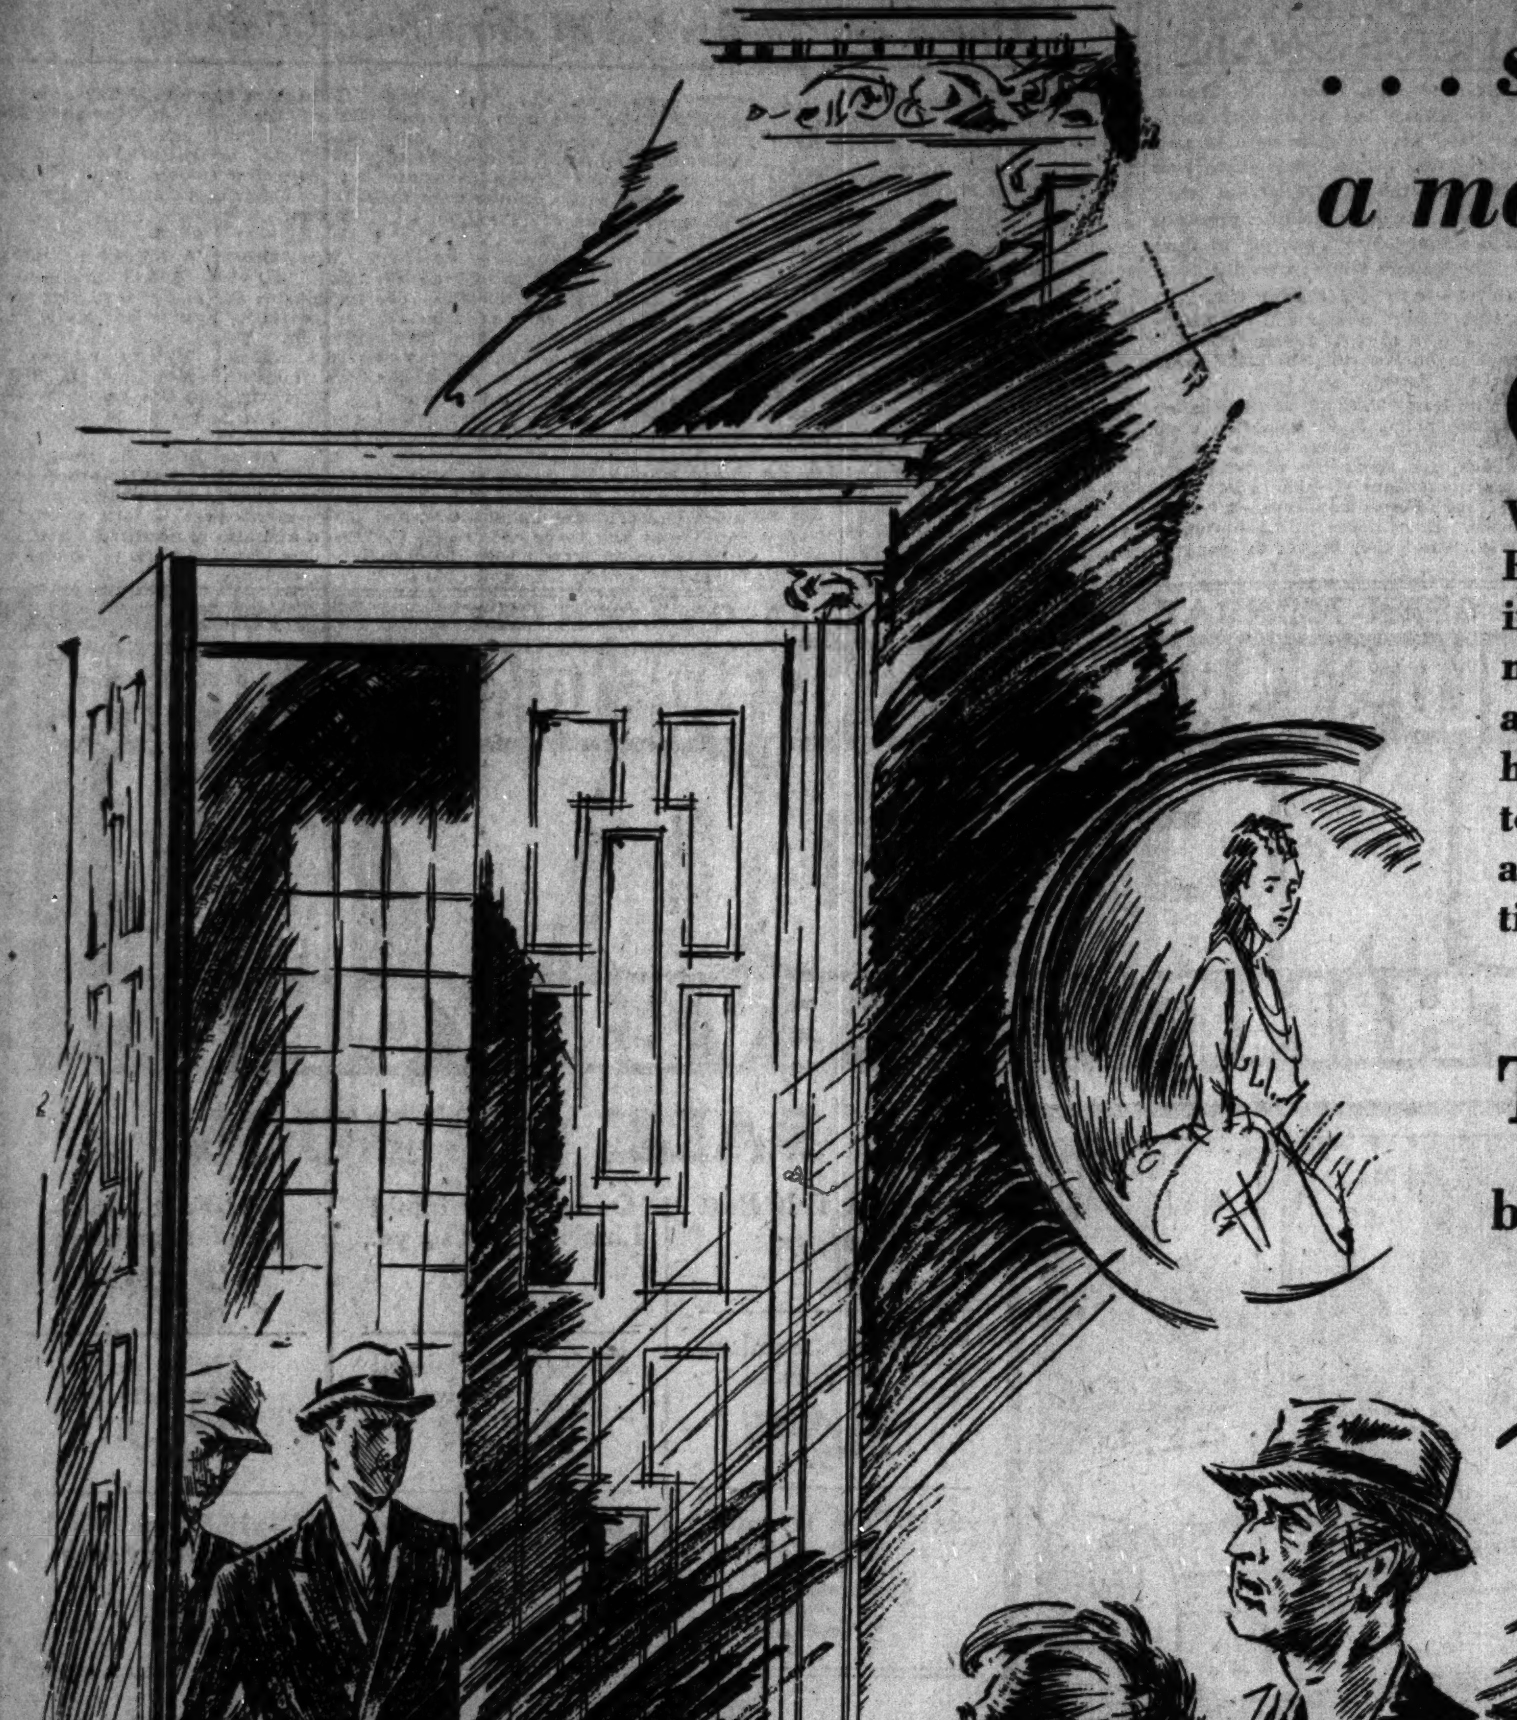
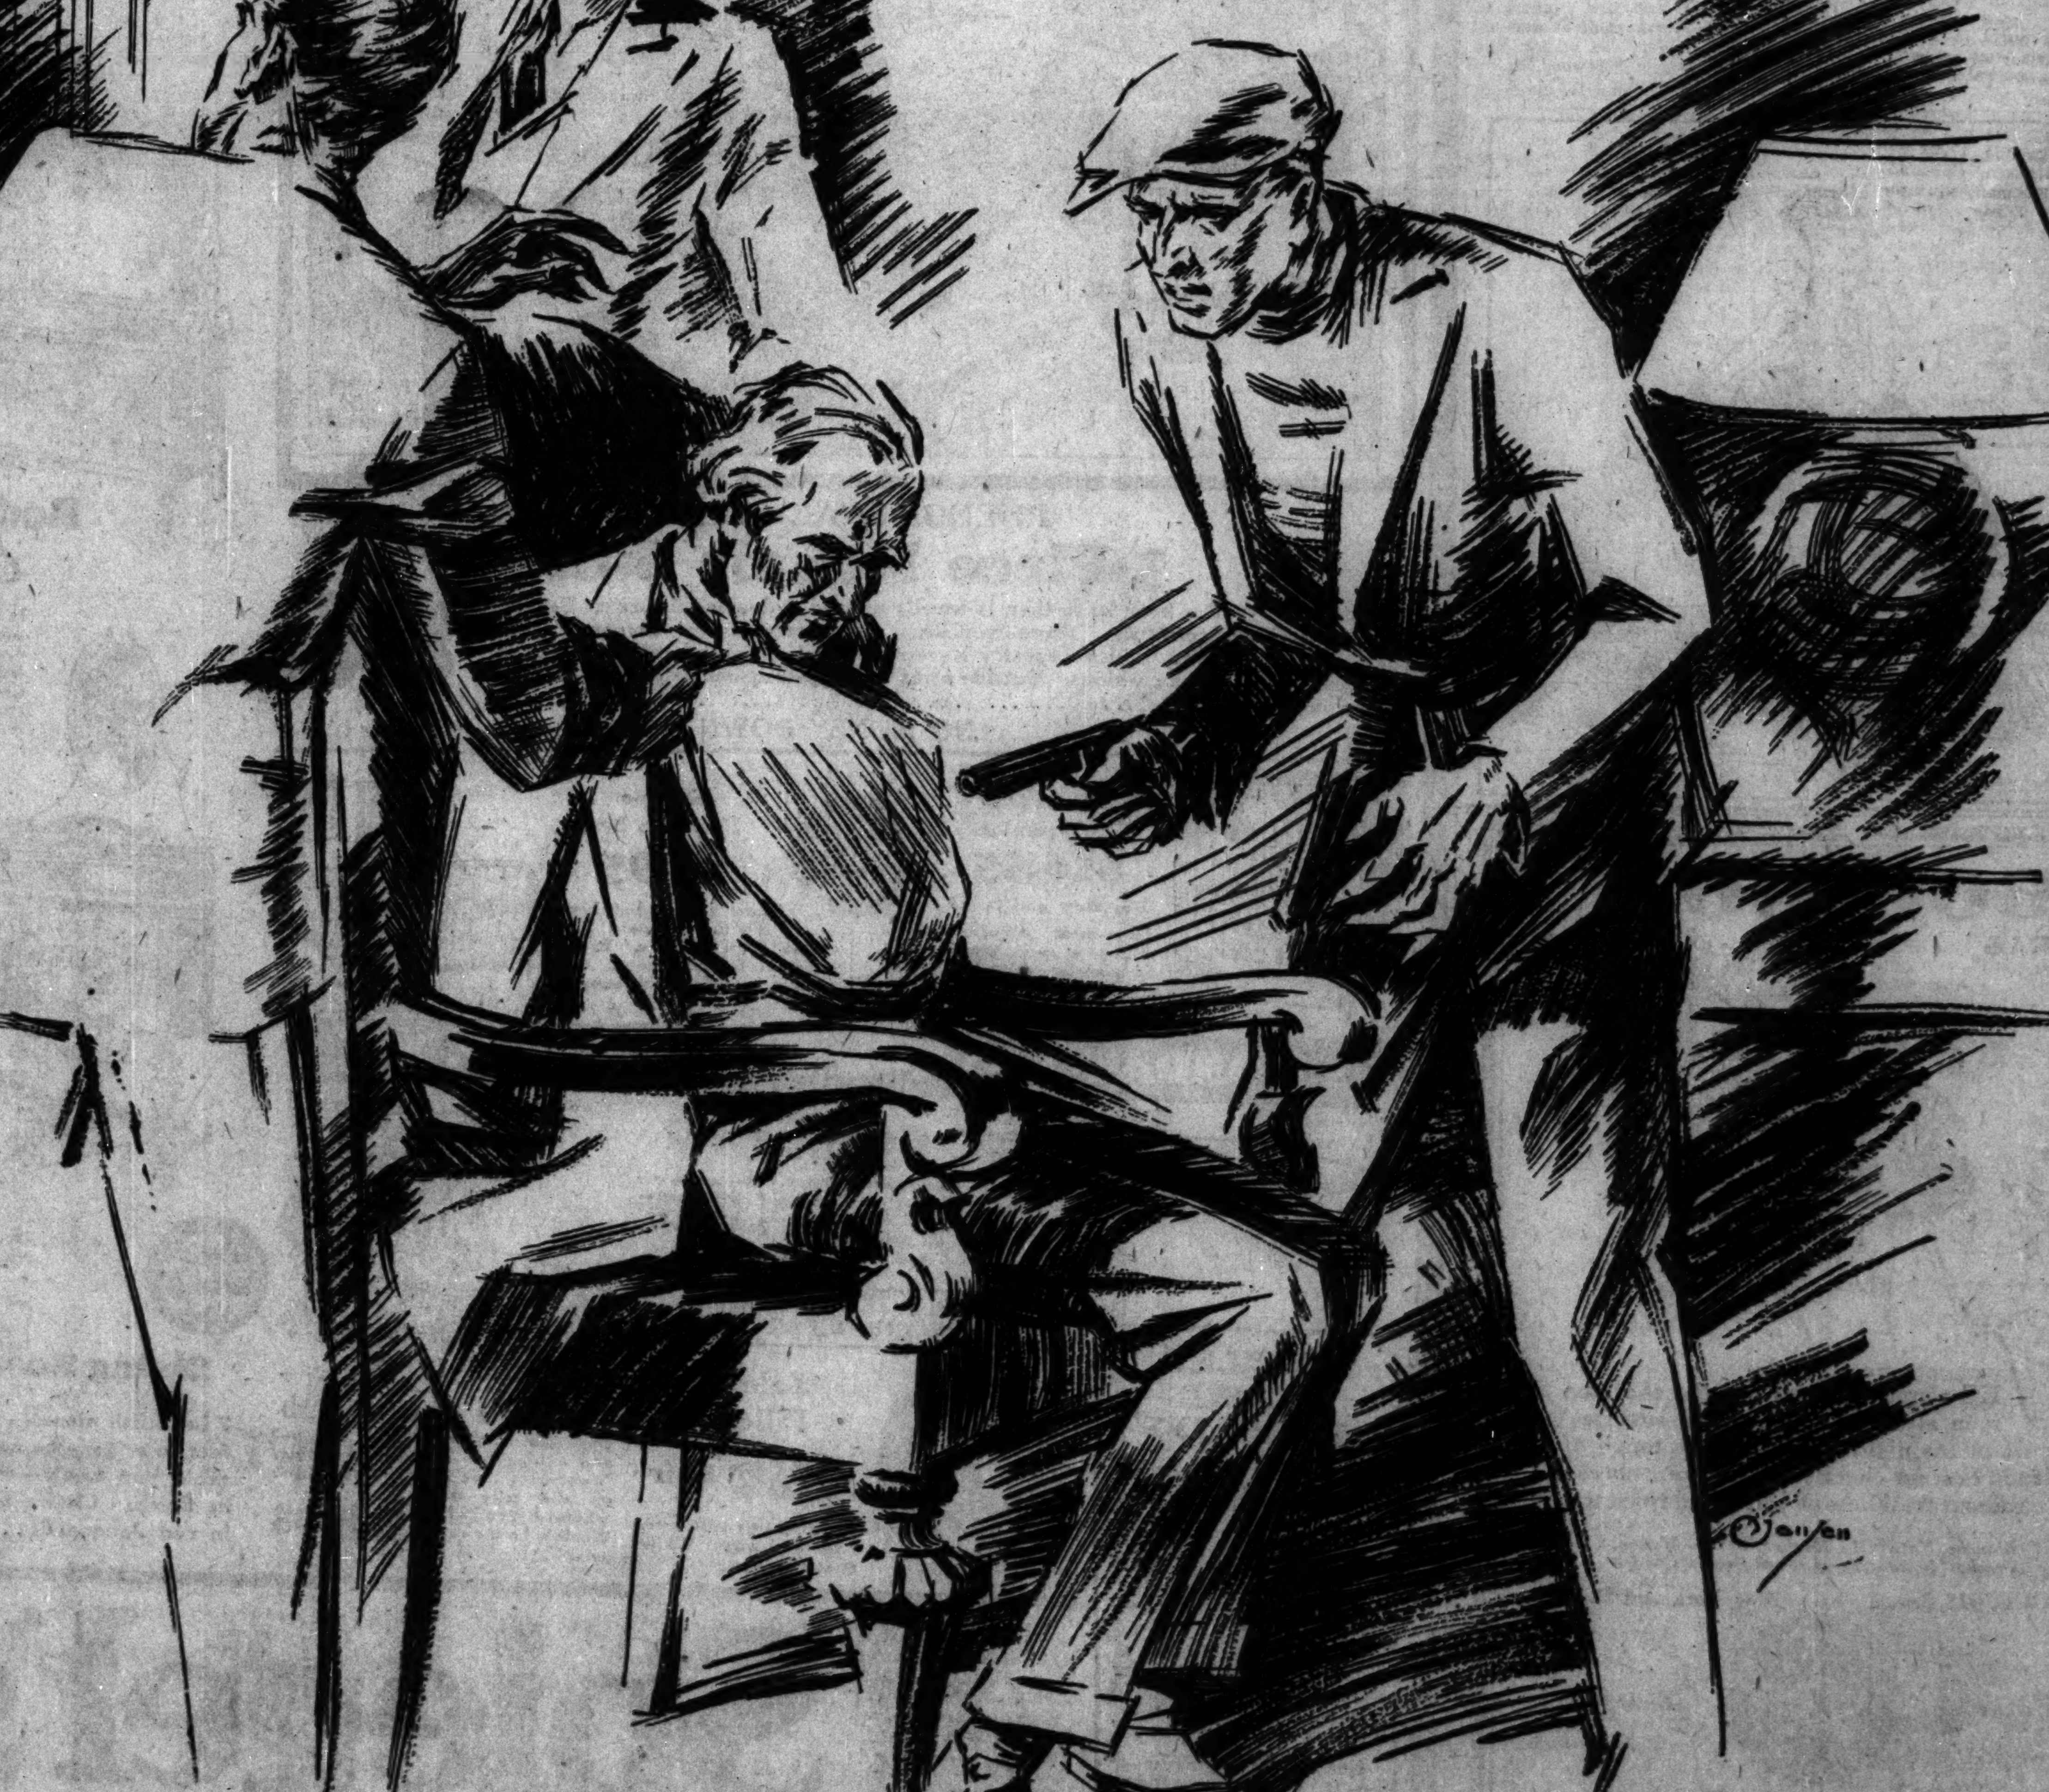
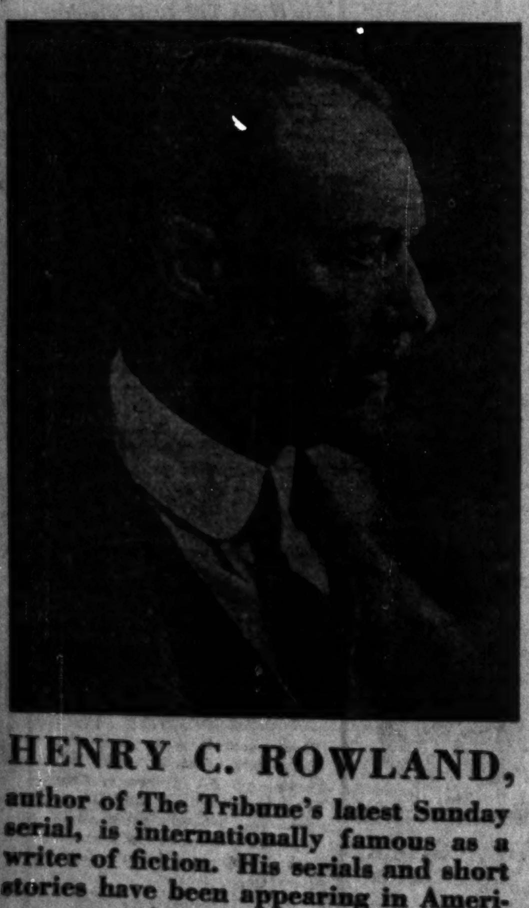
Watch for the first chapter of Henry C. Rowland's "THE PEACE STONE," in The Tribune NEXT SUNDAY!





. . . Raoul and Carter flung open the door to the library . . . the three thieves who had trailed Raoul from America had bound the old Comte and were trying to force him to reveal the hiding place of the precious gem . . . the American and the young Frenchman united against a common enemy—and the fight to death was on! . . . .



HENRY C. ROWLAND, author of The Tribune's latest Sunday serial, is internationally famous as a writer of fiction. His serials and short stories have been appearing in American magazines and newspapers for many years and building up a vast audience of appreciative readers for their author.

Rowland's vivid, colorful style and his cosmopolitanism are particularly adapted to the romantic-adventurous type of story such as "THE PEACE STONE."

THE REV. JASHWANT RAO CHITAMBAR, D. D.

THE REV. JAMES DEVADASAN, D. D.
[Photos: W. B. Norton.]

The Rev. J. R. Chitambar, D. D., president of the Lucknow Christian college, Lucknow, India, and the Rev. James Devadasan, D. D., president of Theological seminary, Bareilly, India, are being considered for the election to the episcopacy under the new provision made at the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at Kansas City. The election cannot take place for a year, but the last central conference at Baroda, India, nominated these two Indian leaders as the choice of the delegates to the central conference. Only one can be elected bishop, according to the action of the general conference.

Both leaders have been educated in the United States as well as in India. Dr. Chitambar has a son, Theodore Parmeshwardatt Chitambar, who is now taking graduate work at Northwestern university, and two daughters, Satyavati and Theodora Chitambar, who are students at Baker university, Baldwin, Kas.

As an indication of the increased responsibilities given to nationals, the presidential positions at Lucknow and Bareilly are the most important outside of the episcopacy in the control of the church, and now the episcopacy will in all certainty be open to them.

Trinity Lutheran congregation, Missouri Synod, will lay the cornerstone this afternoon at 3 o'clock for a new school building and auditorium on the corner of 83d street and Hermitage avenue. The Rev. M. Nickels, Lyons, Ill., chairman of the northern Illinois district school board, and the Rev. Alex. Ullrich, La Grange, Ill., president of the northern Illinois district, will preach the sermons.

Trinity congregation is the oldest of the Missouri Synod Lutheran church on the south side, having been established in 1865. On account of the changing conditions of the growing city, this congregation has changed its location four times and this is the seventh cornerstone being laid during these years. The Rev. A. H. C. Both is pastor.

Dr. Hubert Carleton, rector of St. Augustine's church, Wilmette, will be the speaker before the Episcopal clergy's round table at St. James church, Huron and Cass streets, tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. Election of officers for the coming year will take place. The Rev. H. R. Brinker is president.

When Celebrities Are Temperamental Impresarios Flee

ASSUREDLY, the suave, polished, poised lecturers that you see on the platform are human—sometimes too much so, if you listen to their managers. This or that one may seem to have reached almost superhuman peaks of eminence in science, philosophy, literature, love, adventure, or what not, so much so that crowds can be ballyhooed, easily and usually with profit to all concerned, into sitting at his or her feet. To those out front it seems often enough that no ordinary peccadillo of life could disturb such calm and prescience—but come around behind the scenes and see what goes on.

The latest literary lion from overseas to cause a furor in the lecture field is, of course, Count Keyserling. The noted German philosopher and author not only refused to be a party guest with his countryman, Emil Ludwig, the hard working biographer of Bismarck and Napoleon, because Emil had slighted the count's mother-in-law in his writings, but soon afterward let it be known that he had marked preferences in such things as audiences, receptions, wines—and, to a degree, women.

The count was to talk for an hour or so in Los Angeles. His fee was to be $1,000, and his sponsor was the Friday Morning club, an exclusive women's organization. The clubwomen were startled shortly before the count's arrival with the information that he did not like formal dinners before lectures, but did not object to a little supper, with champagne, afterward. Had he heard of prohibition? Maybe so, maybe no. But that wasn't all. He liked mixed audiences rather than stag parties, with pretty young women instead of "bald heads" in the front row, and men who were "bright, but not too intelligent." And two things he wanted especially to avoid in America were German red wine and superheated American sleeping rooms.

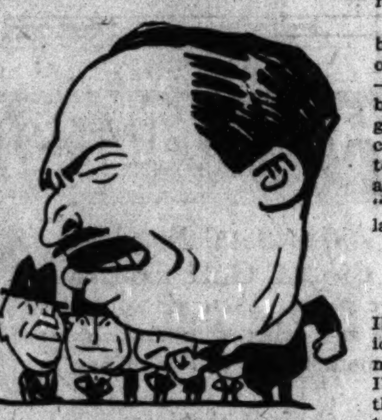
Steaming Out a Lord.

But the count was not the only one who found American steam heat an onerous thing. There was Lord Dunsany, the poetic Irish dramatist, whose flights of fancy carried his audiences to realms of truly rare esthetic beauty. Dunsany arrived in this country in October. It was a warm October, and the Irish lord was dressed, by some misconception, for an arctic, winter. He had underwear which his manager, Maj. James B. Pond, says was "an inch thick," and a fur coat as big as a polar bear full grown.



The late Blasco Ibanez, the fiery Spaniard, was even more so on a tour of America.

The poor Irish lord sweltered. En route across country he found Pullman cars like Turkish baths. He went around bribing porters to open the windows. Others in turn tipped the porters to close them. At last Dunsany painstakingly gathered all the change his party had—about $5. In both hands he carried this to the head porter—and the windows stayed open the rest of the trip.

Dunsany found American halls and theaters almost as hot as Pullman cars. He resorted to all sorts of cooling devices. He began by sticking his head in a pail of water before each lecture. But the heat was not thus to be subdued.

Dunsany then demanded lump ice and water in large containers. These he took onto the platform with him. As he read airy flights from his plays he trailed a hand and wrist in the ice water to cool his fevered blood, now and then taking up a piece of ice and rubbing it on his brow.

The picture of the Irish lord with a book of poetry in one hand and a lump of ice in the other was striking enough—but he capped even this one night by seizing the container and taking a great draught of the water that recently had cooled his wrist. Needless to say, only great poetry lovers could at such a time keep before their eyes "the light that never was on sea or land."

Ibañez Brings Heat.

On the other hand, the late Blasco Ibañez brought his own heat to America. True, it was heat of temperament, but it was just as disturbing. Ibañez was such a great orator that, though he scorned to learn English to talk to Americans, he moved huge audiences here to cheers by perorations in Spanish. By force of personality at such times, he conveyed ideas despite linguistic handicap. None the less, of course, he had to have an interpreter for his lectures.

After a long, irksome trip, Ibañez landed in Chicago. There he was confronted by a crowd of reporters, committeemen, and greeters varied and sundry. His Spanish first burst out like a conflagration. For some minutes he talked heatedly in Spanish. Haltingly, the interpreter said this was all a denunciation of some unknown who had stolen the writer's hat on the train. Some one told Ibañez that the interpreter had misinterpreted him. Ibañez turned on this luckless hombre another storm of Spanish. The interpreter, also a Latin, flared up too. He harrangued the crowd.

"I'm through," he shouted, in effect. "All through this tour I've been protecting Ibañez. What he really said just now was that Chicago was a dump, the railroad a terror, and that he was tired of being pursued by newspaper idiots."

Maj. Pond had a troublous time with the great author, as the incident indicates, but it was not all so serious. True, Ibanez's florid style of abuse so aroused another interpreter that the latter haunted him through the corridors of a hotel with a gun; and he so insulted an American railway president that the latter retracted an offer of a private car for the visitor and announced he could walk to Detroit. On the other hand, Ibanez left this happy memory: he sat on the platform while an enthusiastic chairman described him as a writer as great as Victor Hugo. He caught the name of Hugo, whom he fervently admired, and, not understanding the allusion to himself, got up and applauded with true Latin excitement!

Tagore in Tweeds.

Even the dignified, noble looking, mystic Rabindranath Tagore was not proof against the exigencies of an American lecture tour.

One day his native boy packed all his silken trousers in one trunk and all his brocaded burnooses in another. Somewhere on the Pacific coast the trousers trunk was temporarily lost. Maj. Pond heard a great commotion in Tagore's room, and upon entering found Tagore, in yellow burnoose, his long, lean legs naked, chasing the boy with something near murder in his eyes. Tagore had faced an assassin's threat with equanimity in San Francisco, but the loss of this trousers—that was too much.

He lectured that night with stout English tweeds below the bright yellow burnoose.

CHURCH NEWS

Other news of churches will be found on the preceding page.

This morning at the Ravenswood Presbyterian church, Hermitage and Cullom avenues, memorial services will be held for the late Dr. Duncan Chambers Milner, whose death occured March 18 at his home, Mount Dora, Fla., where he was spending his last days after a long, active life, a member of the Chicago Presbytery. Ralph Wendling Cook of the Central Y. M. C. A. will speak of Dr. Milner as a neighbor, W. J. Dillon, president of the Mitchell & Dillon Coal company as a friend, and Dr. Frederick L. Selden, the pastor, of Dr. Milner's public career.

Dr. Milner left his classes at the Hays academy in the early days of the civil war to enlist in the Union army. He was severely wounded at Chickamauga and incapacitated for further war duty. He finished his education, graduating from Union Theological seminary and being ordained to the ministry in 1869. He at once went to Kansas as a missionary and there earned for himself much of the credit for the victory of prohibition in that state.

He came to Chicago in 1895 to take charge of the old Armour mission and served later the pastorates of the Joliet Central Presbyterian church and the Logan Square Presbyterian church of Chicago. At the last he held the honorary position of associate minister of the Ravenswood Presbyterian church.

The Episcopal church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, is today celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of its founding. Bishop Sheldon M. Griswold will confirm a class this morning at 11 o'clock. The Rev. John Herbert Edwards, pastor emeritus, will also be present. A thank offering will be taken at this celebration in gratitude for the gift of $27,000 by Mrs. Edward L. Ryerson in memory of the late Mr. Ryerson to pay off the parish debt. Today's offering will go toward the erection of a Chicago building at St. Paul's school, Lawrenceville, Va. The Rev. Herbert W. Prince is the rector.

The first annual convention of the Student district under the auspices of the Walther league of the Evangelical Lutheran Synodical conference is being held at the Windsor Park Lutheran church, and will close its sessions this afternoon at 4 o'clock. It began yesterday with a delegation of about 100 representing the universities of Minnesota, Nebraska, Chicago, and Valparaiso. The convention sermon will be preached this morning at 10:45 o'clock by the Rev. Paul Lindemann of St. Paul, Minn., editor of the American Lutheran.

The Ebenezer Lutheran church, Foster avenue and North Paulina street, will break ground Wednesday for a new Sunday school building. The condition which must be met is $75,000 cash in the treasury. Last year a drive for funds was finished with a total of pledges for $130,000, which has recently been increased by another $10,000 from the Ladies' Aid society. The building and equipment when completed will cost $200,000. Andrew Norman is the architect; H. William Peterson, president of the building committee. The Rev. Elof K. Jonson is the pastor.

Today is Pentecostal Sunday. An editorial by Dr. Ernest A. Bell will explain the meaning and significance of the day. It will be found on the editorial page of this issue.

Pentecost will be observed in all the Roman Catholic churches of the Chicago archdiocese by the taking of the annual offering for charity. His Eminence George Cardinal Mundelein made an appeal for this offering which was read in all the churches last Sunday. The offering is to be taken today. The final paragraph of Cardinal Mundelein's appeal reads: "On Pentecost Sunday, therefore, the appeal is made in all our churches for the care of thousands of our orphan children, for the multitude of poor and sick that belong to us, for the families in need of help and who are bound to us by the ties of a common faith, for all those whom the Savior included in the number of those especially dear to Him when He said 'inasmuch as you have done it to the least of these, my little ones, you have done to Me.'"

A service in celebration of Pentecost and in further preparation for the nineteen hundredth anniversary in 1930 will be held as a union communion service this afternoon at 3 o'clock by the Disciples of Christ in the Irving Park Christian church, Kedvale and Cullom streets. The Rev. Charles R. Oakley will preside, and the Rev. C. W. Longman will preach the sermon. The Rev. R. C. Lemon and the Rev. D. A. Wickizer will preside at the communion table. Special music will be sung by the Irving Park church choir and Mrs. Edwin Jester.

This anniversary of Pentecost, the birthday of the Christian church, will be a day of consecration at the First Congregational church of Oak Park, when all the people will bring their pledges and personally lay them on the communion table. Last Sunday 160 men and women started out on a campaign to lay before the constituency of the church the raising of a fund which it is hoped will reach a total of $101,000.

A building and financial program was suggested by Dr. A. W. Palmer, the pastor, and was approved by the trustees two weeks ago which proposes to distribute the total amount to be raised as follows: An addition to the church house with equipment, alterations, and redecorating, $52,000; unpaid bonded indebtedness with interest, $31,000; unpaid special assessments for street paving and lighting Lake street, $4,500; fund to be created for repairs and redecorating in 1929, $13,500.

The Christian Citizenship council, Mrs. G. M. Mathes, president, will give a reception to Judge John A. Swanson and a victory banquet tomorrow evening at 5:30 in the Cameo room, Morrison hotel. The speakers will be Mrs. W. W. Ramsay, Frank J. Loesch, the Rev. John Heyworth and Judge Swanson. Fred B. Wise, tenor, will sing.

Gateway to the Playgrounds of the North

ON your way to the primeval fastnesses, the cool forests, the rushing streams of the north, stop for a little time here in Detroit.

Visit Detroit's great industrial plants, and realize for yourself how far the world has travelled along the road of civilization. Stop for a moment at the zenith of the man-made world before you plunge into the nadir of the ageless wilderness.

Experience in the course of a few days, the world as it is—and as it was. From Detroit you may fly, if you wish, back to genesis.

That you may know the manifold summer attractions of this region, boat trips, water sports, golf, the lake country, visits to Old-World Canada, the shops, hotels and theaters, we have prepared a booklet called "Detroit". Why not have us send it? Write today.

NEW MORRISON HOTEL
CHICAGO

The New Morrison, when completed, will be the world's largest and tallest hotel—46 stories high, with 3,400 rooms.

SOME of the prettiest social affairs held this year at the Morrison Hotel have taken place during the present month.

Why Every Banquet Is a Success

In keeping with the season, an air of cheery informality is the prevailing note at the banquets and receptions. The long experience of the management assures exactly the right "al-fresco" atmosphere to suit the evenings of early summer.

1944 Rooms and Baths, $2.50 Up

Every guest room is outside, with bath, running ice water, bed-head lamp, telephone, and Servidor. Each floor has its housekeeper, and all patrons enjoy garage privileges. Dance music and first rate vaudeville are given at luncheon, dinner and after-theatre supper in the celebrated Terrace Garden.

Why Rates are Low

The location, more central than that of any other hotel, has established subrentals that pay all the ground rent, and the entire saving is passed on to the guests in reduced rates.

As a railroad drives a gold spike at its completion, so will Governors Small of Illinois and Baker of Missouri apply the last rivet on one end of the Champ Clark Bridge—a rivet of gold. And Mayors Thompson of Chicago and Beach of Kansas City will drive the last rivet on the other end, and will otherwise officiate in the huge celebration at the opening of the bridge, and the new Short Route between the two cities.

A pageant, parades, street dance, special excursions, carnival shows, etc. Come, partake in the great times to be had. You're invited.

First Tour* June 17th then July 1st, 15th, and weekly thereafter

Every minute will be an interesting one. You'll enjoy the picturesque Irish Hills, the trip across romantic Canada, and your visit to that never-to-be-forgotten wonder, Niagara Falls. You'll love the Thousand Islands, the forested ranges of Adirondacks, beautiful Lake Placid and you'll be thrilled with your visit to Ausable Chasm and your trip across Lake Champlain. Your journey thru the Green and White Mountains, over the Mohawk Trail, thru the Berkshires, along the Hudson River on the Storm King Highway, over the Poconos, thru the Delaware Water Gap and Watkins Glen, will provide scenes you'll never forget and things to talk about, for rest of your life.

Then there's a day in Boston—two full days and three glorious nights in New York—with a heavenly night and an enchanted day at Alexandria Bay, and the grand climax—a trip across Lake Erie.

All of these scenic thrills are packed into the greatest vacation trip ever offered, the result of five years' of successful operation and experience.

How to Get There—Crosstown lines to Madison street. West on Madison to Rockwell, 2600 west.

By The Aviation Editor.

THE final event of the All-Chicago Model airplane tournament, sponsored by THE TRIBUNE, will be held today in the 132d Infantry armory at Rockwell and Madison streets. The competition is a duration flight event for indoor tractor models.

More than 500 boys have entered in this event. Many of them are flying models in competition for the first time, while others are veterans at the game. But one thing is universal among the novices and veterans in the meet—all are out to win and all are keen students of the model game.

All Boydom Interested.

The indoor planes are the easiest of the models to build. They consist of a single stick for a fuselage, one large wing forward and a small elevator plane and rudder on the rear of the fuselage stick. These models are powered as all other types, with rubber strands, and are remarkably light in weight. Most of the indoor planes weigh around one and one-half ounces. They are built of balsa wood, rice paper, and bamboo and are put together with ambroid.

Some fine performances are cred-

Magic Card for Politeness Goes to a Decorator

North Sider Wins $50 for His Courtesy.

By The Politeness Reporter.

IN THE store window at 4541 Broadway there was an exhibition of oil paintings. It was evident that they were originals rather than copies, and there also was the hint about them that they had been but recently completed. Suddenly I noticed the artist himself. Clad in a smock, and applying the colors with a knife, he stood, just beyond the window, at work on a marine scene.

"I like that one of the British whaler," I commented for the benefit of other bystanders.

The only one to respond was a rather tall man who coincided with my criticism.

"Looks natural," he nodded.

"Then you've seen the real thing," I ventured.

"No," he corrected. "But it looks as I should think it ought to look. The high lights on the sails. It takes a lot of time to paint a picture like that, to say nothing of the skill."

"You've never done any sailing, then," I remarked.

"Yes," he said, "when I was a young fellow I spent three seasons on the Mississippi, between St. Louis and St. Paul. My work then was along the same line as it is now. I'm an interior decorator.

* *

Divine Inspiration.

"A bootlegger?"

"No, not that kind," he laughed. "That summer on the David Tipton I helped paint lighthouse signals. When I was over in France during the war I was on the Riviera, but to me there's no scenery like the Mississippi."

"You lived along it?"

"At Quincy."

"Almost Mark Twain's country."

"Hannibal was just across the river."

"I wonder," I said, "where the artist inside there gets his inspiration."

I went inside to ask, and the interior decorator accompanied me. The artist glanced up from his work and peered at me through his glasses.

"Where do you get the inspiration for your pictures?" I inquired.

"From heaven," the artist replied.

"You're right," nodded the decorator.

"Is your work appreciated?" I asked.

"Well," smiled the artist, "I had a very good breakfast this morning."

The decorator and I studied the various canvasses inside the store. There was one large one of the Portland lighthouse in Maine. The man said he had painted up and down the Atlantic coast. He had two daughters, one of whom he was putting through high school.

"He was right about getting his inspiration from heaven," the decorator said to me, reverently. "If a person can only put themselves in line with the good there is in the world, the good will come to them."

Then the decorator and the artist exchanged views on how best to acquire

How They Fly Across Oceans Explained Here

Mystery of Twenty-four Gadgets Is Solved.

SUPPOSE you suddenly woke up and found yourself flying an airplane across the ocean. Yes, you would have your worries. And not the least of these would be a board in front of you, covered with a weird, intricate array of dials, switches, and other gadgets. Each would have a meaning of its own and your life would depend on your being able to interpret and work them properly.

Of course you drive a car and are familiar with the instrument board on almost any old gas buggy. It doesn't do you much good now. You recognize scarcely one of those tricky thingumajigs on the control board of the plane. You stare at them helplessly, as if at some fantastic kind of puzzle.

A lot of work a day people, even if they haven't experienced any nightmare like that, have gazed wonderingly at pictures of the spread of instruments with which the long distance aviator finds his way. The latest ocean spanning bird, the Bremen, has a particularly complete, up to date assemblage of dooflickers on its control board, the mechanical organs of sense by which Koehl, von Huenefeld and Fitzmaurice found their way across the trackless ocean. Look at it and see how much sense you can make of it. Not much! And you may wonder what they could possibly do with all that machinery. Yet every gadget has its place in the scheme of things aerial.

Inside Information.

Here, briefly is what they are all about:

No. 1. Ammeter. This is pretty much like the one on your car. It gives you the rate of charge and discharge of your batteries so that you won't take any chance of said batteries going dead.

No. 2. Tachometer. This tells the rate of rotation of the propeller, the number of revolutions per minute. It is comforting to glance at it and see that the old prop is turning around properly and you are making steady progress through the air.

No. 3. Oil Gauge. Tells you how much lubricating oil you have. Your automobile experience has given you plenty of understanding of what happens when your oil runs out. You burn out your bearings and generally put your motor on the bum. Very undesirable in an airplane.

No. 4. Barometer, for high altitudes. Gives air pressure and height at which you are flying. Another instrument registers for low altitudes.

The Aerial Speedometer.

No. 5. Air speed indicator. It tells you how fast you are progressing through the air. That, of course, is not necessarily your real speed. Winds may be holding you back. There is no instrument to show your your ground speed. Over land you can get some idea by looking below, but over water there is only the monotonous face of the sea, which is one of the nervous things about ocean flying.

No. 6. Primer. Same as in automobiles. You give it a push to shoot gas into the motor when it isn't hitting just right.

No. 7. The barometer, for low altitudes.

No. 8. Rate of climb indicator. In a fog you might not know where you were going up or down, or on a level. It indicates whether the plane is tilted with reference to nose and tail—a simple device on the principle of the ordinary carpenter's level.

No. 9. Lateral inclination indicator. This is a similar scale, but laid over on its side. It tells whether the plane is level with reference to the two wing tips, whether it is leaning over on one wing.

No. 10. Oil gauge. Another instrument that registers how much lubricating oil you have left. In case one goes out of order the other works.

No. 11. Thermometer. Gives the temperature of the lubricating oil.

A Marvel of Mechanics.

No. 12. Earth inductor compass, that new marvel in the way of mechanical sense organs. You set it for the direction in which you wish to fly, and whenever you deviate from that direction the needle shifts. One trick about the mechanism is that if the plane should swing completely around 180 degrees and you did not notice it, the compass would seem quite normal. In reality, of couse, it would be working backward. This is said to have been what happened on one of the flights of Mrs. Grayson, the one in which her plane turned back. The machine turned around without anybody noticing the behavior of the compass, with the result that the aviators found themselves flying in the direction opposite that which they had intended. Our plane also has a magnetic compass, seen below chart and right hand control.

No. 13. Altimeter. This tells you how high you are.

No. 14. Chart, which is almost like a map for the trans-Atlantic aviator. It gives him his hourly course. Before he starts he lays out his route and sets down, in terms of hours of flight, the direction in which he is to head from hour to hour. In the actual flight he follows this chart. He flies in the direction indicated during each hour indicated, making allowances as well as he can for side winds which drift him from his course. The detection of side winds has always been one of the important problems of aviation. One of the best ways is the use of smoke bombs—the aviators of the Bremen used them.

Two Strainers.

No. 15. Gas strainers and cut-offs. One for each gas tank. The Bremen carried two. The fuel oil passes through these strainers and is cleared of any extraneous matter that may be in it, and the aviator can shut off either tank at will.

No. 16. Gas throttle. This is what you use to give her the gun. It is just like the hand throttle on the steering wheel of your car.

No. 17. Air throttle, as on automobiles. You use it to make the mixture richer or leaner.

No. 18. Automatic gas gauge. It is a complicated device for registering how much fuel you have. There are two gas gauges, for safety's sake.

No. 19. Ignition switch, which throws on the motor.

No. 20. Tank switch, with which you change from one gas tank to another.

No. 21. Pneumatic gas gauge.

No. 22. Gas pump, used in case the automatic pump fails.

No. 23. Grease gun, for shooting lubricant into the heavier moving parts.

No. 24. Booster, a device for speeding up the magneto.

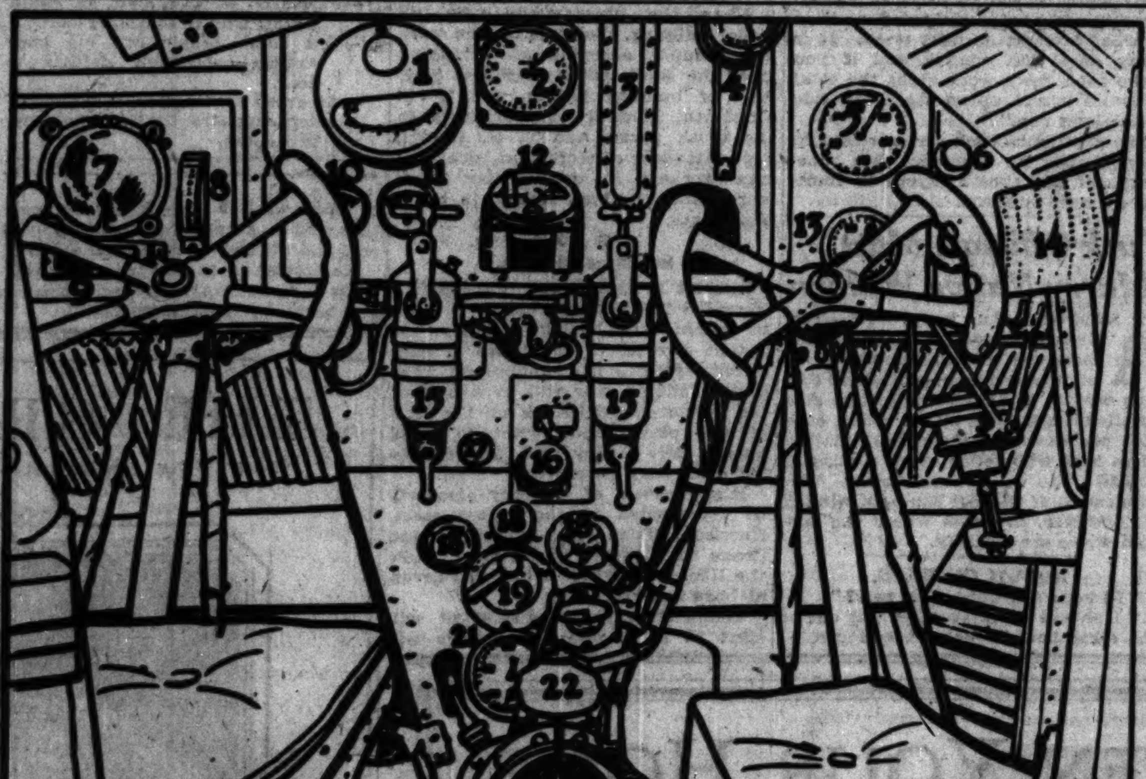
No Stick in It.

The controls are dual. They look something like automobile steering wheels. The "stick" of ordinary planes, which is merely a rod that you push around to steer the plane, is not used on the big machines. In the present type of control you turn the wheel to steer right or left, and push the wheel and bar backward or forward to go up or down.

The pilots are inclosed in the complicated cockpit up to their necks. Their heads protrude above, so they can have a good look ahead and over the sides.

Now go ahead. You have just awakened and found yourself flying an airplane across the ocean. Now you know what all that junk on the control board is for. Be sure that you don't go wrong with any of those gadgets, or it is liable to be the last mistake you will ever make.

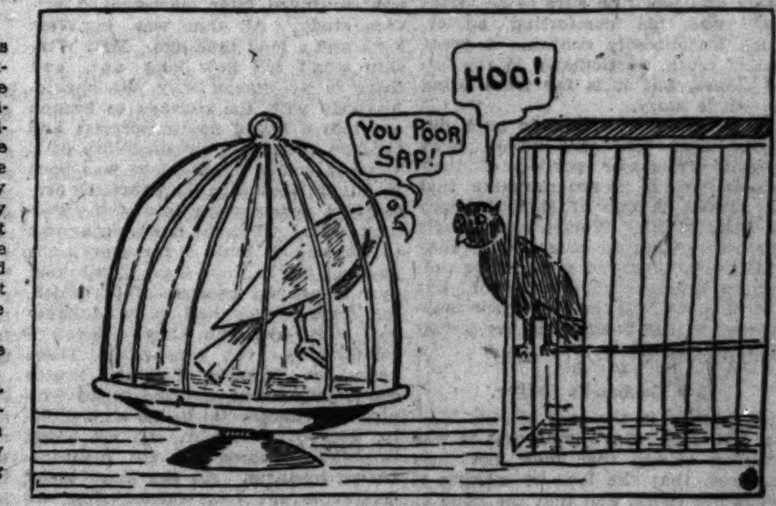
THOSE TRICKY THINGAMAJIGS



THE almost innumerable gadgets on the control board of the modern airplane show at a glance the momentary conditions of direction, speed, altitude, equilibrium, oil supply, ignition, and other factors of vital importance to aviators. But to the average layman they appear to be a hopeless maze or some new and fantastic kind of a puzzle.

Snowshoe Celebrates His Wife's Birthday

But the Pets He Buys for Her Put On a Peripatetic Petting Party



YOU POOR SAP!
HOO!

By Snowshoe Al.

YESTERDAY afternoon I was parked on the back porch, smoking a bum cigar, when down the alley comes my friend McConnell, the famous Sash and Door peddler. Mr. McConnell was driving the six cylinder coffee grinder which he insists is an automobile. The guy that made that machine certainly started out to manufacture a cement mixer, but changed his mind before the job was finished. Mac crawled out of the benzine chariot and sat down beside me. The boy was sure perspiring.

"What's the idea of loafing on the back porch?" says he.

"O, I was just sitting here thinking," says I. "You see, this morning just before my wife went down town she reminded me that today was her birthday. I was thinking maybe I should buy her something."

"It's a terrible hot day," says he, wiping some more perspiration off his map. Then he gazed at me in a most appealing manner. "Excuse me for mentioning the fact," says he, "but you smell like beer!"

"Yeh, I just drank a quart," says I, yawning. Mr. McConnell moaned in a most pitiful manner and then registered anticipation by running his tongue all over the front of his head in a wide circle.

"D'yuh know where we can buy some more?" asks this hombre.

"I do not," says I, so this bozo heaves a flock of dismal sighs and then registers despair by hanging his tongue over the front of his shirt. "Nope," I repeats, "I don't know where you can buy any, but you can have some for nothing if you go in the kitchen. There's sixteen more quart bottles in the icebox."

"Why, you @$@$@$@$@$@$@!!!" says he, crawling weakly through the door. I crawled in right behind him and we lapped up Pretzel Water until our ribs began to float. Then we slid out the back door and walked down the alley.

"What kind of a birthday present —hic—was you thinking of buying for —hic—your quarrel partner?" inquires Mr. McConnell.

"I've often heard her mention that she would like a white kitten with a pink ribbon around its neck," says me.

The Beasts and the Birds.

We went to a pet shop in the neighborhood and looked in the window, but the guy evidently only had white kittens with blue ribbons on their necks, so we moved on. We finds another animal factory about a mile further down the street. Well, folks, the proprietor of this dump was positively intoxicated. He had a bottle of home brew in each hand, and he gave three rousing cheers when we entered his wigwam.

"Have you got a white kitten with a pink ribbon on its neck?" asks me.

"No," says he, "but I've got a black kitten with a pink ribbon. I also got a white kitten which ain't got no ribbon at all."

"Neither of 'em will do," says I; "I guess I'll buy a dog instead." So I picks a flea incubator which is supposed to be a Boston terrier, although he looks more like a sick soup bone. Then we makes a great discovery. We discover we could take the pink ribbon off the black meow and put it on the white meow. We was amazed at our own cleverness; in fact, all three of us shook hands. So I also bought the white kitten.

"Gimme a bird," says Mac; "a nice, costly bird."

"Well," says the owner, "I have some nice canaries—"

"I don't want none of these little things!" howls Mr. McConnell; "slip me something nice an' big! Gimme that parrot!"

The guy stuck the parrot in a large wooden cage and handed him to Mac. Mac handed him to me.

"What's the idea?" howls me.

"Give him to your wife with my compliments," says Mac. Then he turns to the proprietor and says: "This guy is one of my best friends, an' today is his wife's birthday. Any wife of his is a friend of mine, which is the reason I bought her this parrot—"

* *

Two Little Love Birds.

"What!" yells the intoxicated owner; "is this his wife's birthday? Well, you sure are a regular guy to buy her that nice parrot! You're a real—hic—friend! I shall now enter into the—hic—spirit of things an' send the young lady—hic—a present myself!"

And damn if he didn't reach up on a shelf and bring down a goofy looking hoot owl! He stuck him in another wooden cage and handed him to me.

"I'm not sure my wife would care for a hoot owl," says me, rather dubiously. A moment later I was sorry I spoke. A hurt look appeared in the proprietor's eyes. His huge frame shook with suppressed sobs. Then he hung his head, and several large tears rolled off his chin.

"I meant well," he sniffed. "Of course, he ain't worth much, but, after all, it ain't the—hic—value of a thing —it's the spirit in which it is—hic—given. Sniff, sniff."

"I didn't mean to hurt your feelings," says I; "in fact, the wife will probably like him, because he's so different. I'll take him, but I don't known where I'm going to keep all these things—we already own a canary bird and a turtle."

"Gimme a pair of lovebirds!" yells Mr. McConnell, who was still in a delirious buying fever. "I just remembered that my girl likes lovebirds. I think she's already got a pair, but this will make a foursome."

Believe me, we had a helluva time getting all that live stock over to my apartment, but we did it! We put the parrot's cage and the hoot owl's bungalow side by side on the dining room table. We put the kitten in the bedroom and the Boston soup bone in the kitchen. Then Mr. McConnell did a foolish thing. He dumped his two lovebirds into my canary's cage. Caruso (that's our canary's name—we call him Caruso because he don't sing any more) didn't like the idea of sharing his home with this pair of affectionate poultry, and he began to act real peeved.

"Hey," says I, "what's the idea of dumping your Romeo & Juliet in with my Caruso?"

"O," says Mac, "I just wanted to see how my birds are going to look in a large cage."

"$@$@$@$@$@$@$@$@$!!!!" says the parrot.

"Did you hear him?" grins Mac. "Wasn't that cute?"

"Yeh, my wife is going to love that guy," sneers me; "he's wonderful!"

"Wonderful, wonderful!" squawks the parrot; "wonderful, wonderful!"

"HOO! HOO!" says the hoot owl. "HOO!"

"Not you, you flat faced $@$@$@!" says Mr. Parrot.

The Racketeers.

Just then we heard a terrible racket in the bedroom. It seems that the Boston flea incubator has wandered out of the kitchen and has located the kitten. The battle started under the bed and ended in the clothes closet. We arrived just in time to be too late, so we took $6 worth of cat and dumped it in the garbage can.

All this racket inspired our canary and filled him with a lust for battle, so he decided to mop up the lovebirds which now shared his kitchenette apartment. Mr. Caruso is no Walter Raleigh—he never was much on this courtesy stuff—and therefore he walloped the lady first. Little Miss Juliet folded up like an accordion and passed out. Little Romeo flopped wildly around the cage, looking for a hole marked "exit." He didn't find one, so it was just too bad! We put the two lovebirds in the garbage can with the kitten.

"Won't the janitor be surprised when he takes the lid off that can tomorrow morning?" grins Mr. McConnell.

In the meantime the Boston pup was looking around for more trouble. He found it. Little Hercules (that's the name of my pet turtle) crawled out from under the davenport and yawned. Mr. Pup barked joyfully, leaped into the air, and landed with his forepaws on the young gentleman's shell.

Now, Hercules is naturally a peaceful guy, but he hates to have anybody lean heavily on his roof, so he whirled suddenly and snapped. He can chew a flatiron into pulp. Mr. Pup squealed, tore through the back door, ran down the alley, and disappeared around a corner with Mr. Hercules still hanging gleefully to his nose.

"Well," says I, "I'm glad they decided to finish the battle some other place, because I don't believe we could have got the pup into the garbage can anyhow."

"$@$@$@$@$@$@$@!" squawks the parrot.

"HOO! HOO!" yelps the hoot owl. "HOO!"

"You flat-faced $@$@$@!" remarks Mr. Parrot.

Mr. Owl blinked his dreamy eyes several times. Then he [illegible] one of his sharp talons through the bars of Mr. Parrot's cage and slipped him a beautiful wallop in the back of the neck. Then, just to prove how versatile he was, he presented the talkative boy with a couple uppercuts and several right hooks.

"Yes, sir," grins Mr. McConnell, as he dumps the parrot in the garbage can, "the janitor is gonna get a large surprise tomorrow morning!"

* *

Who's Whose?

A few minutes later my wife came home, so we told her the hoot owl was her birthday present.

"I didn't say it was my birthday, you dumb bum," says she. "I said it was my mother's birthday."

"I must have misunderstood you," says I. "Well, [illegible] the hoot owl."

"HOO!" says the hoot owl.

"You! HOO!" says I, "you flat faced $@$@$@!"

Offer Prize for Scheme to End Street Noises

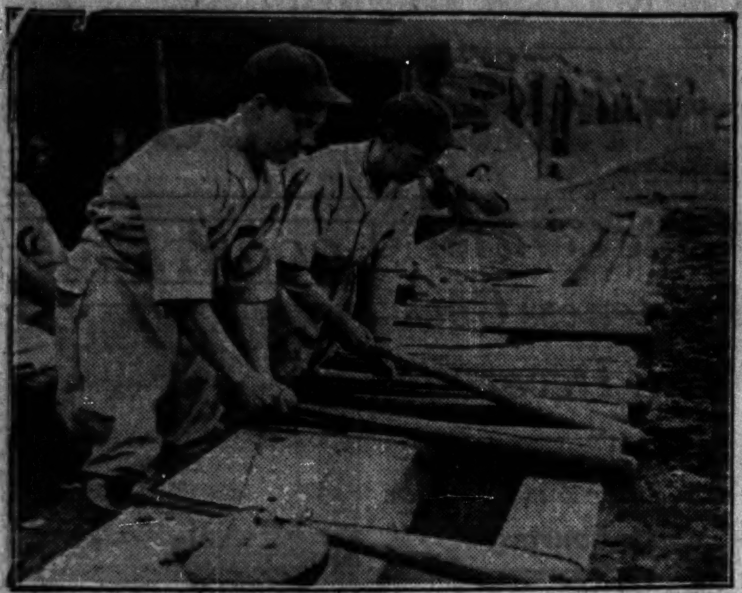
BERLIN.—(AP)—Germany is starting a [illegible] street noises by opening a competition for the best scheme to abolish the nerve-racking clatter and din of the big cities.

Naturally, street noises are mostly caused by wheeled traffic. Grinding of street cars around curves, jolting of badly sprung vehicles, banging of garbage cans on pavements, and noisy exhausts of motors are all on the blacklist, as well as street criers and the deafening chorus of motor horns generally.

All these noises are measurable by an instrument called the Backhausen sound meter. Traffic experts claim that most street accidents are attributable to the nerve-destroying racket which is making city life hideous.

Under the auspices of the Association of German Engineers a prize of $200 is offered for the best solution.

BOYDOM'S PRIZE JOB



THERE aren't many boys in Chicago who wouldn't just as soon be in Tom Lantry's shoes. Tom is bat boy for the Cubs. He's held the position for the last four years and travels with the team wherever it goes. Standing next to Tom, and arranging the "willows," is Edwin Hartig, assistant. Edwin knows the whims of the players, too.

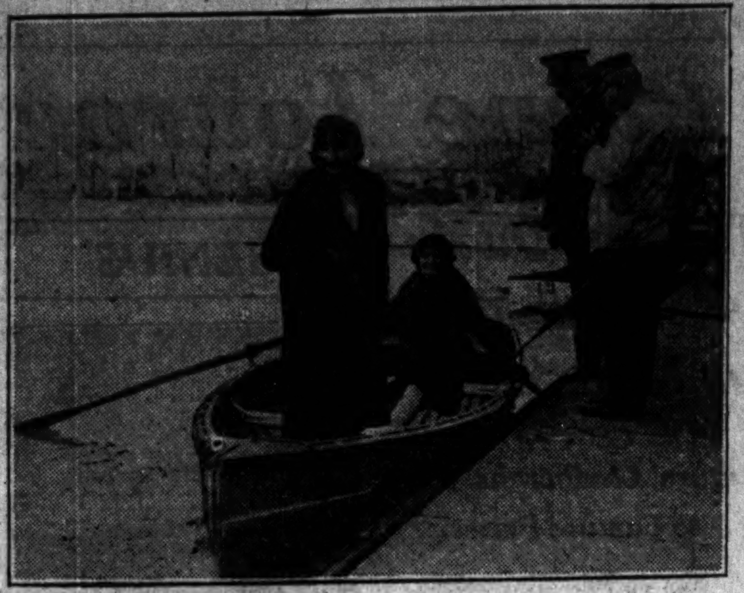
WOMAN TAKES THE HELM



THE good ship 84, with the Misses Sophie Sirkevitz and Marie Woodrich filling the roles of both crew and passenger list, is formally launched in the lagoon at Humboldt park. Sergt. BARGAINING FOR BLOOMS

MAYBE it's for that little garden in the back yard, or perhaps to place on the window sill. Anyhow the potted plants being sold along market row, Randolph and Halsted streets, appeal to the passersby. The woman at the right, going home with her arms full, believes that in summer time there's nothing like having a bit of green about.

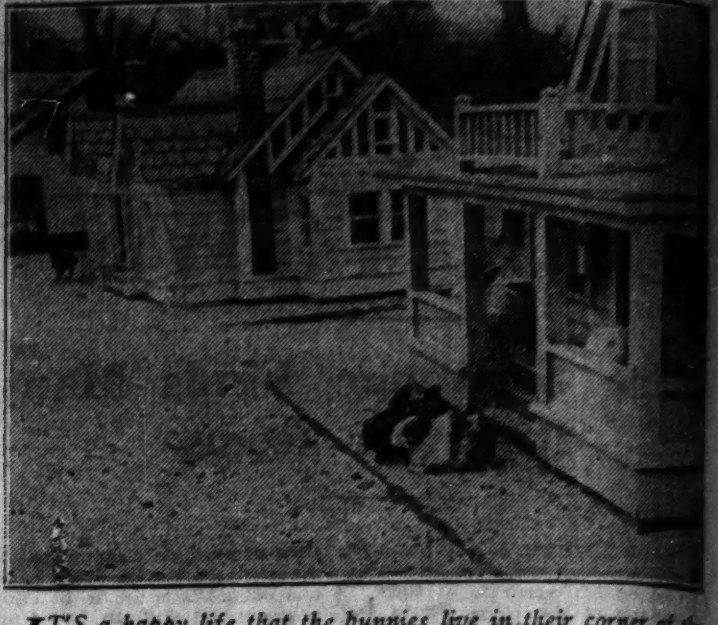
THE RABBIT VILLAGE



IT'S a happy life that the bunnies live in their corner of the zoo at Lincoln park. They have bungalow homes, a city hall, a flour mill, and a schoolhouse for their little bunnies—buildings exactly like the ones human beings erect for their use. Apparently there's nothing going on down town today, so the family in the foreground is staying at home to gossip about the neighbors.

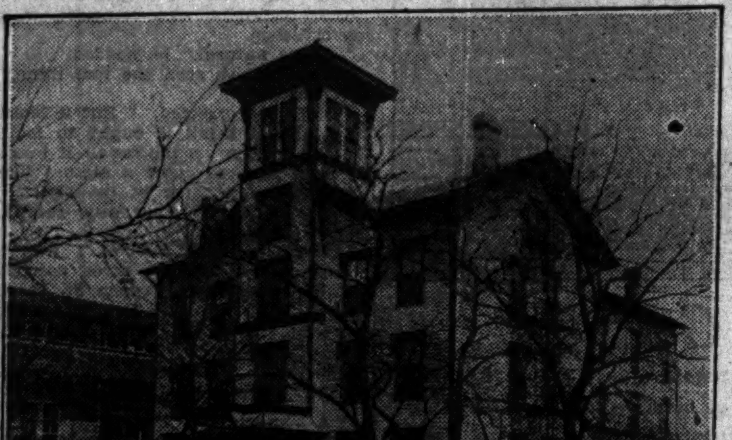
OLDEST ON THE CAMPUS



IT IS from the cupola of Old College, the first building erected on Evanston campus, that the giant candle of purple wax is to be lighted every May 16 at Northwestern university. At the same hour, alumni of the university, scattered throughout the world, will light smaller purple candles. Should Old College, erected in 1855, be torn down, the cupola and candle will be preserved for candle lighting night ceremonies.

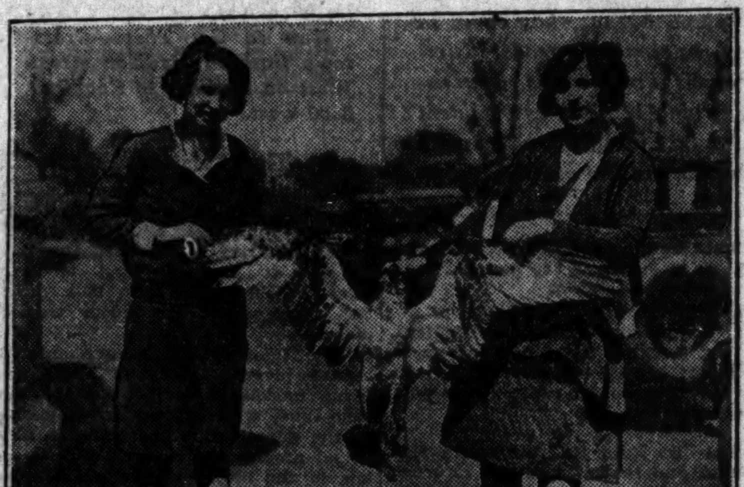
VICTIM OF SPEEDERS



THE giant hawk being held by Helen Kelly and Marion Lynch found himself supreme as he circled above the lagoon in Washington park and swooped down upon a fish. The hawk was master of the air and the fish was merely at home in the water. But in his greed to bury his catch, the hawk failed to take heed of speeding automobiles along the park drive and death came to him just as it had to the victim in his claws.

She Takes Over His Business—and Builds It Up

Wife Succeeds Her Invalid Husband at the Helm.

By Marion Reagan.

SOME day someone is going to be honest about honest poverty and expose it for the highly unsatisfactory thing it is, as anybody who has ever enjoyed it will attest. Of course, "enjoy" is the wrong verb, since there is no enjoyment in it and small comfort except for the rather dubious comfort vouchsafed by religionists who say it is the wicked that flourish like the green bay tree and that the rich man will enter the kingdom of heaven only with the greatest difficulty.

Since Biblical times a halo has surrounded indigence which not even this materialistic age has been able to dissipate. Anybody starting an idealistic enterprise, for instance, is sure to be given credit for his idealism so long as the enterprise is a failure financially. If it begins to make money, then the ideals are questioned, for, according to the popular notion, you cannot serve two masters. You can't make money and keep your ideals, too.

A man on a northbound bus the other day was trying to comfort his small daughter, who was gazing longingly at the opulence displayed along Lake Shore drive. He replied to her question of, "Gee, dad, don't you wish we were rich?" with the old one about money not being everything. He hinted that money indeed was nothing at all. "Uneasy lie the heads that wear the chic hats, my dear; be dowdy and you'll be sure to be virtuous," was his comforting advice, which undoubtedly contains a great deal of truth, particularly in the latter clause, but it is far from being the whole story.

Indeed, money is held in such disrepute that few will admit, even though the major portion of their time is spent in its accumulation, that its pursuit is one of their primary interests in life. Women particularly shy before such an accusation. They will give a thousand reasons for taking up this or that occupation, but almost never will they say their main interest in the business is the money it brings them.

Her Husband's Helper.

But not so in the case of Mrs. Marion Winship. She admits that it was wanting money that took her into business, that the love of making it keeps her there, and that the hope of making a great deal some day eggs her on. She is not numbered among the city's richest women, nor even among the near-rich. She lives in an unpretentious apartment at 447 Fullerton parkway. The car she drives is not of the de luxe class, but, considering that she has been in business only three years and that in those three years she has had to be head of the house as well as of the business and nurse to an invalid husband, her present prosperity is not to be sneezed at. She is in the manufacturing business, making cabinets out of sheet metal.

Married at 17, she had no training either in business or in any profession before she became Mrs. Winship. The wedding bells, as a matter of fact, were rung in while the school bells were still clanging, and the high school education which Cupid ruined was continued after marriage by private study. All that was in New York and a long time ago. Mrs. Winship won't tell how long ago, and there is no reason why she should. Anybody with the courage to branch out into a brand new enterprise and take on the entire responsibility of it alone is young whether she was born in the nineteenth or the twentieth century. A near enough date of the wedding is 1907, when the newlyweds came to Chicago to build a fortune in the western city. They have lived here ever since, but because of ill health, the fortune they had in mind never got built, although they enjoyed a comfortable, even prosperity. Three years ago, Francis Winship's health completely failed and the bread winning was plainly up to his wife. Boldly, without a tremor, she set about establishing herself in the manufacturing business. All she knew about commerce she had learned from cooperating with her husband in his undertakings.

And on this point she has a word to say to wives. It is, that every woman should take an active interest in her husband's affairs, not only because she never knows when accident is going to throw her into his place, but because such an interest makes for greater congeniality.

Through long years of battling with illness, she has a proper appreciation of the importance of health. Like Carlyle, she realizes that "the healthy know not of their health, but only the sick." Through caring for her husband in all the years of his illness she knows what a fragile thing health is and that on it everything else in life largely depends. She has learned also how necessary it is to have money and what a good thing in itself money is.

Just for Today.

Mrs. Winship is a tall, rather stoutish woman with the well known school girl complexion. Her hazel eyes sparkle when she smiles and have a fascinating way of changing color as the light strikes them. Her hair is a deep, dark brown, streaked with gray. She talks with the barest trace of an Eastern accent, and because her voice is low and resonant it is pleasing to listen to her. It is especially pleasing, and interesting, to hear her tell how she made a success of manufacturing when so many others have failed.

"If I have succeeded in my venture it is first because I have worked hard and second because of my philosophy of life which is entirely contained in the old hymn, 'Just for Today.' I try not to think beyond tomorrow unless I have to. Each day I start out with a definite plan of what I must accomplish that particular day. I don't allow myself to think of yesterday and what I should have done then or what I might do next week. It is today only that counts, and if you make each day's work right the total is bound to add up on the credit side in the long run."

She rides horseback for exercise and keeps house for diversion, but nine-tenths of her time is spent in hunting up new business.

SUCCESS

Mrs. Marion Winship, who "succeeded," in more ways than one, when her husband was taken ill and she was forced to take over his manufacturing business. And she did it without previous training in trade or profession.

Turk Officials Must Marry Native Women

ANGORA, Turkey.—(AP)—The Turkish government prohibits marriage of ambassadors or high government officials to foreign wives. The breaking of this rule entails dismissal, as in the recent case of a prominent officer of the aviation corps here who return from a mission abroad with a German mate. Infringement of the law has been winked at, however, in cases where the foreign wives are wealthy.

500 Boys on Tiptoe for Air Contest Today

Thrillers Are Due in Plane Tourney Finals.

ited to these tiny planes. From hand launching, such as will be the case in today's competition, a number of the machines have remained in the air for more than three minutes. The record is 3 minutes 28 2-10 seconds and is held by Irving Johnson of the Illinois Model Aero club. Johnson will compete in today's events in the senior class.

Many of the entrants today are boys from the parks and playgrounds of the city. The South Parks of Chicago have sponsored airplane building and air tournaments for the last four years. This system will have more than 150 boys in the competition. The board of education playgrounds adopted the model building three months ago when the All-Chicago tournament sponsored by THE TRIBUNE was announced, and since that time much work in this line has been accomplished, with the result that about 100 of the entrants in today's meet will be board of education playground boys.

When the playgrounds took up model building, directors at the various grounds accepted an invitation from the south parks to follow their plan of building planes, and B. C. Friedman, director of handicraft in the south parks, and V. K. Brown, superintendent of recreation, aided the city workers in organization work and getting the boys started in building planes.

Starts at 10 a. m.

Interest in this model building has increased in the playgrounds to such an extent that Nicholas Malloy, assistant director of the board of education system, has announced that model building now will be a part of the regular activities. Even the girls of the playgrounds want to build models, Mr. Malloy said, and classes for them may be started.

High schools of the city also will be represented in the indoor meet. Harrison, Tilden Tech, Lane Tech, and Crane have entries in the meet, while the Illinois Model Aero club has several boys entered.

Competition in today's event will start at 10 a. m. The armory will be open until 5 o'clock for competition and a corps of officials will be on hand all day to run off the meet.

No admission is charged. The public is invited to attend. All expenses are borne by THE TRIBUNE.

SENTENCE SERMONS

Your Work—

- —Is your opportunity to go into partnership with God.
- —Is always your best recommendation.
- —Will never seem easy unless you love it.
- —Will be used by God to estimate your character.
- —Will be present with you in the judgment day.
- —Can never be improved with camouflage.
- —Can never be successfully done by some one else.

It Does Not Pay—

- —To wear good clothes and have poor credit.
- —To spend more time on your face than on your head.
- —To put all your goods into the show window.
- —To give your enemies landing fields for their suspicions.
- —To try to make a religion out of the things you do not believe.
- —To expect to be treated like a lady if you are trying to act like a man.
- —To ask your friend to keep your secrets if you cannot keep them yourself.

Opportunity Knocks—

- —At the door of the man who is ready to welcome work.
- —Oftenest at the door of the man who is busy preparing to meet her.
- —At the door, but it opens from the inside.
- —But few men hear her if they are cursing their luck.
- —Patiently at the door of many a man who is knocking her.
- —But some people are too busy wailing over their defeats to hear.
- —At every man's door, but she seldom appears the same at any two doors.

One Out of Seven German Unions Goes onto Rocks

BERLIN.—(AP)—Every seventh German marriage ends in the divorce court, according to latest statistics. Up to the war it was one in 200, since when divorce figures have risen rapidly, mostly as a consequence of ill assorted "war" matings.

The marriage market, however, is busier than ever, and matrimonial knots are tied light heartedly. Berlin civil registry offices were so overrun between Easter and Whitsun with people anxious to get married that there was a delay of seven weeks for the necessary documents to be made out.

The average ages of the partners are also lower. Before the war it was 30 for the bridegroom and 24 for the bride; now it is 27 and 22, respectively, although there are many boy and girl marriages also. Cases of youths of 18 wedding girls of 15 are not uncommon.

The American "companionate" marriage idea was hotly discussed some time ago. Some writers were in favor of giving it a fair tryout, but there was much criticism on the part of the religious section of the community.

Bolivian Troops Have Shoes but Go Barefoot

LA PAZ, Bolivia.—(AP)—Shoe leather is not wasted when the Bolivian troops go on the march. The troopers remove their shoes and carry them in their belts. Some go barefoot; others use sandals. The Bolivian army is made up almost entirely of Indians, who are not accustomed to footgear.

MISSED HIS ANNIVERSARY.

Miss H—— had promised her 6 year old son a birthday party, but when the time came she told him he would have to wait because she was too busy to attend to it. The next week she was quite ill, so the party had to be postponed again. The following week the unfortunate little fellow came in one morning looking rather tearful, and said: "Please mother, can't I be born today."

Despite the superior results the price is most reasonable.

LAST OF HIS TRIBE

JOSEPH HAND has come to dust off the wooden Indian which has stood in front of the cigar store at 1526 North Clark street since 1886. There was a time when the symbol was a common sight, but in late years it has vanished from American life, along with its living brethren. MARKING the site at Robey street and the drainage canal where the French explorers spent the winter of 1674-75, stands the Marquette-Joliet cross. This is the fourth cross to be erected on the spot. ATTRACTING much attention in its open air cage at the corner of Sangamon and Ohio streets lives the American eagle belonging to the Rev. Stephen A. Bubacz. For reasons too numerous to mention, the Blacksmiths' Journal has removed from Detroit to our town, and Robert Falconer, the veteran horseshoer of 1047 West Chicago avenue, has renounced the anvil for the pen to become its editor. The consoling thought, as we formally welcome Bob to the fourth estate fold, is that he won't mind the kicks, he being pretty well used to them.

Modern Girl Is Superior to Old, Judge's Decree

But Men of Butler Argue to the Contrary.

"RESOLVED, that the modern girl is superior to the girl of fifty years ago," was the subject of a debate between representatives of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. of Butler university. "Ma" Ferguson and "Peaches" Browning were cited as arguments. The men of Butler favored the old-fashioned girl who crocheted by the fireside. The girls won the judges' decision.

SAFE FROM TRAFFIC

THE bicycle track in Humboldt park is one place these days where a boy can pedal to his heart's content without danger of being run down by higher powered vehicles. Shoppers' Service Tales

Several Services.

Some three weeks ago I bought a pair of shoes. After one week's wear I thought the shoes not so comfortable as they had been, but as I could not afford to throw them away, I continued wearing them. Finally, in great discomfort, I went to the store where I purchased them, and asked if anything could be done for me. A polite floorman ushered me to a seat, saying a Mr. A. would take care of me.

On hearing what my complaint was Mr. A. promptly measured my foot, and put on another pair of shoes. I asked if they would allow me anything at all on the other pair, whereupon I was informed it was an even exchange. I was surprised, and pleased, of course. Who would not be? And so I walked out shod in new comfort. But after walking around the block a few times, I realized that despite another fit, something was not just right, and thought it took much courage, I again went back to the store. Instead of seeing disgust or ill humor registered on the face of the man who had just waited on me, I saw that he was ready to give me attention in the same courteous manner as before. Another pair was put on my feet, and when I asked to have a heel pad put in, it was done. When I asked what I owed, I surely thought I would have to pay the price of a new pair, plus extras. But the answer was as before—nothing. I sat stunned for a moment, and again asked the price—this time opening my purse. Again the same answer—nothing.

I could find no words to express my thanks. Never have I met with such courtesy. I am still wondering if it can be true, but on looking down at my feet there are the new shoes.

At no time did I expect to get something for nothing, and I cannot understand how any firm can afford to give it. Suffice it to say, I shall always be thankful for this service, and refer others to this store. F. J.

Coat Replaced.

I entered a leading men's store in the loop three years ago and bought a winter overcoat for $50. A year's wear proved disastrous; cuffs and collars were a sight, and pockets were badly worn.

I took the coat back, complained to the head clerk who, much to my surprise, within a half hour's time, saw that I had a brand new garment!

And what a coat, this time! I have worn it to work every day through two of Chicago's winters and it will easily see me through another.

The store has my constant patronage and that of many friends through the splendid consideration given me.

Magic Card for Politeness Goes to a Decorator

North Sider Wins $50 for His Courtesy.

heaven. They differed a bit, but I could see that each had ideas that sustained them. They both had thought a good deal on the subject, evidently.

You ought to have a little shellac to work over that spot," the decorator suggested.

I thought the artist might resent the suggestion, but their idea about the shellac was shared in common. A couple of customers came in, and the decorator and I went back into the street.

"Were you talking about heaven hereafter or here below?" I asked him.

"Both," he replied. "The material world don't mean anything. Take your own life—when you look back on it, isn't it just a dream?"

"It's sort of a nightmare," I said. He tried to explain to me his philosophy and I tried to follow him. Sometimes you don't care to hear another expound his theories. In this instance I found myself deeply interested. There was no effort on the fellow's part to force his ideas upon me. With tact and sincerity he sought to answer my questions.

"I suppose I ought to be on my way," he said, finally. "I left home this morning, looking for a job. I'm on my way to see a contractor down in Irving Park boulevard. Sow the fellow using paint and had to stop. I'm glad to have met you."

By way of introduction, he took his union card from his pocket—Roy Featheringill.

"An odd name," I commented.

"Only three of us in Chicago," he replied.

"My job is a rather strange one and often difficult," I explained. "I'm The Politeness Reporter. I've been looking for some person who would take as much interest in me as he did in himself so I could give him $50."

* *

A Lost Opportunity.

"And you haven't found any one?" he asked.

"Not yet today," I said. "Because, you see, I didn't tell him or her in advance about the $50. There was a girl at the news stand, for instance. I said as nicely as I could; 'Do you sell all this stack of magazines every week?' And she said, 'Do you suppose we'd have them here if we didn't?' The sharp tone in which she came back made me feel as if I had asked a foolish question. That was the way she wanted me to feel, and what I had wanted to do was give her $50."

"Of course, you've got to be honest with your award," mused the interior decorator. "Honesty means spiritual power and peace—and peace is about everything."

"Yet," I said, "you see people succeed who aren't honest."

"They only seem to."

I thought that over for a moment. Then I said: "Do you think you'll get that job down on Irving Park boulevard?"

"Don't know," he replied. "I told my wife when I left home this morning that I'd do the best I could and things would come out all right. There's been so many demands that, being out of a job and looking for one sort of makes a fellow feel low."

"It's a mean feeling," I agreed.

The Card Appears.

Walking together along Broadway, we had reached the windows of a florist where Memorial day plants and flowers were on display.

"Anyhow, you got back from France all right," I commented. "I suppose, though, you left a good many of your outfit behind."

"We were at St Mihiel and in the Argonne," he answered. "On two fronts."

"How long were you over there?"

"Two years. With the 28th engineers."

"And now," I said, "Memorial day has come around again."

"It'll be my thirty-second."

"Well, I wish you luck in landing that job," I said. "But in the event you don't you won't be having a blue homecoming tonight. Not with the magic card in your possession."

He paused and turned to look at me.

"You don't know," he said, soberly, "how many places I've got for using $50."

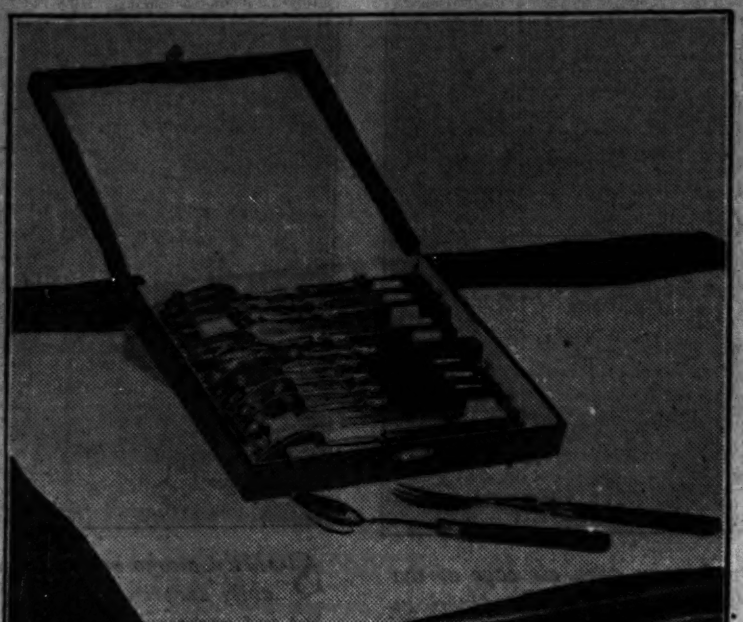
"All I know," I nodded, "is that you were the one the magic card was looking for."

His face lighted up as he took the card.

"It's a great blessing," he assured me, reverently. "I told my wife when I left home we'd just have to take whatever came. . . . I think I'll go somewhere and call her up."

Fashions and Novelties

Odds and Ends from the Shopping Centers



A rather amusing way to serve dessert is with these spoons and forks of French gilt with colored handles. The colors can be had to match or contrast with the dishes. They are especially effective with crystal plates.

Knives and forks with the same colored handles may be used for fruit when it is served for dessert—which is not done often enough—and the stains of the juice will not make them black.

A coat of soft tan woolen, trimmed with beige fox, and a close fitting felt hat to match. Chic for all daytime wear.

Parliament in Iceland Nearly 1,000 Years Old

REYKJAVIK, Iceland.—(AP)—The "mother of parliaments" is generally understood to be the English parliament, but if age counts the palm goes to the Icelandic alting, which is to celebrate its tenth centenary in 1930.

The alting celebration will be of a national character. Many families in Iceland can trace their ancestors back to the first legislators of the Saga isle. The vikings who settled there understood the necessity of law and order, and it was from Iceland that the so-called Norse law went to Scotland.

The alting was instituted in 930 on the plain of Thingvalla, and the story of the Ting is being written by Benedict Sveinsson, the president of the lower house. He is assisted by a bevy of historians appointed by the government.

The festivities in connection with the jubilee will be held on the historic spot at Thingvalla, a well nigh ideal setting, giving the visitors a view of the beautiful scenery of Iceland.

A large foreign invasion is expected on this occasion. Icelandic-Americans will form a great body of these visitors. Many thousands are living in the United States and in Canada and style themselves "West-Icelanders."

At a Dollar Sale.

Recently a department store advertised a dollar sale. I got there early and picked up a dark blue serge Peter Pan dress marked $5.95, a light blue jersey dress trimmed with black velvet marked $5.95, one rose jersey blouse and one apple green jersey blouse marked at $3.50 each. All were size 14 and not soiled. I got them for $1 each—$18.90 worth of goods for $4. I'll say that was some bargain.

A Lucky Find.

When furnishing my summer cottage, I went to a second hand store and there found a chest of four drawers that I could use to great advantage in one of the bedrooms. The price was $1.50.

After getting it home the next day I set about to clean it up before I painted it. I pulled out one of the lower drawers and was wiping it out when I noticed the bottom part had slightly warped away from the back of the drawer, leaving quite a long crack. Seeing a tiny piece of metal I proceeded to pry it out.

Imagine my surprise on finding it to be a $2.50 gold piece.

I think I got a bargain, don't you?

G. F. B.

An Antique.

While attending a rummage sale I came across a hand hammered copper pitcher, three pint size. It appealed to my artistic taste, and I bought it for 25 cents.

When passing an interior decorator's and art shop, I showed my find. A ten dollar bill was promptly paid me for it.

I later say it with antiques displayed in the window of the shop.

R. Z.

A Dress at a Cut Rate.

Two years ago late in the spring I happened to come across a sale of sample dresses at $10. Only one in the lot interested me—a beautiful blue-violet all wool model. I knew it to be an unusual opportunity so I bought it in spite of the fact that the cool weather was almost over.

I certainly did feel pleased when my sister arrived from New York wearing the same style in black. She was telling me how much she liked it and that she had only paid $32.75 for it. But she had made her purchase early in the season.

Mine has been slightly altered since and is still admired. This surely was a good buy. And at a saving of $20.75.

Pretty Neat Book Mark!

One day strolling along the street I saw a little second hand book shop with the friendly sign over the door, "Come in and browse awhile." I went in and in my browsing found a book that struck my fancy. I paid the man 75 cents for it and went home.

Imagine my surprise on opening it to find a $5 bill the last reader had used for a book mark, I suppose.

Historic Havana Church Must Pay a Museum Tax

HAVANA, Cuba.—(AP)—The Havana city government has decreed that Columbus cathedral, once the reputed resting place of the bones of Christopher Columbus, shall be known on city tax records as a museum.

Mecca of the majority of tourists, the famous cathedral, situated in old Havana and now surrounded by modern business life, passes from the roster of houses of worship because, officials say, a charge has been made to all who go within its ancient walls.

Under the Cuban law admission fees automatically classify properties as amusement places or museums. Thus Columbus cathedral must stand its share of community expense by paying a fee to the civil government.

Denials have been entered by the bishop of the church, who claims all fees go to guides and not to the church, but Havana is firm, and the church will be known as a museum.

Indianapolis Auto Race on Air Wednesday

Thirty-five Stations to Take Broadcast.

For the first time in its history, the Indianapolis motor speed classic on Memorial day, next Wednesday, will be broadcast over a national network. Arrangements have been made to broadcast an eye-witness story of the last hour of the race and the thrilling finish. Graham McNamee, veteran N. B. C. announcer, will be at the microphone for the motor race broadcast, and thirty-five radio stations will be included in the race broadcast group, according to plans.

The finish of the race is expected to go on the air at approximately 3:10 p. m., Chicago daylight saving time. W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, will be one of the stations on the chain.

Famous Drivers to Race.

The entries in the sixteenth annual international sweepstakes, to give the race its full title, include Peter de Paolo, holder of the track record; Cliff Durant, Jimmy Hill, Ira Hall, Cliff Woodbury, Babe Stapp, George Souders and other stars of the motor racing world. Marmon, Duesenberg, Stutz, Cozette, Miller, Green, and Bugatti are among the famous makes of racing cars to be on the track.

There are said to be two important features to the race this year. One is the keen rivalry between the drivers of front wheel drive cars, and the men with the more conventional rear wheel drive speedsters.

Expect New Record.

The existing speed record, an average of 101.13 miles per hour for the five hundred miles, is expected to be shattered this year, according to the race executives. Speed trials of cars already entered in the race indicate greater speed than ever before, the executives said. Pete de Paolo, who drives this year, holds the present record, made in 1925 in a Duesenberg.

The Indianapolis track is two and a half miles around. The announcer will be stationed at a high point where he can watch the entire course and from there will describe the race. At the finish of the classic he will move down to the finish line and will give to the world the names of the drivers as fast as they pass the finish line.

W-G-N Takes Listeners Back to Gettysburg on Memorial Day

As a feature of its Memorial day program, W-G-N is to present a special half hour program, with its sequence laid in civil war days, that will graphically portray three famous incidents of the time, the battle of Gettysburg, Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and the surrender of Lee at Appomattox.

"Atmospheric" music and continuity will be blended into a dramatic thirty minutes that will bring back every detail of these three scenes. While the announcer unfolds the story, alive with America's most thrilling moments, Lincoln will again walk somberly to the rostrum on Gettysburg battle field, listeners will thrill as Pickett's men charge across Cemetery Ridge, and Grant, twisting a cigar endlessly between his teeth, hands back Robert E. Lee's sword.

Special music for this program, tunes from the civil war days, and melodies the boys in blue hummed along the line of march, are being brought out of oblivion by Henry Selinger, program director of W-G-N, and Alfred G. Wathall, the station's arranger. They are being fitted into the continuity, so that the music will carry the drama of each incident related to its highest peak.

G. A. R. Veterans Will Be Guests Tonight at Sunday Evening Club

Veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, who, for twenty-one years, have been guests of honor of the Sunday Evening club's Decoration day service, will be present at the Orchestra hall service tonight, the last program of the present season of the club, although as one of the staunch old commanders expressed it, "we are few in number and becoming feeble." The loyal band hopes, however, that listeners over WMAQ, who broadcast the club, will hear a few strains of "Dixie" from the remnants of the fife and drum corps of the boys of '61.

Benjamin F. Affleck, president of the Union League club, and representatives of the American Legion, Advertising post, will be on the program. Fred B. Smith, who has been a key man in many important religious and patriotic movements since his outstanding success with the men and religion forward movement in 1911, will be the speaker on the subject, "Fundamental Patriotism."

Radio Station Is Almost Stumped by Japanese Anthem

Denver, Colo., May 26.—(AP)—Station KOA dared the world to name a musical selection its staff could not play. The world took the dare—and almost won.

A program was given as a "You can't stump us" feature with the promise that the 70 artists in the studio would sing or play any musical composition the listeners asked. But one of the first requests was for the national anthem of Japan. The 70 artists were stumped.

Outside help finally was sought, and F. H. Talbot, KOA manager, appealed to his audience. Twenty minutes before the four hour program was to end two Japanese radio fans appeared and fulfilled the request.

Inside the Loud Speaker

BY QUIN A. RYAN.

In the spring the young announcer's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of composing verses. Number one:

THE GOLFING PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

With frowning eye and warning
I have taught my familee
That my golfing tools and baggage
Are invaluable to me.
That the poodle may dissever
All the oriental rugs,
Or the guests may play at soccer
With the bric-a-brac and jugs;
They are free to wreak destruction
In the manner all their own
On the chattels, house, and garden—
But to let my clubs alone!

I've a sassy, classy brassie
Which you couldn't make me trade,
And a flashy, dashy mashie—
Ah, the hazards it has played!
I possess a meaty midiron
And a syncopating spoon,
Plus a dapper, dandy driver
That is like a day in June.
But that was ere the winter
Had descended o'er the lea.
It stalked upon my home, and, O!
The difference to me!

For the clubs I found this morning
Were at rest beneath a trunk,
After all my prim precautions
Just a mellow mound o' junk!
I always lose in winter
My olden bag of tricks,
My stance and grip and putting—
And now I've lost my sticks!
So I must hie and find me
New driver, cleek, and swing,
New follow-through and mashie—
In fact, new everything!

So sings the radio muse!
Now, then, let's have another:

THE LITTLE BROWN PIPE.

The little brown pipe is covered with dust,
But tempting and true it lies;
And the little tin package is red with rust,
And its contents withers and dries.
Time was when the little brown pipe was strong
And tobacco befogged the air;
And that was the time that I thought it wrong,
And kissed them and put them there.

Ah, I'd the aroma of Indic isles
And the breath of the sultan's urn,
And I basked in the glow of the lady's smiles—
But even tobacco worms turn.
O, the years are many, the years are long
Since they vanished in airy—No!
How vapid and vacant my sobbing song!
'Twas only a week ago!

And then there is that racket of getting up in the morning:

THE UP-AND-AT-'EM RISER.

A toast to the spirited riser,
Who carols the coming of dawn,
Who hops out of bed like a geyser
And gambols about on the lawn,
Who somersaults into the office
Abounding in pepper and mirth,
Who yodels a lay at the break of the day—
I think he's the salt of the earth!
(In a pig's eye, I do!)

With early matutinal vigor,
With morning alertness and vim,
With chipper and flourishing figure,
The world is a marble to him.
His zest to be up with the robins,
His 8 o'clock bustle and shove,
His gayety spry and the glint in his eye
Are the elements in him I love!
(Lykelle I do!)

Now me—I arise in a coma;
At breakfast I'm quite a debris.
I grope and depart from my home a
Compassionate figure to see.
It's not until nearly eleven
My energy gets under way—
So I love to 'have 'round a gazook with a bound
And a zest at the start of the day!
(Grrr! Let me at him!)

Richard Rodgers, Young Composer, on Air Tomorrow

Richard Rodgers, the twenty-six year old genius of musical comedy composition, assisted by an unusual group of vocal and instrumental artists, will be presented to the radio audience tomorrow night when the family party program will be devoted to the favorite songs of his most popular productions, including "Poor Little Ritz Girl," "Dearest Enemy," "Girl Friend," "Peggy Ann," "A Connecticut Yankee," "She's My Baby," and "Present Arms." W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, will carry the program.

The instrumental features will be furnished by Goldman's band, with Edwin Franko Goldman in charge, and by a combined concert, dance and novelty orchestra under the direction of Roderic Graham and Joe Green. Lewis James, tenor, and Olive Kline, famous soprano, who made her first appearance on the radio a week ago, will be the soloists.

Mr. Rodgers was born in New York City in 1902, and since his early childhood has made a study of music. He graduated from Columbia university in 1923. While at Columbia he wrote the score for two of the "Varsity Shows," the only freshman to achieve this record.

Rodgers' first Broadway production, "Poor Little Ritz Girl," was produced when he was only seventeen. His activities for the professional stage then ceased until 1925, when he wrote the first "Garrick Gaieties."

W-G-N to Broadcast Gen. Robert E. Lee Program on Tuesday

With its program devoted to a dramatization of events in the life of Robert E. Lee, W-G-N will present a program from New York Tuesday night which will be in the nature of a tribute to the great southern commander.

The famous scene at Appomattox, between Lee and Grant; the day that Lee, refusing to accept the command of the federal armies, turned his face toward his native state of Virginia, and other incidents in the career of the south's greatest figure, will be portrayed.

Radio Will Keep Dirigible Italia in Touch with World

KINGS BAY, Spitzenbergen, May 26—(AP)—While the Italian dirigible Italia cruises this summer in the arctic seeking to add to man's knowledge of polar geography wireless instruments will keep its crew in touch with the supply ship, the Citta di Milano, and thus in contact with Rome.

The supply vessel has a powerful wireless outfit which can transmit directly to a sister station in Rome near the Basilica of St. Paul's-without-the-Walls.

There will be no lack of amusement aboard the Citta di Milano, for music, including concerts and opera, will be played in Italy especially for the ship's crew and broadcast to the vessel.

Allen McQuhae to Give First of New Kent Series Tonight

Allen McQuhae, the Irish tenor who sang the summer series of Atwater Kent concerts two years ago, will broadcast the first of his summer concerts under the same auspices tonight over W-G-N, The Chicago Tribune station on the Drake hotel.

Believing that a radio concert should be arranged with the broadest popular appeal, Mr. McQuhae will sing the lilting lyrics and ballads for which he is noted, including "Absent," "Roses of Picardy," "Little Mary Cassidy," "Tomorrow," "Trees," "I Wonder," and "Molly Brannigan."

"Song writers have unfortunately come under the spell of the dance enthusiasts," he said. "The jazz mad crowd of youngsters throughout the country, forgetting that the great music loving population of America is middle aged.

"The steady increase in radio concerts by the world's greatest opera and concert stars, and the constant improvement in broadcasting generally are marking a swing back to the kind of songs that has gone down through the ages, the old folk songs ballads, and popular lyrics."

Plan Extensive Use of Radio in 3 Ocean Flights

Navy Stations to Stand By to Give Aid.

Washington, D. C., May 26.—(AP)—Leaders in European and American aeronautics are becoming convinced that radio is an almost indispensable safeguard in transoceanic flying.

Preparations are being made to utilize all available radio facilities in three proposed flights over the Atlantic by French, English and Spanish aviators. Commander de Fregate Sable, French naval attaché here, is making arrangements with the navy for extensive communication with the French flying boat on its dash from the Azores to New York this month.

Navy to Stand By.

Piloted by Capt. Paris of the French navy, the ship will carry a relief pilot, a radio operator and complete wireless equipment with a range of 800 to 1,000 miles. The French aviation officials consider radio direction finding and weather reports a factor of the utmost importance in long distance flights, Commander Sable says. The flying boat, painted white with huge black seagulls on each side, will be easy to identify, he said.

All radio traffic and compass stations of the navy on the Atlantic coast will be instructed to stand ready to provide the plane with weather reports and other information. During the first ten minutes of each hour the radio compass stations will be devoted exclusively to the service of the flying boat. Operating on 600 meters, these stations will listen for messages, take bearings on the plane and furnish positions to the plane.

R. C. A. to Coöperate.

The weather bureau is planning to give all necessary data and the navy has requested ship and shore stations of the Radio Corporation of America to coöperate.

Navy station commanders have been notified to give similar service to Capt. Frank T. Courtney in his flight from southern England to Halifax. His flying boat will be equipped with a Marconi sending and receiving set operating on 600 meters, and he may carry a direction finder with a range of from 550 to 1,550 meters.

The Spanish hydroplane, which will attempt to hop across the Atlantic in a globe circling flight, will be equipped with radio telegraph, telephone, and compass. The Spanish flyers plan to start late in August.

Treat Man by Radio on Long Hospital Trip

Washington, D. C., May 26.—(AP)—Another instance of the value of radio in transmitting medical advice for persons in isolated regions is reported from northern Alaska.

Suffering from cardiac asthma, a lighthouse keeper at Scotch Gap was unable to receive medical attention at his post. His condition was serious and it was considered advisable to remove him to the hospital at Ketchikan as a patient of the public health service. During the week's journey from the lighthouse to the hospital, advice for treatment of the patient was broadcast by the public health service doctor at the hospital to the attendant with the lighthouse keeper.

Lessons in Auction Bridge

BY R. M. ROGERS

ARTICLE 10—OVERBIDDING.

R. M. ROGERS.

The holding necessary for an original bid of one has been given and it has also been stated that all bids of one are for information. It can be added that all bids of one subsequent to an original bid of one should impart the same definite information that is shown by the original bid of one.

A bid of one in the third position or a bid of one fourth hand, first and second hands having passed, requires greater strength than a bid of one by first or second hand with this specific exception—to wit: If first hand or second hand makes a bid the partner of the bidder being third or fourth hand as the case may be, does not require for a bid of one the strength required of that position because the partner has already shown by his bid that he possesses a number of tricks that otherwise would have to be assumed.

For example, when first hand bids, he assumes that his partner has three tricks in support of his bid although he doesn't know it. If first hand passes and second hand also, third hand in making a bid must assume that his partner, first hand, has only two tricks. If however, first hand has made a bid, we'll say of one club and third hand can make a bid of one heart, it isn't necessary for third hand to have five tricks in order to be conventional because he knows from the first hand bid that the latter must have three tricks, possibly more in support, of his bid of one heart because first hand has said by his original bid that he had two quick tricks. As first hand will now be the supporting partner, his two quick tricks are to be estimated as four actual tricks in the play of the hand so that third hand can bid with only four tricks instead of the conventional five that he would be required to possess if first hand had passed.

The science of bidding requires that each partner shall pursue the bidding on the basis of the actual number of tricks that can be counted as held by himself and partner and not on how many cards he holds in the suit that is being bid.

When it becomes necessary for a player to bid two over a preceding bid, it must generally be considered a defensive bid and indicates only three tricks in the bidder's hand. These three tricks may be in a six card suit without any quick tricks in the hand or it may be in a five card suit with one and a half quick tricks in the hand, and this is something the partner must keep in mind, particularly if he is going to assist the bid. In bidding and supporting partner's bid, always stick to the number of tricks shown, unless you are bidding for a penalty, which should not be sought except on a rubber game, where, if opponents can go game, they could secure a bonus that would be heavier than the loss you would incur by overbidding. It is often possible to determine from the bidding at the table that an opponent cannot go game, and if so, it is much better bridge to prevent this than to overbid your own hand.

Never overlook that a bid of two over a no trump on the right is not a defensive bid but shows five tricks in the hand or one more than would be required for an original bid, and the player who hasn't five tricks should pass. Neither should it be overlooked that if fourth hand makes a bid over a no trump on his left, the purpose of it is not a request for support by his partner but only to indicate that if the no trump bidder proceeds, fourth hand wants his partner to lead to him the suit he has bid.

There is perhaps no better place than right here to call attention to the average distribution of the suits in making up a hand of thirteen cards. A small percentage of the hand say about 8 per cent are what are known as "freaks," that is with one or two singletons or void of a suit. A little over 20 per cent of the hands consist of two five card suits or three four card suits or a six card suit. About 70 per cent of the hands fall under the designation of normal hands and consist of:

A—Two four card suits, a two and three card suit.

B—One five card suit, one four card suit with two two card suits.

C—One five card suit with two three card suits and one two card suit.

D—A four three three three distribution.

A and C are usually no trump bids if anything, while B is fitted for a suit bid.

A study of these distributions will show that normal side suits of a bidder will permit his trumping the third round unless he hold a "freak" which would permit trumping the second round and frequently the first round. Against "freak" suit bids the opponent's play must be to make the bidder open the side suits himself or he will find himself setting up tricks in the dummy.

Below is given an illustration of progressive bidding, and the proper opening lead.

The Bidding.

P.	P.

West opens the K of clubs and north and south can make only nine tricks.

A good many people would think that south ought to open the bidding by bidding the spade suit, but south has not the two quick tricks necessary to make a truthful bid of one, nor the ace, king, queen at the top to make a truthful bid of two, and to make a bid of three is a hazard as he has seven sure losers. He can, of course, assume that his partner has the average three tricks which, with six tricks in his own hand, would make a total of nine or enough to make good a bid of three, but such a bid would be too much of a hazard and perhaps interfere with a better bid for the game.

This is a hand where if partner cannot make a bid, there is no possibility of going game, hence he passes. As a matter of fact, if west will open the bidding north will take some action that will make it possible for south to show his spade suit and convey absolute information to his partner that he hasn't the top or he would have made a bid at first opportunity.

East of course has only one probable trick and must therefore refuse to support west's bid unless the bidding reaches the fourth round. West can't bid over three, however, without his partner's support.

Good Progress Is Shown by India in Radio Development

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BOMBAY, May 26.—Amazing progress has been made in wireless and radio developments in India during the past year, according to the report just published by the director general of Indian posts and telegraphs.

Considerable experimental work in short wave transmission and reception has been carried out and a direction finding station was successfully installed at Saugor island, in the Hooghly river, later being moved to Diamond Harbor. The total number of licenses for fixed stations is 125.

In order to further assist in the broadcasting experiments a campaign is being waged against the troublesome "pirates," and it is promised that the department of telegraphs will invoke the law's extreme penalty, which is imprisonment.

'Head of House' Empty Phrase, Declares Court

Like Figurehead; Often Handsome, Merely Wood

HOW and then a state Supreme court leans out from its bower of legal verbiage and actually says something. This happened recently in Georgia when the learned gentlemen of the higher bench declared without even using Latin as an anesthetic that the American husband has become a mere figurehead.

It is hardly necessary to explain what a figurehead is. One sees them riding out in front of ships, where they take all the buffeting of the waves but have nothing at all to say as to which way the boat is going. Their heads, though often handsome, are practically always made out of wood.

This merry little metaphor sprouted from a verdict against a man whose wife is alleged to have driven an automobile into another gentleman, apparently under the impression that he was a garage.

Appeals to Higher Court.

The husband promptly appealed to the higher court, his contention being, roughly, that a man able to control his wife's driving belongs in a museum, not a damage suit, and that he was no more responsible for the casualty than was the mute, inglorious license number.

It is quite possible that some of the Supreme court judges' wives drive cars themselves. Anyway, the gentlemen in the black mother hubbards agreed with the husband, let him keep his $3,000, and were probably restrained with difficulty from voting him a bunch of daffodils.

"By sweeping changes in the law governing civil rights of married women, the doctrine of the merger of the civil existence of wife and husband has been practically swept away," said the decision. "While the husband is declared by statute to be the head of the family, he, like the king of England, is largely a figurehead. . . . Therefore a husband is no longer liable under our statutes for the independent torts of his wife not committed by his command or with his consent."

Decision Will Be Surprise.

Thus husbands have been classed at a bound with the great orders of invertebrates, and will doubtless be given room in natural history collections on the same shelf with some of the less assertive mollusks. To a vast number of married men the decision will hardly be a surprise. This process of devolution has been going on for the last fifty years, becoming more and more rapid with each new decade.

The stern Victorian father who carried thunderbolts into the nursery and was called "Sir" by his wife, is grandsire to millions of yesmen who can hardly call a bridge hand their own.

Not so very long ago a husband was held responsible for any crime a wife might commit if he happened to be nearby. As one of the British jurists said, "It is a legal presumption that a wife acts under the coercion or command, actual or implied, of her husband, and therefore is excused from punishment for offenses committed in his presence."

* *

Principle Is Reversed.

Today this perpetual coercion idea is enough to bring a vivid smile to the great stone face. In fact, the principle has really been reversed. Anybody who has watched a wife flag down one of her husband's coral-tinted stories, or heard her apologize for the way he played the dummy, knows that the average wife feels responsible for all the drawing room crimes of her consort.

There doesn't seem to be such a thing as a balance of power between the sexes. Sometimes well adjusted couples find such a balance, but a look down the long files of history shows that it doesn't apply in society as a whole. The struggle to dominate is as old as the rock layers of the Pliocene era. Women like to rule as much as men do, and keeping the girls off the household throne has always been a task that required strenuous measures. Give them an upper hand and their reputation for sweet acquiescence fades out with the speed of a 10 cents store turquoise.

Henpecked Cavemen.

Look at the poor caveman, for instance. Cartoonists usually picture him as fervently caressing his better half with the midriff of an oak tree. As a matter of fact, say many anthropologists, millions of prehistoric men were so henpecked that they looked upon an argument with a saber toothed tiger as a positive recreation.

Judging from the horror of woman rule that men have had ever since, those early suffragettes must have thrown a fear into them that went clear down to the lowest cellar of the subconscious.

After the fall of the matriarch men used a number of different methods for keeping their wives out of power. Among the less tidy races brass knuckles and bowstrings were the favorite recipes. Some nations found that the only safe way was to keep the ladies shut up behind portals so that they couldn't get together and match samples of grievances. Others let them come and go with more freedom, but gave husbands the right to sell them into slavery if they rated anything less than 100 per cent in deportment. Also, it was customary to marry them off before they had a chance to look around the world and ask too many questions.

Keeping Girls in Order.

Later on more subtle ways were found for keeping the girls in order.

When it became a little crude to lock wives in their houses, somebody hit on the happy idea of shutting them in by sentimentalizing the rôle of homekeeper. The highest achievement, however, was that venerable legal growth known as the English common law. Under its provisions a wife had no more chance of anything resembling freedom than Mussolini has of getting a laurel wreath from the Mafia.

Husbands who have a hidden and unused sceptre up their sleeves made a great mistake in not having been born at least fifty years ago. Nowadays the married man who tries to wear a crown around his bald spot is usually startled by seeing his wife pack her trunk, draw out her savings account and fare forth to conduct a profitable tete-a-tete with a typewriter or an adding machine. If you think this could have happened before the common law was modified, you don't know the predicament of the unhappy crinolined sisters.

Job Was No Escape.

According to the old English code a wife had no more personal property than a salt mackerel. She didn't own even the ivory satin gown she was married in or the smelling salts bottle she used when recovering from the vapors. Marriage, according to the law, involved "an absolute gift to the husband of all the goods, personal chattels and estate which the wife was actually possessed of at the time of marriage and such other goods as might come to her during marriage."

This meant that a husband could, if he wished, scatter his wife's money among the night blooming primroses or give it by will to a nest of his own relatives. If he chose to present her family jewels to a lady of gossamer reputation, there was nothing the wife could do about it except have a good cry among the lavender-scented pillow slips.

Escape by means of a job was no escape at all for the mid-Victorian wife. In the first place there were almost no jobs. A lady could become a governess, perhaps, or one of those unhappy shawl carriers known vaguely as "companions." In the second place, even if she did find a position, her husband had a perfect right to appear on pay day and walk off with the stipend. If she left home, she had no legal authority even to take her clothes.

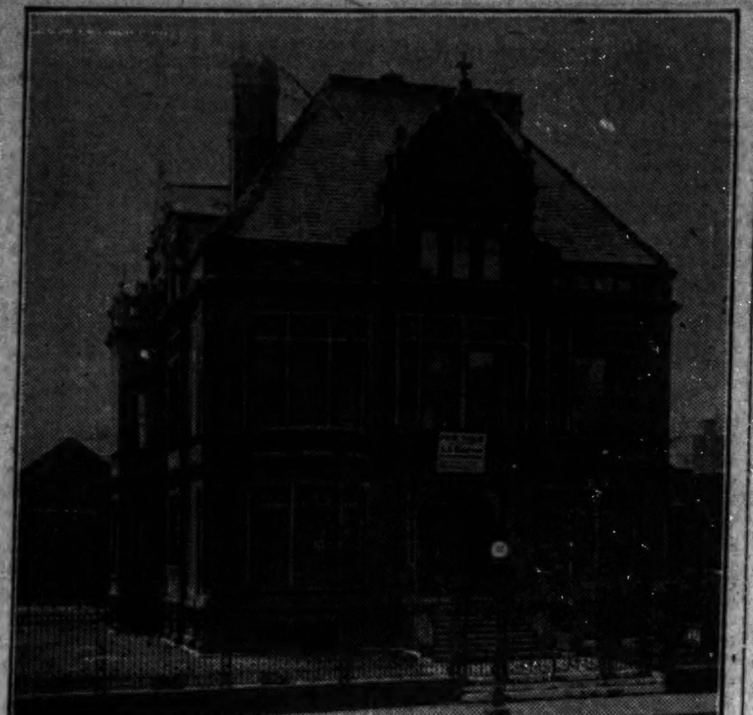
Changes in Divorce.

In return for everything his spouse inherited or earned, the husband was supposed to provide her with the necessities of life. The law, however, had a highly Spartan idea as to what was necessary. Boiled down, a husband's responsibility amounted to little more than keeping his wife out of the workhouse.

Divorce in the mid-Victorian age was not the ever-ready poultice for domestic hurts that it is today. A decree fifty years ago was likely to cost at least $1,000. Since a married woman could own no money and had no right even to her cameo brooch, the problem of raising the price was enough to stagger a court magician. Besides, the law's idea of cruelty centered only around great physical violence. It was not "cruel" to forbid a wife to see her family, to deprive her of access to her children, or even to place a lady of light renown at the head of the table.

No, the crinolined ladies were not to be envied either in England or in America, where the common law formed the basis of nearly all the state codes. It was the age of 'bellowing husbands—the time when wives were pallid asteroids circling around the more resplendent planets.

FAMOUS HOMES



THE Chicago residence of John W. Gates, daring financier, still stands at 2944 Michigan avenue. Mr. Gates' "betcha-a-million" activities kept him much of the time in New York, where he and Mrs. Gates, formerly Delorra R. Baker, resided at the Waldorf-Astoria, but during the 'nineties this was the place they really called home. The "for sale" sign above the door hints of further changes in a changing world.

They Still Drink Lindy Cocktails in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY.—(AP)—Lindbergh's name continues to adorn at least one, perhaps more, of the Mexico City saloons that tore down their former signs and relabeled their places in honor of the famous flyer when he was here last December.

It reads: "Lindbergh Cantina. Saloon. Barroom. Drinks."

Also, a "Lindbergh cocktail" was invented during the visit of that renowned but abstemious young man. It had quite a vogue, despite its devastating qualities.

The Mexicans were determined to honor Lindbergh to the utmost, even if it involved gulping liquid dynamite. Of course, some of the native drinks had given them pretty good training.

Anyhow the Lindbergh cocktails were taken bravely. You can still get one if you can stand it. It consists of a shake of a little of everything on the shelves.

Just How Many Noted Authors Do You Know?

First Names Given; Guess the Last Names.*

The average general reader carries in his head several hundred titles of books and plays, and as many names of authors. But to couple the various authors with their respective works, and do it correctly every time, is a test which few can pass without slipping.

Here are 100 titles of books and plays, to which are attached the first or baptismal names of their respective authors. You are to supply in each instance the missing family name.

Credit yourself with one for each author named correctly. A score of 50 may be regarded as passable, but 75 is more like it, and 90 or even 100 are by no means unthinkable.

As a last resort, answers to be found elsewhere in this section may be consulted.

Critics Demand Quick Death of Canned Music

PARIS.—(AP)—Something must be done to head off canned music, say the terribly shocked musical critics who contemplate the speedy abolition of the human element in orchestras.

It is the recent excitement over machine-played violins, the perfection of phonographs and the construction of mechanical orchestras for motion picture houses that has stirred the classic ire of the judges of the press.

A commission of censorship is proposed by Pierre Maudru, one of the protestors, to keep out of schools and public places any devices that do not conform to reasonably high musical standards.

He is particularly bitter over the efforts of some movie managers to cut expenses by using phonographs with loud speaker attachments, with speed-regulating control exercised by the projection operator, disregarding the fact that phonograph music to be true in tone must run at a predetermined speed. He fears for the musical knowledge and taste of a generation that is raised on machine-made music.

Newest French Stamps to Help Retire Bonds

PARIS.—(AP)—Stamp collectors and the public will get an additional chance to help the French government retire some more bonds through the issuance of a new special stamp. It is being sold at all postoffices until June 1, and the government's advertising urges all collectors to buy early to avoid the rush.

The new stamp will sell for 10 francs, or 40 cents, with a postal value of 6 cents. The other 34 cents will go to a national amortization fund, which has the job of reducing the national debt by buying in bonds and accepting gifts from the public.

A whole series of ordinary stamps, surcharged, already is sold by all postoffices. The surcharge of from one-half franc to 2 cents goes to the fund. Many millions of francs have been raised in that way, much of it from stamp collectors.

REJECTED, DEJECTED.

Future Seaport Will Be Airport Also, Predicted

BERLIN.—(AP)—The seaports of the future will look greatly different from those of today. They will be air and seaports combined.

This is the opinion held by Dr. Adolf Rohrbach, constructor of the Rohrbach seaplanes, one of which is to start for America next autumn.

"Just as the seaports of the world underwent a big change with the invention of the steamboat, so, too, will they undergo profound rearrangements when trans-oceanic traffic through the air becomes an established fact," he told the Associated Press representative.

"There will, for instance, have to be space for emergency seaplanes sent out to assist trans-ocean planes in distress. It is conceivable that a big trans-ocean plane may have to go down on the water. Instead of keeping the passengers waiting, emergency planes will come to their rescue.

"There will have to be added to the equipment of seaports many things necessary for air navigation. Tanking facilities, repair shops, special dry docks for seaplanes, airdromes for land planes which can immediately take the arriving passenger into the interior of the country—these are some of the additions with which the seaports will be equipped."

Ed Sullivan, the dentist, who plies the forceps at 25 East Washington street, has done his iron hitching post with the horse's head alongside his residence at Ash and Poplar, Winnetka, in azure blue. It is the cynosure of all eyes and, as it's the only hitching post in the north shore suburb, Ed rightfully is proud of it. Naturally. E. L. THE bicycle track in Humboldt park is one place these days where a boy can pedal to his heart's content without danger of being run down by higher powered vehicles. How to Get There—Crosstown lines to Madison street. West on Madison to Rockwell, 2600 west.

By The Aviation Editor.

THE final event of the All-Chicago Model airplane tournament, sponsored by THE TRIBUNE, will be held today in the 132d Infantry armory at Rockwell and Madison streets. The competition is a duration flight event for indoor tractor models.

More than 500 boys have entered in this event. Many of them are flying models in competition for the first time, while others are veterans at the game. But one thing is universal among the novices and veterans in the meet—all are out to win and all are keen students of the model game.

All Boydom Interested.

The indoor planes are the easiest of the models to build. They consist of a single stick for a fuselage, one large wing forward and a small elevator plane and rudder on the rear of the fuselage stick. These models are powered as all other types, with rubber strands, and are remarkably light in weight. Most of the indoor planes weigh around one and one-half ounces. They are built of balsa wood, rice paper, and bamboo and are put together with ambroid.

Some fine performances are cred-

Magic Card for Politeness Goes to a Salesman

West Sider Wins $50 for His Courtesy.

By The Politeness Reporter.

WHILE I was sitting at the soda fountain in the store of the Northwestern Drug company, at the corner where North and Milwaukee avenues and Robey street intersect, I thought the gentleman sitting beside me resembled some one I had known some ten years previously, but I was not certain as to his identity.

While nature has done a remarkable job of making human beings different from each other in appearance, there are, oftimes, striking resemblances.

This man belonged to that type of individuals which has a manner that impresses with its importance. I watched him as he ordered a lunch and, through a pair of the latest style spectacles, studied the food brought him. Presently my curiosity got the better of me, and I asked him if he was Mr. So-and-So.

* *

Why Search Further?

He turned and informed me that I had been correct in my surmise. And, on closer glance, he stated that he clearly remembered me.

"I've been out west," he told me. "Up around Seattle, but Chicago always pulls me back. I'm sales manager for a firm in the neighborhood, but haven't moved yet from where I live down near Jackson park. What are you doing?"

"I am The Politeness Reporter," I replied.

"Then you don't need to hunt any further," he advised.

"No," I said, "you and I are old acquaintances, and the magic card can only go to some one I've never known before."

"What does the magic card require mostly in the way of courtesy?" he questioned.

"Well," I said, "it has different whims. It's interested in any encounter of a sort that seems to make the world run more smoothly. Sometimes it isn't so much what people say. It's their tone and manner and utter lack of selfishness."

Straw Hat Time.

We walked back into the street together, and I went south on Milwaukee avenue. I came to where the street was being repaired. A moment later I was attracted by the display of straw hats in the W. A. Wieboldt & Co. windows. I went inside and asked if the straw hat season was now officially on.

"Why, yes," said the clerk, "it's been on since the 15th of May."

I asked if the styles varied much from the previous season. He said that they did in the matter of color.

I had heard much about the Wieboldt stores. This was the west town store, and it was apparent that the goods on the counters were of high quality. The floors were spacious, the ceilings high, and, the woodwork being in a light color and the pla?

BOYDOM'S PRIZE JOB

THERE aren't many boys in Chicago who wouldn't just as soon be in Tom Lantry's shoes. Tom is bat boy for the Cubs. Edwin knows the whims of the players, too.

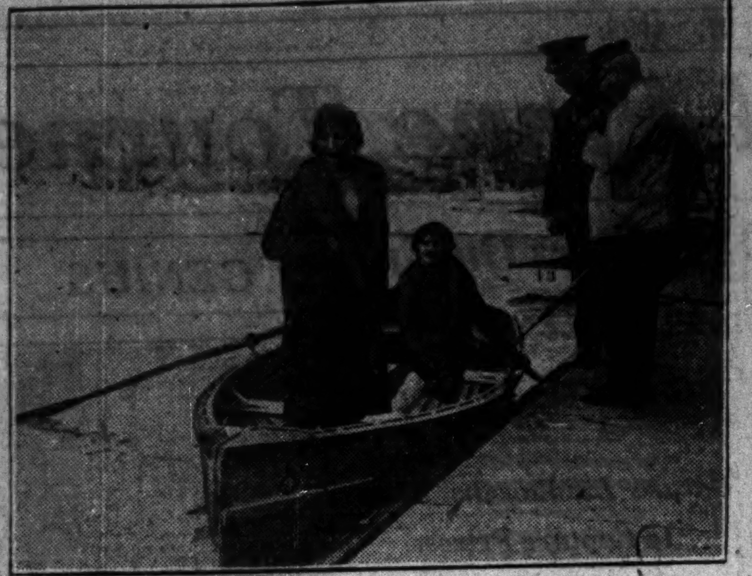
WOMAN TAKES THE HELM



THE good ship 84, with the Misses Sophie Sirkevitz and Marie Woodrich filling the roles of both crew and passenger list, is formally launched in the lagoon at Humboldt park. Sergt. Frederick Blank, of the Royal Northwest (side) mounted, and Boat Tender John Pagliugla do the honors in the absence of a rear admiral's daughter with a champagne bottle.

BARGAINING FOR BLOOMS

MAYBE it's for that little garden in the back yard, or perhaps to place on the window sill. Anyhow the potted plants being sold along market row, Randolph and Halsted streets, appeal to the passersby. THE RABBIT VILLAGE

IT'S a happy life that the bunnies live in their corner of the zoo at Lincoln park. They have bungalow homes, a city hall, a flour mill, and a schoolhouse for their little bunnies—buildings exactly like the ones human beings erect for their use. Apparently there's nothing going on down town today, so the family in the foreground is staying at home to gossip about the neighbors.

How They Fly Across Oceans Explained Here

Mystery of Twenty-four Gadgets Is Solved.

SUPPOSE you suddenly woke up and found yourself flying an airplane across the ocean. Yes, you would have your worries. And not the least of these would be a board in front of you, covered with a weird, intricate array of dials, switches, and other gadgets. Each would have a meaning of its own and your life would depend on your being able to interpret and work them properly.

Of course you drive a car and are familiar with the instrument board on almost any old gas buggy. It doesn't do you much good now. You recognize scarcely one of those tricky thingumajigs on the control board of the plane. You stare at them helplessly, as if at some fantastic kind of puzzle.

A lot of work a day people, even if they haven't experienced any nightmare like that, have gazed wonderingly at pictures of the spread of instruments with which the long distance aviator finds his way. The latest ocean spanning bird, the Bremen, has a particularly complete, up to date assemblage of dooflickers on its control board, the mechanical organs of sense by which Koehl, von Huenefeld and Fitzmaurice found their way across the trackless ocean. Look at it and see how much sense you can make of it. Not much! And you may wonder what they could possibly do with all that machinery. Yet every gadget has its place in the scheme of things aerial.

Inside Information.

Here, briefly is what they are all about:

No. 1. Ammeter. This is pretty much like the one on your car. It gives you the rate of charge and discharge of your batteries so that you won't take any chance of said batteries going dead.

No. 2. Tachometer. This tells the rate of rotation of the propeller, the number of revolutions per minute. It is comforting to glance at it and see that the old prop is turning around properly and you are making steady progress through the air.

No. 3. Oil Gauge. Tells you how much lubricating oil you have. Your automobile experience has given you plenty of understanding of what happens when your oil runs out. You burn out your bearings and generally put your motor on the bum. Very undesirable in an airplane.

No. 4. Barometer, for high altitudes. Gives air pressure and height at which you are flying. Another instrument registers for low altitudes.

The Aerial Speedometer.

No. 5. Air speed indicator. It tells you how fast you are progressing through the air. That, of course, is not necessarily your real speed. Winds may be holding you back. There is no instrument to show your your ground speed. Over land you can get some idea by looking below, but over water there is only the monotonous face of the sea, which is one of the nervous things about ocean flying.

No. 6. Primer. Same as in automobiles. You give it a push to shoot gas into the motor when it isn't hitting just right.

No. 7. The barometer, for low altitudes.

No. 8. Rate of climb indicator. In a fog you might not know where you were going up or down, or on a level. It indicates whether the plane is tilted with reference to nose and tail—a simple device on the principle of the ordinary carpenter's level.

No. 9. Lateral inclination indicator. This is a similar scale, but laid over on its side. It tells whether the plane is level with reference to the two wing tips, whether it is leaning over on one wing.

No. 10. Oil gauge. Another instrument that registers how much lubricating oil you have left. In case one goes out of order the other works.

No. 11. Thermometer. Gives the temperature of the lubricating oil.

A Marvel of Mechanics.

No. 12. Earth inductor compass, that new marvel in the way of mechanical sense organs. You set it for the direction in which you wish to fly, and whenever you deviate from that direction the needle shifts. One trick about the mechanism is that if the plane should swing completely around 180 degrees and you did not notice it, the compass would seem quite normal. In reality, of couse, it would be working backward. This is said to have been what happened on one of the flights of Mrs. Grayson, the one in which her plane turned back. The machine turned around without anybody noticing the behavior of the compass, with the result that the aviators found themselves flying in the direction opposite that which they had intended. Our plane also has a magnetic compass, seen below chart and right hand control.

No. 13. Altimeter. This tells you how high you are.

No. 14. Chart, which is almost like a map for the trans-Atlantic aviator. It gives him his hourly course. Before he starts he lays out his route and sets down, in terms of hours of flight, the direction in which he is to head from hour to hour. In the actual flight he follows this chart. He flies in the direction indicated during each hour indicated, making allowances as well as he can for side winds which drift him from his course. The detection of side winds has always been one of the important problems of aviation. One of the best ways is the use of smoke bombs—the aviators of the Bremen used them.

Two Strainers.

No. 15. Gas strainers and cut-offs. One for each gas tank. The Bremen carried two. The fuel oil passes through these strainers and is cleared of any extraneous matter that may be in it, and the aviator can shut off either tank at will.

No. 16. Gas throttle. This is what you use to give her the gun. It is just like the hand throttle on the steering wheel of your car.

No. 17. Air throttle, as on automobiles. You use it to make the mixture richer or leaner.

No. 18. Automatic gas gauge. It is a complicated device for registering how much fuel you have. There are two gas gauges, for safety's sake.

No. 19. Ignition switch, which throws on the motor.

No. 20. Tank switch, with which you change from one gas tank to another.

No. 21. Pneumatic gas gauge.

No. 22. Gas pump, used in case the automatic pump fails.

No. 23. Grease gun, for shooting lubricant into the heavier moving parts.

No. 24. Booster, a device for speeding up the magneto.

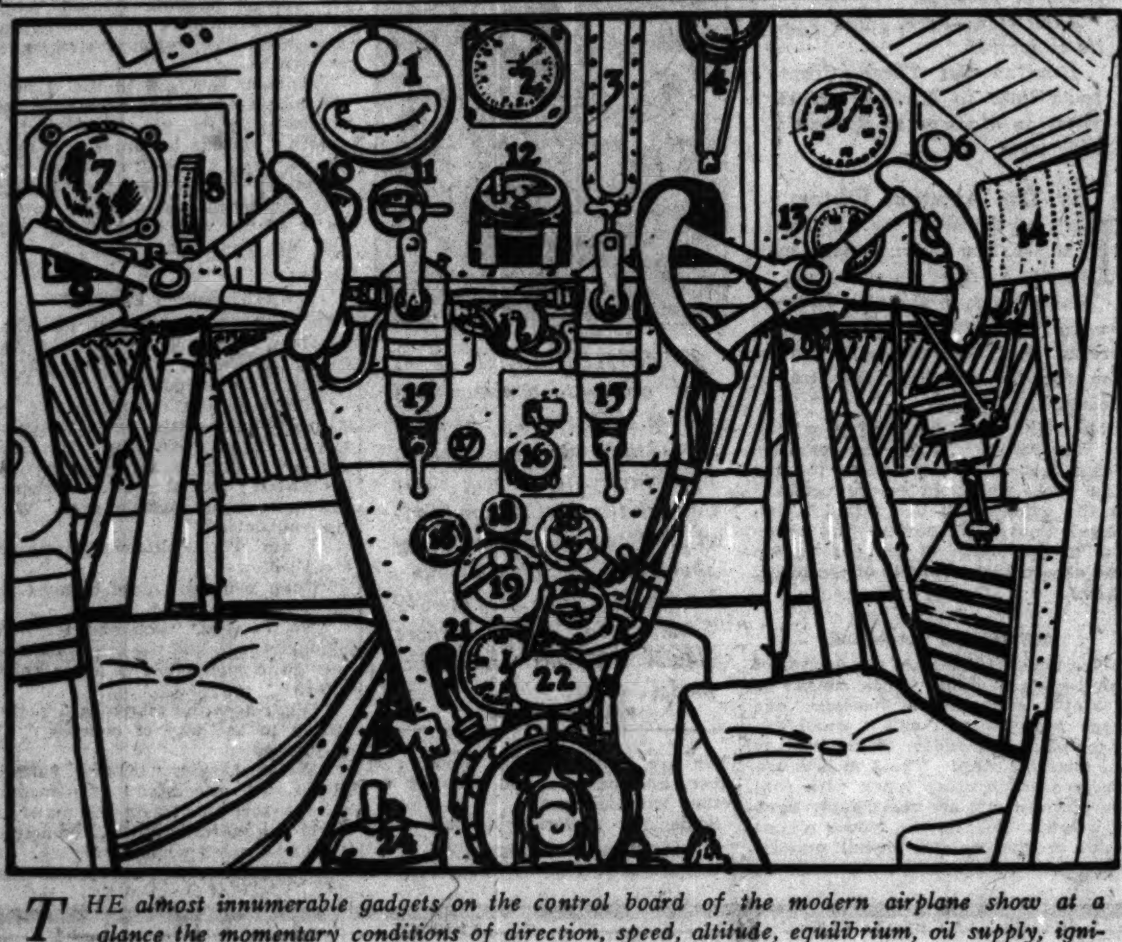
No Stick in It.

The controls are dual. They look something like automobile steering wheels. The "stick" of ordinary planes, which is merely a rod that you push around to steer the plane, is not used on the big machines. In the present type of control you turn the wheel to steer right or left, and push the wheel and bar backward or forward to go up or down.

The pilots are inclosed in the complicated cockpit up to their necks. Their heads protrude above, so they can have a good look ahead and over the sides.

Now go ahead. You have just awakened and found yourself flying an airplane across the ocean. Now you know what all that junk on the control board is for. Be sure that you don't go wrong with any of those gadgets, or it is liable to be the last mistake you will ever make.

THOSE TRICKY THINGAMAJIGS



THE almost innumerable gadgets on the control board of the modern airplane show at a glance the momentary conditions of direction, speed, altitude, equilibrium, oil supply, ignition, and other factors of vital importance to aviators. But to the average layman they appear to be a hopeless maze or some new and fantastic kind of a puzzle.

LOOKING AT PICTURES

TIRED from dancing in the sun, Ruth Moses, Ersla Marie Beek, Raynore Shapiro and Eileen Von Gregory—four little misses from school—have seated themselves beneath a blossoming apple tree in Jackson park and are going over the pages of their favorite picture book. It's a wonderful place to be, they all agree, except when one of those honey-seeking bees comes buzzing around.

SAVING THE MACHINE.

When MacTavish sold a 5 cent cigar the customer—an old friend—observed that he pocketed the money.

"Why don't you ring it up?" he asked. "You'll forget it."

"O, I'll nae forget it," replied the Scot. "Ye ken I keen track in mah head until I get a dollar, and then I ring it up. It saves the wear-r and tear-r on the machine."—Scotsman.

A WIZ ON QUIZ.

"What is ordinarily used as a conductor of electricity?" asked the professor.

"Why, er," began the student all at sea.

"Wire. Correct. Now tell me, what is the unit of electric power?"

"The what, sir?"

"Exactly, the watt. Very good. That will do."—Montreal Gazette.

The island is situated in Lincoln park, between Fullerton parkway and Diversey parkway, on the outer drive.

Historic Havana Church Must Pay a Museum Tax

HAVANA, Cuba.—(AP)—The Havana city government has decreed that Columbus cathedral, once the reputed resting place of the bones of Christopher Columbus, shall be known on city tax records as a museum.

Mecca of the majority of tourists, the famous cathedral, situated in old Havana and now surrounded by modern business life, passes from the roster of houses of worship because, officials say, a charge has been made to all who go within its ancient walls.

Under the Cuban law admission fees automatically classify properties as amusement places or museums. Thus Columbus cathedral must stand its share of community expense by paying a fee to the civil government.

Denials have been entered by the bishop of the church, who claims all fees go to guides and not to the church, but Havana is firm, and the church will be known as a museum.

Parliament in Iceland Nearly 1,000 Years Old

REYKJAVIK, Iceland.—(AP)—The "mother of parliaments" is generally understood to be the English parliament, but if accounts the palm goes to the Icelandic alting, which is to celebrate its tenth centenary in 1930.

The alting celebration will be of a national character. Many families in Iceland can trace their ancestors back to the first legislators of the Saga isle. The vikings who settled there understood the necessity of law and order, and it was from Iceland that the so-called Norse law went to Scotland.

The alting was instituted in 930 on the plain of Thingvalla, and the story of the Ting is being written by Benedict Sveinsson, the president of the lower house. He is assisted by a bevy of historians appointed by the government.

The festivities in connection with the jubilee will be held on the historic spot at Thingvalla, a well nigh ideal setting, giving the visitors a view of the beautiful scenery of Iceland.

A large foreign invasion is expected on this occasion. Icelandic-Americans will form a great body of these visitors. Many thousands are living in the United States and in Canada and style themselves "West-Icelanders."

MISSED HIS ANNIVERSARY.

Miss H—— had promised her 6 year old son a birthday party, but when the time came she told him he would have to wait because she was too busy to attend to it. REJECTED, DEJECTED.

LAST OF HIS TRIBE

JOSEPH HAND has come to dust off the wooden Indian which has stood in front of the cigar store at 1526 North Clark street since 1886. There was a time when the symbol was a common sight, but in late years it has vanished from American life, along with its living brethren. "Me Smoke 'Em" has been the property of the Hand family for over 60 years, and during all that time has lost none of his pride.

PET AMERICAN EAGLE

ATTRACTING much attention in its open air cage at the corner of Sangamon and Ohio streets lives the American eagle belonging to the Rev. Stephen A. Bubacz. Snowshoe Celebrates His Wife's Birthday

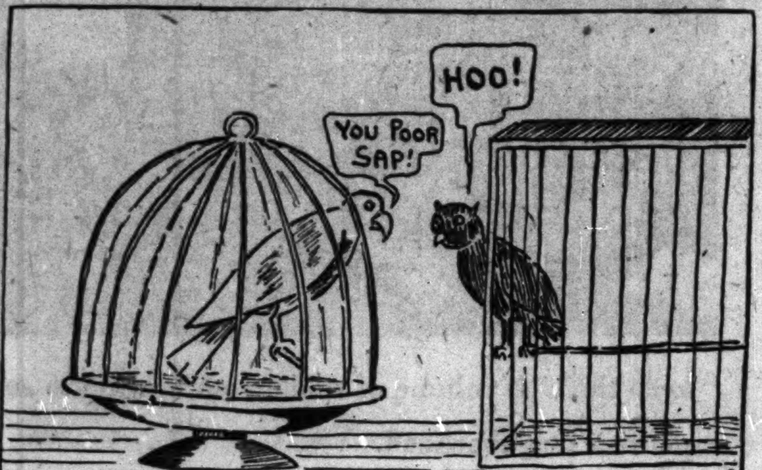
But the Pets He Buys for Her Put On a Peripatetic Petting Party

By Snowshoe Al.



YOU POOR SAP!
HOO!

YESTERDAY afternoon I was parked on the back porch, smoking a bum cigar, when down the alley comes my friend McConnell, the famous Sash and Door peddler. Mr. McConnell was driving the six cylinder coffee grinder which he insists is an automobile. The guy that made that machine certainly started out to manufacture a cement mixer, but changed his mind before the job was finished. Mac crawled out of the benzine chariot and sat down beside me. The boy was sure perspiring.

"What's the idea of loafing on the back porch?" says he.

"O, I was just sitting here thinking," says I. "You see, this morning just before my wife went down town she reminded me that today was her birthday. I was thinking maybe I should buy her something."

"It's a terrible hot day," says he, wiping some more perspiration off his map. Then he gazed at me in a most appealing manner. "Excuse me for mentioning the fact," says he, "but you smell like beer!"

"Yeh, I just drank a quart," says I, yawning. Mr. McConnell moaned in a most pitiful manner and then registered anticipation by running his tongue all over the front of his head in a wide circle.

"D'yuh know where we can buy some more?" asks this hombre.

"I do not," says I, so this bozo heaves a flock of dismal sighs and then registers despair by hanging his visage over the front of his shirt. "Yep," I repeats, "I don't know where you can buy any, but you can have some for nothing if you go in the kitchen. There's sixteen more quart bottles in the icebox."

"Why, you @$@$@$@$@$@$@!!!" says he, crawling weakly through the door. I crawled in right behind him and we lapped up Pretzel Water until our ribs began to float. Then we slid out the back door and walked down the alley.

"What kind of a birthday present—hic—was you thinking of buying for—hic—your quarrel partner?" inquires Mr. McConnell.

"I've often heard her mention that she would like a white kitten with a pink ribbon around its neck," says me.

The Beasts and the Birds.

We went to a pet shop in the neighborhood and looked in the window, but the guy evidently only had white kittens with blue ribbons on their necks, so we moved on. We finds another animal factory about a mile further down the street. Well, folks, the proprietor of this dump was positively intoxicated. He had a bottle of home brew in each hand, and he gave three rousing cheers when we entered his wigwam.

"Have you got a white kitten with a pink ribbon on its neck?" asks me.

"No," says he, "but I've got a black kitten with a pink ribbon. I also got a white kitten which ain't got no ribbon at all."

"Neither of 'em will do," says I; "I guess I'll buy a dog instead." So I picks a flea incubator which is supposed to be a Boston terrier, although he looks more like a sick soup bone. Then we makes a great discovery. We discover we could take the pink ribbon off the black meow and put it on the white meow. We was amazed at our own cleverness; in fact, all three of us shook hands. So I also bought the white kitten.

"Gimme a bird," says Mac; "a nice, costly bird."

"Well," says the owner, "I have some nice canaries—"

"I don't want none of these little things!" howls Mr. McConnell; "slip me something nice an' big! Gimme that parrot!"

The guy stuck the parrot in a large wooden cage and handed him to Mac. Mac handed him to me.

"What's the idea?" howls me.

"Give him to your wife with my compliments," says Mac. Then he turns to the proprietor and says: "This guy is one of my best friends, an' today is his wife's birthday. Any wife of his is a friend of mine, which is the reason I bought her this parrot—"

* *

Two Little Love Birds.

"What!", yells the intoxicated owner; "is this his wife's birthday? Well, you sure are a regular guy to buy her that nice parrot! You're a real—hic—friend! I shall now enter into the—hic—spirit of things an' send the young lady—hic—a present myself!"

And damn if he didn't reach up on a shelf and bring down a goofy looking hoot owl! He stuck him in another wooden cage and handed him to me.

"I'm not sure my wife would care for a hoot owl," says me, rather dubiously. A moment later I was sorry I spoke. A hurt look appeared in the proprietor's eyes. His huge frame shook with suppressed sobs. Then he hung his head, and several large tears rolled off his chin.

"I meant well," he sniffed. "Of course, he ain't worth much, but, after all, it ain't the—hic—value of a thing—it's the spirit in which it is—hic—given. Sniff, sniff."

"I didn't mean to hurt your feelings," says I; "in fact, the wife will probably like him, because he's so different. I'll take him, but I don't known where I'm going to keep all these things—we already own a canary bird and a turtle."

"Gimme a pair of lovebirds!" yells Mr. McConnell, who was still in a delirious buying fever. "I just remembered that my girl likes lovebirds. I think she's already got a pair, but this will make a foursome."

Believe me, we had a helluva time getting all that live stock over to my apartment, but we did it! We put the parrot's cage and the hoot owl's bungalow side by side on the dining room table. We put the kitten in the bedroom and the Boston soup bone in the kitchen. Then Mr. McConnell did a foolish thing. He dumped his two lovebirds into my canary's cage. Caruso (that's our canary's name—we call him Caruso because he don't sing any more) didn't like the idea of sharing his home with this pair of affectionate poultry, and he began to act real peeved.

"Hey," says I, "what's the idea of dumping your Romeo & Juliet in with my Caruso?"

"O," says Mac, "I just wanted to see how my birds are going to look in a large cage."

"$@$@$@$@$@$@$@$!!!!" says the parrot.

"Did you hear him?" grins Mac. "Wasn't that cute?"

"Yeh, my wife is going to love that guy," sneers me; "he's wonderful!"

"Wonderful, wonderful!" squawks the parrot; "wonderful, wonderful!"

"HOO! HOO!" says the hoot owl. "HOO!"

"Not you, you flat faced $@$@$@!" says Mr. Parrot.

The Racketeers.

Just then we heard a terrible racket in the bedroom. It seems that the Boston flea incubator has wandered out of the kitchen and has located the kitten. The battle started under the bed and ended in the clothes closet. We arrived just in time to be too late, so we took $6 worth of cat and dumped it in the garbage can.

All this racket inspired our canary and filled him with a lust for battle, so he decided to mop up the lovebirds which now shared his kitchenette apartment. Mr. Caruso is no Walter Raleigh—he never was much on this courtesy stuff—and therefore he walloped the lady first. Little Miss Juliet folded up like an accordion and passed out. Little Romeo flopped wildly around the cage, looking for a hole marked "exit." He didn't find one, so it was just too bad! We put the two lovebirds in the garbage can with the kitten.

"Won't the janitor be surprised when he takes the lid off that can tomorrow morning?" grins Mr. McConnell.

In the meantime the Boston pup was looking around for more trouble. He found it. Little Hercules (that's the name of my pet turtle) crawled out from under the davenport and yawned. Mr. Pup barked joyfully, leaped into the air, and landed with his forepaws on the young gentleman's shell.

Now, Hercules is naturally a peaceful guy, but he hates to have anybody lean heavily on his roof, so he whirled suddenly and snapped. Believe me, we didn't name him Hercules for nothing! He can chew a flatiron into pulp. Mr. Pup squealed, tore through the back door, ran down the alley, and disappeared around a corner with Mr. Hercules still hanging gleefully to his nose.

"Well," says I, "I'm glad they decided to finish the battle some other place, because I don't believe we could have got the pup into the garbage can anyhow."

"$@$@$@$@$@$@$@!" squawks the parrot in the dining room.

"HOO! HOO!" yelps the hoot owl; "HOO!"

"You, you flat-faced $@$@$@$@!" remarks Mr. Parrot.

Mr. Owl blinked his dreamy eyes several times. Then he stuck one of his sharp talons through the bars of Mr. Parrot's cage and slipped him a beautiful wallop in the back of the neck. Then, just to prove how versatile he was, he presented the talkative boy with a couple uppercuts and several right hooks.

"Yes, sir," grins Mr. McConnell, as he dumped the parrot in the garbage can, "the janitor is gonna get a large surprise tomorrow morning!"

* *

Who's Whose?

A few minutes later my wife came home, so we told her the hoot owl was her birthday present.

"I didn't say it was my birthday, you dumb bum," says her, "I said it was my mother's birthday."

"I must have misunderstood you," says I. "Well, give him to her."

"HOO!" says the hoot owl.

"You!" says I, "you flat faced $@$@$@$@!"

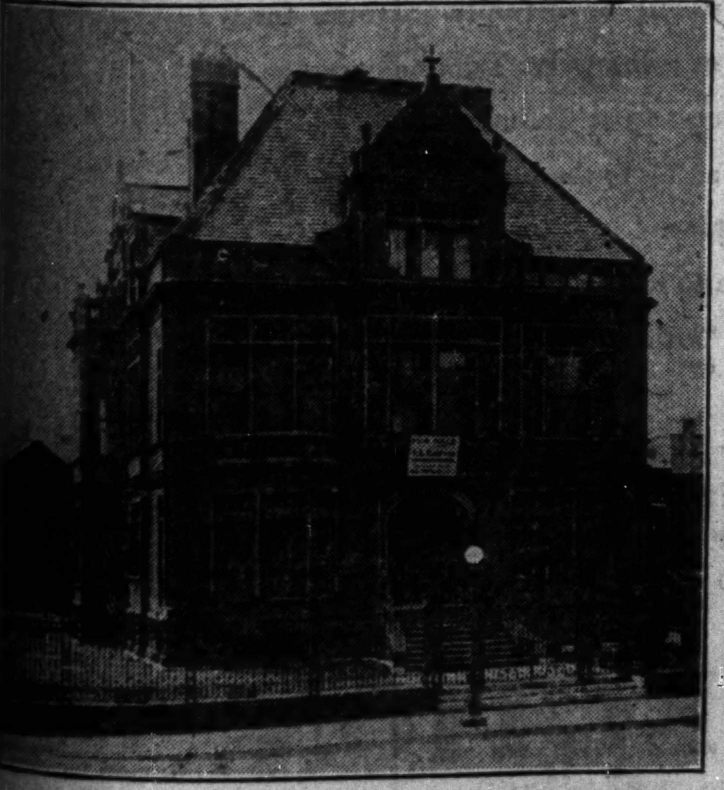
FAMOUS HOMES



THE Chicago residence of John W. Gates, daring financier, still stands at 2944 Michigan avenue. Mr. Gates' "betcha-a-million" activities kept him much of the time in New York, where he and Mrs. Gates, formerly Delorra R. Baker, resided at the Waldorf-Astoria, but during the 'nineties this was the place they really called home. The "for sale" sign above the door hints of further changes in a changing world.

Find Pre-Viking Ships in Sweden 1,500 Years Old

STOCKHOLM, Sweden.—(AP)—Two pre-viking ships, 1,500 years old, and one oar estimated to be 5,000 years old, have been found in Sweden, shedding new light upon ancient Swedish seafaring and seamanship.

The oar, made for paddling, was found deep down in a moor in Dalecarlia, and the experts of the historical museum in Stockholm estimated its age by the pollen test. This test consists in examining a piece of the soil where the object was found, and when pollen abounds. The geologists have drawn up immigration maps for various plants, fixing the age of their existence in Sweden. On this special occasion they found no pine pollen in the clod examined, and, knowing that the pine entered Dalecarlia some time after 3,000 years B. C., they accordingly dated the oar as belonging to an earlier period.

This pollen analysis, discovered by the Swedish botanist, Lagerheim, and perfected by another Swedish scientist, Von Post, is looked upon as a revolutionizing method of investigation of early geological periods.

The ancient ships were found on the western shore of Sweden, in the province of Halland. The hulls are made of oak timber and fourteen meters long, four meters wide, built on ribs, and nailed together by wooden pegs. They were comparatively well preserved.

Several Services.

Some three weeks ago I bought a pair of shoes. After one week's wear I thought the shoes not so comfortable as they had been, but as I could not afford to throw them away, I continued wearing them. Finally, in great discomfort, I went to the store where I purchased them, and asked if anything could be done for me. A polite floorman ushered me to a seat, saying a Mr. A. would take care of me.

On hearing what my complaint was Mr. A. promptly measured my foot, and put on another pair of shoes. I asked if they would allow me anything at all on the other pair, whereupon I was informed it was an even exchange. I was surprised, and pleased, of course. Who would not be? And so I walked out shod in new comfort. But after walking around the block a few times, I realized that despite another fit, something was not just right, and thought it took much courage, I again went back to the store. Instead of seeing disgust or ill humor registered on the face of the man who had just waited on me, I saw that he was ready to give me attention in the same courteous manner as before. Another pair was put on my feet, and when I asked to have a heel pad put in, it was done. When I asked what I owed, I surely thought I would have to pay the price of a new pair, plus extras. But the answer was as before—nothing. I sat stunned for a moment, and again asked the price—this time opening my purse. Again the same answer—nothing.

I could find no words to express my thanks. Never have I met with such courtesy. I am still wondering if it can be true, but on looking down at my feet there are the new shoes.

At no time did I expect to get something for nothing, and I cannot understand how any firm can afford to give it. Suffice it to say, I shall always be thankful for this service, and refer others to this store. F. J.

Why Customers Come Back.

I purchased a black leatherette raincoat. After using it about three months I noticed that two of my dresses had been marked by the coat. I took both the dresses and the coat to the adjusting bureau of the store and they told me to send the dresses to the cleaners and they would pay for them.

The bill was $5 for cleaning. They also allowed me $4.50 on the coat purchase price, and said, "You can have the coat, but don't wear it out in the rain."

The original price of the coat was $7.50. I. S.

VICTIM OF SPEEDERS

THE giant hawk being held by Helen Kelly and Marion Lynch found himself supreme as he circled above the lagoon in Washington park and swooped down upon a fish. The hawk was master of the air and the fish was merely at home in the water. But in his greed to bury his catch, the hawk failed to take heed of speeding automobiles along the park drive and death came to him just as it had to the victim in his claws.

Magic Card for Politeness Goes to a Salesman

West Sider Wins $50 for His Courtesy.

well lighted, the atmosphere had a note of unusual cheerfulness.

Strolling about, I came across at least three vacum cleaner demonstrators. The men in charge started their machines to whirring at my approach. Also, the man who was demonstrating furniture and automobile polish started his lecture as I neared.

The polish, as I could see by the label on the bottle, was made in Evanston. For my benefit the man breathed on a piece of wood that he had polished and the marks disappeared. Then he poured water on the polished surface and showed how the moisture failed to penetrate.

* *

Strolling.

I visited the candy section and found there was now such a thing as Memorial day candy—doughboys, cannons, and bugles made of chocolate.

In the musical department an electric player piano was giving a rendition of "My Ohio Home."

"That's one of the best rolls out," said the clerk.

"Do you mean as a roll?" I asked.

"As a song," he explained, "the harmony."

Near the musical department there were a flower and plant display and a section given over to goldfish. Somewhere I had seen the sign "Shrubbery on the Third Floor." So I took the elevator. Beside me in the elevator were two matrons. One of them was telling the other that a certain woman of their acquaintance had not invited her to drink coffee on the occasion of a recent visit. The other woman passed a consoling remark and also voiced her opinion of any one who would be guilty of such an oversight.

Among the Shrubs.

It was at the shrubbery section that I met Otto M. Christainson, although I didn't know his name at the time, nor was I aware that, evidently from the beginning of the day, the magic card had had him in mind.

Mr. Christainson was buying some privet hedge. I gathered, from his conversation with the clerk, that he worked in another part of the store. I asked him about his garden plans.

"I'm going to plant it in my back yard," he told me. "And I've decided on another thing—I'm going to sod my yard instead of planting grass seed. You know, it's pretty hard to grow grass seed where there's children and dogs."

"Where is this home of yours?" I inquired.

"Out on Armitage avenue," he confided. "I've lived around that neighborhood for the last 37 years. Maybe you know where Heinneman's silk factory is. My kid days, though—well, they were spent down near Erie and Noble."

I called Mr. Christainson's attention to the crate of baby chicks that were supplying a peeping chorus. I asked him how many chicks he thought were in the box.

He left the counter where his package was being wrapped, and made an estimation. Then I asked him what department he worked in.

"Stoves and ice boxes," he smiled. "So you see, it always means something in season. Just recently, you know, the store had its forty-fifth anniversary sale. Our department made our quota and our boys were given a dinner."

* *

He'd Found a Horseshoe.

He started back for his own department. I walked along with him, and instead of resenting the intrusion, he even stopped to unwrap his package to give me a glimpse of the shrubs he had bought.

When we reached the ice boxes, I asked him if he'd ever had any good luck. He asked me, in turn, if I were superstitious. I told him I wasn't. He explained that on the day before he had picked up a horseshoe and taken it home.

"I didn't say anything to my wife about the horseshoe," he added, "but then, all of us are just a little superstitious."

"Without your courtesy," I said, "I don't believe the finding of the horseshoe would have helped you get the magic card. I'm The Politeness Reporter and there's no question in my mind but what, on this occasion the magic card wants to go to you."

"I'm surprised," he nodded, "and very grateful."

I told Mr. Christainson I hoped he would have luck with his hedge, and bade him goodby. Upon reaching the street, however, I discovered that, some where in the store, I had left my umbrella. A flurry of rain drops reminded me of my act of absentmindedness; I hurried back through the aisles and up the elevator. Reaching Mr. Christainson's department, I could see him nowhere about, but my umbrella was resting against the refrigerator beside which we had finished our chat.

PROSPERITY awaits the merchants who sell to the "cities within the city!"

WITHIN the last generation Chicago has risen to a position of dominance as the center of the vast trade empire of the middle west. As the city has grown to this proud point, Chicago's neighborhoods have developed from sparsely settled districts to populous, thriving communities of major commercial importance.

Today these neighborhoods are cities in themselves. They are "cities within the city," equal in population, buying power and business possibilities to the most prosperous of the smaller cities of the country.

WILSON AVENUE Looking East From Broadway

A neighborhood of 110,000 people! . . . . .

Compare, for example, the district of Edgewater with South Bend, the motor metropolis of northern Indiana. In the narrow strip of land along the lake that comprises Edgewater live almost 27,000 families—more than 110,000 people! This population is greater than that of the entire city of South Bend! These people are above average in buying power—in the rents they pay, in the number and quality and variety of things they buy. They are all concentrated within a small area, in convenient shopping distance of the merchants of the neighborhood.

That is Edgewater. Not a small community capable only of supporting a few shops, but a city in itself, with thousands upon thousands of buyers able to bring prosperity to a thriving, modern city business district.

Metropolitan profit possibilities . . . .

Every neighborhood in the city is in the same position as Edgewater—some to a greater, some to a lesser degree. Merchants who have thought of their communities as restricted territories containing only a few hundreds of customers must enlarge their viewpoint to succeed in a big way. They must see their neighborhoods as actual cities and themselves as metropolitan merchants with opportunities for profit equal to those of any big city retailer.

Make them come true!

Of course, it is not possible to change this group of potential buyers into actual purchasers without effort. No merchant in a city of 100,000 people can get business without going after it. But it can be obtained—and must be to keep the rich volume of trade from flowing to some competitive neighborhood.

The logical way for the merchants of the "cities within the city" to realize on the big business possibilities their neighborhoods have to offer is to advertise. And the most effective, economical medium to use is the Metropolitan Section of The Sunday Tribune.

A proud record of selling success . . . . . .

No newspaper in the country can exceed The Tribune as a sales influence. The success of scores of large advertisers year after year has proved that. And in the short time that has passed since the Metropolitan Section was instituted, the stores that have used it have known the increased prosperity Tribune advertising brings.

In the most populous and wealthy neighborhoods of the city The Sunday Tribune has an almost complete coverage of the families. The Metropolitan Section reaches all of these buyers. Edgewater retailers can reach more than 93% of the families of the neighborhood, and 200,000 more living within convenient trading distance. Merchants elsewhere enjoy equal opportunity.

Share in it during 1928!. . .

This unusual advertising opportunity is yours for about a third of the cost of full Sunday Tribune coverage. This low cost enables you to use Tribune selling power aggressively—gives you access to the full trading possibilities of your entire territory.

Ask a Tribune man to call and explain how you can profit by selling to the "cities within the city." Phone Superior 0100 NOW!

Just How Many Noted Authors Do You Know?

First Names Given; Guess the Last Names.

The average general reader carries in his head several hundred titles of books and plays, and as many names of authors. But to couple the various authors with their respective works, and do it correctly every time, is a test which few can pass without slipping.

Here are 100 titles of books and plays, to which are attached the first or baptismal names of their respective authors. You are to supply in each instance the missing family name.

Credit yourself with one for each author named correctly. A score of 50 may be regarded as passable, but 75 is more like it, and 90 or even 100 are by no means unthinkable.

As a last resort, answers to be found elsewhere in this section may be consulted.

River Won't Run Under New Bridge

TRUJILLO, Peru.—(AP)—By the road from here to Salaverry, the nearest port, stands a costly concrete bridge spanning dry ground.

It was built to cross a river, but no sooner had it been completed than the river changed its course. The river now flows about a mile north of the bridge.

Fashions and Novelties

Odds and Ends from the Shopping Centers

A rather amusing way to serve dessert is with these spoons and forks of French gilt with colored handles. The colors can be had to match or contrast with the dishes. They are especially effective with crystal plates.

Knives and forks with the same colored handles may be used for fruit when it is served for dessert—which is not done often enough—and the stains of the juice will not make them black.

Turk Officials Must Marry Native Women

ANGORA, Turkey.—(AP)—The Turkish government prohibits marriage of ambassadors or high government officials to foreign wives. The breaking of this rule entails dismissal, as in the recent case of a prominent officer of the aviation corps here who return from a mission abroad with a German mate. Infringement of the law has been winked at, however, in cases where the foreign wives are wealthy.

Bolivian Troops Have Shoes but Go Barefoot

LA PAZ, Bolivia.—(AP)—Shoe leather is not wasted when the Bolivian troops go on the march. The troopers remove their shoes and carry them in their belts. Some go barefoot; others use sandals. The Bolivian army is made up almost entirely of Indians, who are not accustomed to footgear.

She Takes Over His Business—and Builds It Up

Wife Succeeds Her Invalid Husband at the Helm.

By Marion Reagan.

SOME day someone is going to be honest about honest poverty and expose it for the highly unsatisfactory thing it is, as anybody who has ever enjoyed it will attest. Of course, "enjoy" is the wrong verb, since there is no enjoyment in it and small comfort except for the rather dubious comfort vouchsafed by religionists who say it is the wicked that flourish like the green bay tree and that the rich man will enter the kingdom of heaven only with the greatest difficulty.

Since Biblical times a halo has surrounded indigence which not even this materialistic age has been able to dissipate. Anybody starting an idealistic enterprise, for instance, is sure to be given credit for his idealism so long as the enterprise is a failure financially. If it begins to make money, then the ideals are questioned, for, according to the popular notion, you cannot serve two masters. You can't make money and keep your ideals, too.

A man on a northbound bus the other day was trying to comfort his small daughter, who was gazing longingly at the opulence displayed along Lake Shore drive. He replied to her question of, "Gee, dad, don't you wish we were rich?" with the old one about money not being everything. He hinted that money indeed was nothing at all. "Uneasy lie the heads that wear the chic hats, my dear; be dowdy and you'll be sure to be virtuous," was his comforting advice, which undoubtedly contains a great deal of truth, particularly in the latter clause, but it is far from being the whole story.

Indeed, money is held in such disrepute that few will admit, even though the major portion of their time is spent in its accumulation, that its pursuit is one of their primary interests in life. Women particularly shy before such an accusation. They will give a thousand reasons for taking up this or that occupation, but almost never will they say their main interest in the business is the money it brings them.

Her Husband's Helper.

But not so in the case of Mrs. Marion Winship. She admits that it was wanting money that took her into business, that the love of making it keeps her there, and that the hope of making a great deal some day eggs her on. She is not numbered among the city's richest women, nor even among the near-rich. She lives in an unpretentious apartment at 447 Fullerton parkway. The car she drives is not of the de luxe class, but, considering that she has been in business only three years and that in those three years she has had to be head of the house as well as of the business and nurse to an invalid husband, her present prosperity is not to be sneezed at. She is in the manufacturing business, making cabinets out of sheet metal.

Married at 17, she had no training either in business or in any profession before she became Mrs. Winship. The wedding bells, as a matter of fact, were rung in while the school bells were still clanging, and the high school education which Cupid ruined was continued after marriage by private study. All that was in New York and a long time ago. Mrs. Winship won't tell how long ago, and there is no reason why she should. Anybody with the courage to branch out into a brand new enterprise and take on the entire responsibility of it alone is young whether she was born in the nineteenth or the twentieth century. A near enough date of the wedding is 1907, when the newlyweds came to Chicago to build a fortune in the western city. They have lived here ever since, but because of ill health, the fortune they had in mind never got built, although they enjoyed a comfortable, even prosperity. Three yeors ago, Francis Winship's health completely failed and the bread winning was plainly up to his wife. Boldly, without a tremor, she set about establishing herself in the manufacturing business. All she knew about commerce she had learned from cooperating with her husband in his undertakings.

And on this point she has a word to say to wives. It is, that every woman should take an active interest in her husband's affairs, not only because she never knows when accident is going to throw her into his place, but because such an interest makes for greater congeniality.

Through long years of battling with illness, she has a proper appreciation of the importance of health. Like Carlyle, she realizes that "the healthy know not of their health, but only the sick." Through caring for her husband in all the years of his illness she knows what a fragile thing health is and that on it everything else in life largely depends. She has learned also how necessary it is to have money and what a good thing in itself money is.

Just for Today.

Mrs. Winship is a tall, rather stoutish woman with the well known school girl complexion. Her hazel eyes sparkle when she smiles and have a fascinating way of changing color as the light strikes them. Her hair is a deep, dark brown, streaked with gray. She talks with the barest trace of an Eastern accent, and because her voice is low and resonant it is pleasing to listen to her. It is especially pleasing, and interesting, to hear her tell how she made a success of manufacturing when so many others have failed.

"If I have succeeded in my venture it is first because I have worked hard and second because of my philosophy of life which is entirely contained in the old hymn, 'Just for Today.' I try not to think beyond tomorrow unless I have to. Each day I start out with a definite plan of what I must accomplish that particular day. I don't allow myself to think of yesterday and what I should have done then or what I might do next week. It is today only that counts, and if you make each day's work right the total is bound to add up on the credit side in the long run."

She rides horseback for exercise and keeps house for diversion, but nine-tenths of her time is spent in hunting up new business.

SUCCESS

Mrs. Marion Winship, who "succeeded," in more ways than one, when her husband was taken ill and she was forced to take over his manufacturing business. And she did it without previous training in trade or profession.

He Finds Indian Tongue Without Nouns or Verbs

BOMBAY.—(AP)—A language that had no nouns or verbs is among the 180 which Sir George Grierson has mastered in a linguistic survey of India.

The survey was begun soon after Sir George came to India from Dublin university, Ireland, in 1873. It classifies the speech of some 290,000,000 persons and deals with 179 languages and 544 dialects.

"There are languages," he says, "whose phonetic rules prohibit the existence of more than a few hundred words and that cannot express what are to us the commonest and most simple of ideas. And there are others with opulent vocabularies, rivaling English in their copiousness and in their accuracy of idea connotation.

"There are languages which know neither noun nor verb and whose only grammatical feature is syntax; and there are others with grammatical systems as completely worked out as those of Greek or Latin."

500 Boys on Tiptoe for Air Contest Today

Thrillers Are Due in Plane Tourney Finals.

ited to these tiny planes. From hand launching, such as will be the case in today's competition, a number of the machines have remained in the air for more than three minutes. The record is 3 minutes 28 2-10 seconds and is held by Irving Johnson of the Illinois Model Aero club. Johnson will compete in today's events in the senior class.

Many of the entrants today are boys from the parks and playgrounds of the city. The South Parks of Chicago have sponsored airplane building and air tournaments for the last four years. This system will have more than 150 boys in the competition. The board of education playgrounds adopted the model building three months ago when the All-Chicago tournament sponsored by THE TRIBUNE was announced, and since that time much work in this line has been accomplished, with the result that about 100 of the entrants in today's meet will be board of education playground boys.

When the playgrounds took up model building, directors at the various grounds accepted an invitation from the south parks to follow their plan of building planes, and B. C. Friedman, director of handicraft in the south parks, and V. K. Brown, superintendent of recreation, aided the city workers in organization work and getting the boys started in building planes.

Starts at 10 a. m.

Interest in this model building has increased in the playgrounds to such an extent that Nicholas Malloy, assistant director of the board of education system, has announced that model building now will be a part of the regular activities. Even the girls of the playgrounds want to build models, Mr. Malloy said, and classes for them may be started.

High schools of the city also will be represented in the indoor meet. Harrison, Tilden Tech, Lane Tech, and Crane have entries in the meet, while the Illinois Model Aero club has several boys entered.

Competition in today's event will start at 10 a. m. The armory will be open until 5 o'clock for competition and a corps of officials will be on hand all day to run off the meet.

No admission is charged. The public is invited to attend. All expenses are borne by THE TRIBUNE.

Paris Inventor Takes Power from the Sea

PARIS.—(AP)—The dream of limitless power from the sea is taking form in a laboratory installation set up by Georges Claude, inventor of liquid air, at Ougree-Marihaye, on the Meuse river, near Liege, Belgium.

Claude recently reported to the Academy of Sciences that a dynamo was being driven by utilizing the 46 degrees Fahrenheit difference of temperature between the surface water and that at a considrable depth. A 50 kilowatt generator, he said, was producing 40 kilowatts of power, much more than enough to do the pumping necessary in the process.

This surplus of power, produced by nature, Claude announced last year, could be obtained from the sea in vast quantities, particularly near the equator, where the difference in temperature at various depths is very great.

This first installation, made to test Claude's calculations, is expected to be followed by a more elaborate plant, and eventually by a commercial installation. Claude, in his first predictions, forecast that the world might heat itself in winter and cool itself in summer with the incalculable power the sea could give.

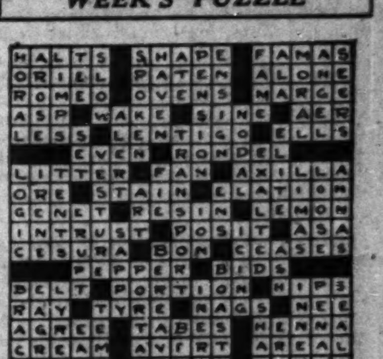
ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE



They Still Drink Lindy Cocktails in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY.—(AP)—Lindbergh's name continues to to adorn at least one, perhaps more, of the Mexico City saloons that tore down their former signs and relabeled their places in honor of the famous flyer when he was here last December.

It reads: "Lindbergh Cantina. Saloon. Barroom. Drinks."

Also, a "Lindbergh cocktail" was invented during the visit of that renowned but abstemious young man. It had quite a vogue, despite its devastating qualities.

The Mexicans were determined to honor Lindbergh to the utmost, even if it involved gulping liquid dynamite. Of course, some of the native drinks had given them pretty good training.

Anyhow the Lindbergh cocktails were taken bravely. You can still get one if you can stand it. It consists of a shake of a little of everything on the shelves.

'Head of House' Empty Phrase, Declares Court

Like Figurehead; Often Handsome, Merely Wood

HOW and then a state Supreme court leans out from its bower of legal verbiage and actually says something. This happened recently in Georgia when the learned gentlemen of the higher bench declared without even using Latin as an anesthetic that the American husband has become a mere figurehead.

It is hardly necessary to explain what a figurehead is. One sees them riding out in front of ships, where they take all the buffeting of the waves but have nothing at all to say as to which way the boat is going. Their heads, though often handsome, are practically always made out of wood.

This merry little metaphor sprouted from a verdict against a man whose wife is alleged to have driven an automobile into another gentleman, apparently under the impression that he was a garage.

Appeals to Higher Court.

The husband promptly appealed to the higher court, his contention being, roughly, that a man able to control his wife's driving belongs in a museum, not a damage suit, and that he was no more responsible for the casualty than was the mute, inglorious license number.

It is quite possible that some of the Supreme court judges' wives drive cars themselves. Anyway, the gentlemen in the black mother hubbards agreed with the husband, let him keep his $3,000, and were probably restrained with difficulty from voting him a bunch of daffodils.

"By sweeping changes in the law governing civil rights of married women, the doctrine of the merger of the civil existence of wife and husband has been practically swept away," said the decision. "While the husband is declared by statute to be the head of the family, he, like the king of England, is largely a figurehead. . . . Therefore a husband is no longer liable under our statutes for the independent torts of his wife not committed by his command or with his consent."

Decision Will Be Surprise.

Thus husbands have been classed at a bound with the great orders of invertebrates, and will doubtless be given room in natural history collections on the same shelf with some of the less assertive mollusks. To a vast number of married men the decision will hardly be a surprise. This process of devolution has been going on for the last fifty years, becoming more and more rapid with each new decade.

The stern Victorian father who carried thunderbolts into the nursery and was called "Sir" by his wife, is grandsire to millions of yesmen who can hardly call a bridge hand their own.

Not so very long ago a husband was held responsible for any crime a wife might commit if he happened to be nearby. As one of the British jurists said, "It is a legal presumption that a wife acts under the coercion or command, actual or implied, of her husband, and therefore is excused from punishment for offenses committed in his presence."

* *

Principle Is Reversed.

Today this perpetual coercion idea is enough to bring a vivid smile to the great stone face. In fact, the principle has really been reversed. Anybody who has watched a wife flag down one of her husband's coral-tinted stories, or heard her apologize for the way he played the dummy, knows that the average wife feels responsible for all the drawing room crimes of her consort.

There doesn't seem to be such a thing as a balance of power between the sexes. Sometimes well adjusted couples find such a balance, but a look down the long files of history shows that it doesn't apply in society as a whole. The struggle to dominate is as old as the rock layers of the Pliocene era. Women like to rule as much as men do, and keeping the girls off the household throne has always been a task that required strenuous measures. Give them an upper hand and their reputation for sweet acquiescence fades out with the speed of a 10 cents store turquoise.

Henpecked Cavemen.

Look at the poor caveman, for instance. Cartoonists usually picture him as fervently caressing his better half with the midriff of an oak tree. As a matter of fact, say many anthropologists, millions of prehistoric men were so henpecked that they looked upon an argument with a saber toothed tiger as a positive recreation. Judging from the horror of woman rule that men have had ever since, those early suffragettes must have thrown a fear into them that went clear down to the lowest cellar of the subconscious.

After the fall of the matriarch men used a number of different methods for keeping their wives out of power. Among the less tidy races brass knuckles and bowstrings were the favorite recipes. Some nations found that the only safe way was to keep the ladies shut up behind portals so that they couldn't get together and match samples of grievances. Others let them come and go with more freedom, but gave husbands the right to sell them into slavery if they rated anything less than 100 per cent in deportment. Also, it was customary to marry them off before they had a chance to look around the world and ask too many questions.

Keeping Girls in Order.

Later on more subtle ways were found for keeping the girls in order. When it became a little crude to lock wives in their houses, somebody hit on the happy idea of shutting them in by sentimentalizing the rôle of homekeeper. The flower of this achievement, however, was that venerable legal growth known as the English common law. Under its provisions a wife had no more chance of anything resembling freedom than Mussolini has of getting a laurel wreath from the Mafia.

Husbands who have a hidden and unused sceptre up their sleeves made a great mistake in not having been born at least fifty years ago. Nowadays the married man who tries to wear a crown around his bald spot is usually startled by seeing his wife pack her trunk, draw out her savings account and fare forth to conduct a profitable tete-a-tete with a typewriter or an adding machine. If you think this could have happened before the common law was modified, you don't know the predicament of the unhappy crinolined sisters.

Job Was No Escape.

According to the old English code a wife had no more personal property than a salt mackerel. She didn't own even the ivory satin gown she was married in or the smelling salts bottle she used when recovering from the vapors. Marriage, according to the law, involved "an absolute gift to the husband of all the goods, personal chattels and estate which the wife was actually possessed of at the time of marriage and such other goods as might come to her during marriage."

This meant that a husband could, if he wished, scatter his wife's money among the night blooming primroses or give it by will to a nest of his own relatives. If he chose to present her family jewels to a lady of gossamer reputation, there was nothing the wife could do about it except have a good cry among the lavender-scented pillow slips.

Escape by means of a job was no escape at all for the mid-Victorian wife. In the first place there were almost no jobs. A lady could become a governess, perhaps, or one of those unhappy shawl carriers known vaguely as "companions." In the second place, even if she did find a position, her husband had a perfect right to appear on pay day and walk off with the stipend. If she left home, she had no legal authority even to take her clothes.

Changes in Divorce.

In return for everything his spouse inherited or earned, the husband was supposed to provide her with the necessities of life. The law, however, had a highly Spartan idea as to what was necessary. Boiled down, a husband's responsibility amounted to little more than keeping his wife out of the workhouse.

Divorce in the mid-Victorian age was not the ever-ready poultice for domestic hurts that it is today. A decree fifty years ago was likely to cost at least $1,000. Since a married woman could own no money and had no right even to her cameo brooch, the problem of raising the price was enough to stagger a court magician. Besides, the law's idea of cruelty centered only around great physical violence. It was not "cruel" to forbid a wife to see her family, to deprive her of access to her children, or even to place a lady of light renown at the head of the table.

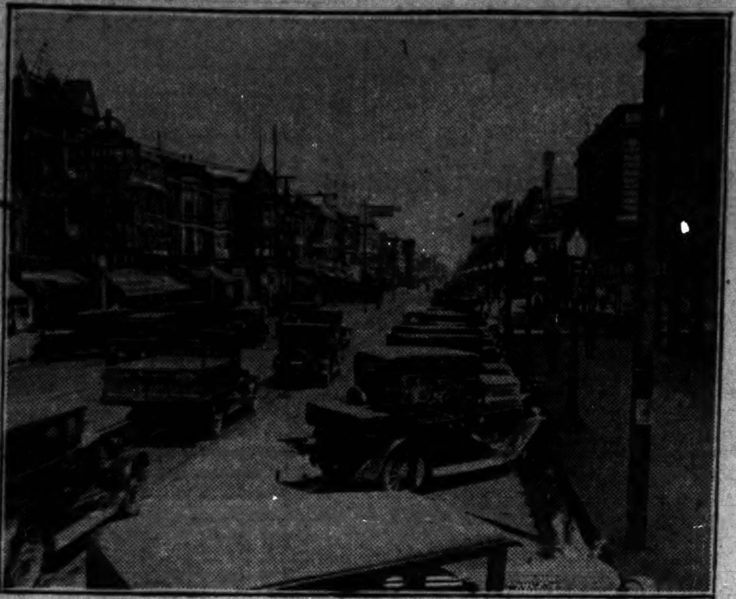
No, the crinolined ladies were not to be envied either in England or in America, where the common law formed the basis of nearly all the state codes. It was the age of bellowing husbands—the time when wives were pallid asteroids circling around the more resplendent planets.

THE WISE OLD OWL.

"What are you going to say when you make your next speech?"

"I don't know," answered Senator Sorghum. "I may be able to arrange matters so that I won't have to make any speech, and so take credit for being some sort of a sphinx."—Washington Star.

THE GREAT OPEN PLACES



THE definition of a street as "a narrow space meant for traffic and used for parking autos" doesn't hold good out Humboldt park way. This view, taken from the park entrance and looking east on North avenue from California avenue, shows how much room there is, even with the diagonal parking and the car tracks. It also shows how much business there is in that section of the city.

YOUNG GARDENERS

"AS ye sow, so shall ye reap," Miss Florence Kiefer is informing the youthful gardeners at Dvorak park, 20th and May streets. And before there is to be any planting the small plots must be thoroughly pulverized. OLDEST ON THE CAMPUS

IT IS from the cupola of Old College, the first building erected on Evanston campus, that the giant candle of purple wax is to be lighted every May 16 at Northwestern university. At the same hour, alumni of the university, scattered throughout the world, will light smaller purple candles. Should Old College, erected in 1855, be torn down, the cupola and candle will be preserved for candle lighting night ceremonies.

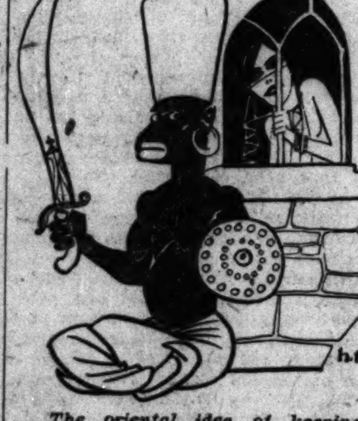
BAD NEWS



The oriental idea of keeping woman in her place would hardly do in the occident. And now an American tribunal has decreed that the head of the house is that in name only.

Bargains! Bargains!

A Dress at a Cut Rate.

Two years ago late in the spring I happened to come across a sale of sample dresses at $10. Only one in the lot interested me—a beautiful blue-violet all wool model. I knew it to be an unusual opportunity so I bought it in spite of the fact that the cool weather was almost over.

I certainly did feel pleased when my sister arrived from New York wearing the same style in black. She was telling me how much she liked it and that she had only paid $32.75 for it. But she had made her purchase early in the season.

Mine has been slightly altered since and is still admired. This surely was a good buy. And at a saving of $20.75.

C. W. E.

At a Dollar Sale.

Recently a department store advertised a dollar sale. I got there early and picked up a dark blue serge Peter Pan dress marked $5.95, a light blue jersey dress trimmed with black velvet marked $5.95, one rose jersey blouse and one apple green jersey blouse marked at $3.50 each. All were size 14 and not soiled. I got them for $1 each—$18.90 worth of goods for $4. I'll say that was some bargain.

S. G.

A Lucky Find.

When furnishing my summer cottage, I went to a second hand store and there found a chest of four drawers that I could use to great advantage in one of the bedrooms. The price was $1.50.

After getting it home the next day I set about to clean it up before I painted it. I pulled out one of the lower drawers and was wiping it out when I noticed the bottom part had slightly warped away from the back of the drawer, leaving quite a long crack. Seeing a tiny piece of metal I proceeded to pry it out.

Imagine my surprise on finding it to be a $2.50 gold piece.

I think I got a bargain, don't you?

G. F. B.

An Antique.

While attending a rummage sale I came across a hand hammered copper pitcher, three pint size. It appealed to my artistic taste, and I bought it for 25 cents.

When passing an interior decorator's and art shop, I showed my find. A ten dollar bill was promptly paid me for it.

I later saw it with antiques displayed in the window of the shop.

Indianapolis Auto Race on Air Wednesday

Thirty-five Stations to Take Broadcast.

For the first time in its history, the Indianapolis motor speed classic on Memorial day, next Wednesday, will be broadcast over a national network. Arrangements have been made to broadcast an eye-witness story of the last hour of the race and the thrilling finish. Graham McNamee, veteran N. B. C. announcer, will be at the microphone for the motor race broadcast, and thirty-five radio stations will be included in the race broadcast group, according to plans.

The finish of the race is expected to go on the air at approximately 3:10 p. m., Chicago daylight saving time. W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, will be one of the stations on the chain.

Famous Drivers to Race.

The entries in the sixteenth annual international sweepstakes, to give the race its full title, include Peter de Paolo, holder of the track record; Cliff Durant, Jimmy Hill, Ira Hall, Cliff Woodbury, Babe Stapp, George Souders and other stars of the motor racing world. Marmen, Duesenberg, Stutz, Cozette, Miller, Green, and Bugatti are among the famous makes of racing cars to be on the track.

There are said to be two important features to the race this year. One is the keen rivalry between the drivers of front wheel drive cars, and the men with the more conventional rear wheel drive speedsters.

Expect New Record.

The existing speed record, an average of 101.13 miles per hour for the five hundred miles, is expected to be shattered this year, according to the race executives. Speed trials of cars already entered in the race indicate greater speed than ever before, the executives said. Pete de Paolo, who drives this year, holds the present record, made in 1925 in a Duesenberg.

The Indianapolis track is two and a half miles around. The announcer will be stationed at a high point where he can watch the entire course and from there will describe the race. At the finish of the classic he will move down to the finish line and will give to the world the names of the drivers as fast as they pass the finish line.

W-G-N Takes Listeners Back to Gettysburg on Memorial Day

As a feature of its Memorial day program, W-G-N is to present a special half hour program, with its sequence laid in civil war days, that will graphically portray three famous incidents of the time, the battle of Gettysburg, Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and the surrender of Lee at Appomattox.

"Atmospheric" music and continuity will be blended into a dramatic thirty minutes that will bring back every detail of these three scenes. While the announcer unfolds the story, alive with America's most thrilling moments, Lincoln will again walk somberly to the rostrum on Gettysburg battle field, listeners will thrill as Pickett's men charge across Cemetery Ridge, and Grant, twisting a cigar endlessly between his teeth, hands back Robert E. Lee's sword.

Special music for this program, tunes from the civil war days, and melodies the boys in blue hummed along the line of march, are being brought out of oblivion by Henry Selinger, program director of W-G-N, and Alfred G. Wathall, the station's arranger. They are being fitted into the continuity, so that the music will carry the drama of each incident related to its highest peak.

W-G-N to Broadcast Gen. Robert E. Lee Program on Tuesday

With its program devoted to a dramatization of events in the life of Robert E. Lee, W-G-N will present a program from New York Tuesday night which will be in the nature of a tribute to the great southern commander.

The famous scene at Appomattox, between Lee and Grant; the day that Lee, refusing to accept the command of the federal armies, turned his face toward his native state of Virginia, and other incidents in the career of the south's greatest figure, will be portrayed.

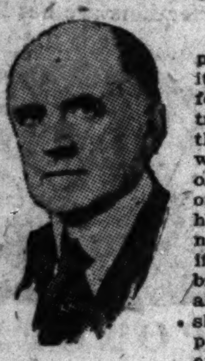
Lessons in Auction Bridge

BY R. M. ROGERS

ARTICLE 10—OVERBIDDING.



B. M. ROGERS.

The holding necessary for an original bid of one has been given and it has also been stated that all bids of one are for information. It can be added that all bids of one subsequent to an original bid of one should impart the same definite information that is shown by the original bid of one.

A bid of one in the third position or a bid of one fourth hand, first and second hands having passed, requires greater strength than a bid of one by first or second hand with this specific exception—to wit: If first hand or second hand makes a bid the partner of the bidder being third or fourth hand as the case may be, does not require for a bid of one the strength required of that position because the partner has already shown by his bid that he possesses a number of tricks that otherwise would have to be assumed.

For example, when first hand bids, he assumes that his partner has three tricks in support of his bid although he doesn't know it. If first hand passes and second hand also, third hand in making a bid must assume that his partner, first hand, has only two tricks. If however, first hand has made a bid, we'll say of one club and third hand can make a bid of one heart, it isn't necessary for third hand to have five tricks in order to be conventional because he knows from the first hand bid that the latter must have three tricks, possibly more in support, of his bid of one heart because first hand has said by his original bid that he had two quick tricks. As first hand will now be the supporting partner, his two quick tricks are to be estimated as four actual tricks in the play of the hand so that third hand can bid with only four tricks instead of the conventional five that he would be required to possess if first hand had passed.

The science of bidding requires that each partner shall pursue the bidding on the basis of the actual number of tricks that can be counted as held by himself and partner and not on how many cards he holds in the suit that is being bid.

When it becomes necessary for a player to bid two over a preceding bid, it must generally be considered a defensive bid and indicates only three tricks in the bidder's hand. These three tricks may be in a six card suit without any quick tricks in the hand or it may be in a five card suit with one and a half quick tricks in the hand, and this is something the partner must keep in mind, particularly if he is going to assist the bid. In bidding and supporting partner's bid, always stick to the number of tricks shown, unless you are bidding for a penalty, which should not be sought except on a rubber game, where, if opponents can go game, they could secure a bonus that would be heavier than the loss you would incur by overbidding. It is often possible to determine from the bidding at the table that an opponent cannot go game, and if so, it is much better bridge to prevent this than to overbid your own hand.

Never overlook that a bid of two over a no trump on the right is not a defensive bid but shows five tricks in the hand or one more than would be required for an original bid, and the player who hasn't five tricks should pass. Neither should it be overlooked that if fourth hand makes a bid over a no trump on his left, the purpose of it is not a request for support by his partner but only to indicate that if the no trump bidder proceeds, fourth hand wants his partner to lead to him the suit he has bid.

There is perhaps no better place than right here to call attention to the average distribution of the suits in making up a hand of thirteen cards. A small percentage of the hand say about 8 per cent are what are known as "freaks," that is with one or two singletons or void of a suit. A little over 20 per cent of the hands consist of two five card suits or three four card suits or a six card suit. About 70 per cent of the hands fall under the designation of normal hands and consist of:

A—Two four card suits, a two and three card suit.

B—One five card suit, one four card suit with two two card suits.

C—One five card suit with two three card suits and one two card suit.

D—A four three three three distribution.

A and C are usually no trump bids if anything, while B is fitted for a suit bid.

A study of these distributions will show that normal side suits of a bidder will permit his trumping the third round unless he hold a "freak" which would permit trumping the second round and frequently the first round. Against "freak" suit bids the opponent's play must be to make the bidder open the side suits himself or he will find himself setting up tricks in the dummy.

Below is given an illustration of progressive bidding, and the proper opening lead.

The Bidding.

S.	W.	N.	E.
P.	1 C.	Dble.	P.
2 S.	3 C.	3 S.	P.
P.	P.

West opens the K of clubs and north and south can make only nine tricks.

A good many people would think that south ought to open the bidding by bidding the spade suit, but south has not the two quick tricks necessary to make a truthful bid of one, nor the ace, king, queen at the top to make a truthful bid of two, and to make a bid of three is a hazard as he has seven sure losers. He can, of course, assume that his partner has the average three tricks which, with six tricks in his own hand, would make a total of nine or enough to make good a bid of three, but such a bid would be too much of a hazard and perhaps interfere with a better bid for the game.

This is a hand where if partner cannot make a bid, there is no possibility of going game, hence he passes. As a matter of fact, if west will open the bidding north will take some action that will make it possible for south to show his spade suit and convey absolute information to his partner that he hasn't the top or he would have made a bid at first opportunity.

East of course has only one probable trick and must therefore refuse to support west's bid unless the bidding reaches the fourth round. West can't bid over three, however, without his partner's support.

G. A. R. Veterans Will Be Guests Tonight at Sunday Evening Club

Veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, who, for twenty-one years, have been guests of honor of the Sunday Evening club's Decoration day service, will be present at the Orchestra hall service tonight, the last program of the present season of the club, although as one of the staunch old commanders expressed it, "we are few in number and becoming feeble." The loyal band hopes, however, that listeners over WMAQ, who broadcast the club, will hear a few strains of "Dixie" from the remnants of the file and drum corps of the boys of '61.

Benjamin F. Affleck, president of the Union League club, and representatives of the American Legion, Advertising post, will be on the program. Fred B. Smith, who has been a key man in many important religious and patriotic movements since his outstanding success with the men and religion forward movement in 1911, will be the speaker on the subject, "Fundamental Patriotism."

Dr. Ludvig Hektoen at WMAQ Tuesday

Dr. Ludvig Hektoen, one of the leading pathologists of the United States and a member of the staff of the University of Chicago, will present an intimate word picture of medical personalities in Chicago's past at 7:10 Tuesday night from WMAQ.

"RADIO CONSCIOUS."

A person who has suddenly become a fan is now politely described as one who is "radio conscious."

Plan Extensive Use of Radio in 3 Ocean Flights

Navy Stations to Stand By to Give Aid.

Washington, D. C., May 26.—(AP)—Leaders in European and American aeronautics are becoming convinced that radio is an almost indispensable safeguard in transoceanic flying.

Preparations are being made to utilize all available radio facilities in three proposed flights over the Atlantic by French, English and Spanish aviators. Commander de Fregate Sable, French naval attaché here, is making arrangements with the navy for extensive communication with the French flying boat on its dash from the Azores to New York this month.

Navy to Stand By.

Piloted by Capt. Paris of the French navy, the ship will carry a relief pilot a radio operator and complete wireless equipment with a range of 800 to 1,000 miles. The French aviation officials consider radio direction finding and weather reports a factor of the utmost importance in long distance flights, Commander Sable says. The flying boat, painted white with huge black seagulls on each side, will be easy to identify, he said.

All radio traffic and compass stations of the navy on the Atlantic coast will be instructed to stand ready to provide the plane with weather reports and other information. During the first ten minutes of each hour the radio compass stations will be devoted exclusively to the service of the flying boat. Operating on 600 meters, these stations will listen for messages, take bearings on the plane and furnish positions to the plane.

R. C. A. to Coöperate.

The weather bureau is planning to give all necessary data and the navy has requested ship and shore stations of the Radio Corporation of America to coöperate.

Navy station commanders have been notified to give similar service to Capt. Frank T. Courtney in his flight from southern England to Halifax. His flying boat will be equipped with a Marconi sending and receiving set operating on 600 meters, and he may carry a direction finder with a range of from 550 to 1,550 meters.

The Spanish hydroplane, which will attempt to hop across the Atlantic in a globe circling flight, will be equipped with radio telegraph, telephone, and compass. The Spanish flyers plan to start late in August.

Allen McQuhae to Give First of New Kent Series Tonight

Allen McQuhae, the Irish tenor who sang the summer series of Atwater Kent concerts two years ago, will broadcast the first of his summer concerts under the same auspices tonight over W-G-N, The Chicago Tribune station on the Drake hotel.

Believing that a radio concert should be arranged with the broadest popular appeal, Mr. McQuhae will sing the lilting lyrics and ballads for which he is noted, including "Absent," "Roses of Picardy," "Little Mary Cassidy," "Tomorrow," "Trees," "I Wonder," and "Molly Brannigan."

"Song writers have unfortunately come under the spell of the dance enthusiasts," he said. "The jazz mad crowd of youngsters throughout the country, forgetting that the great music loving population of America is middle aged.

"The steady increase in radio concerts by the world's greatest opera and concert stars, and the constant improvement in broadcasting generally are marking a swing back to the kind of songs that has gone down through the ages, the old folk songs ballads, and popular lyrics."

Inside the Loud Speaker

BY QUIN A. RYAN.

In the spring the young announcer's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of composing verses. Number one:

THE GOLFING PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

With frowning eye and warning
I have taught my familee
That my golfing tools and baggage
Are invaluable to me.
That the poodle may dissever
All the oriental rugs,
Or the guests may play at soccer
With the bric-a-brac and jugs;
They are free to wreak destruction
In the manner all their own
On the chattels, house, and garden—
But to let my clubs alone!

I've a sassy, classy brassie
Which you couldn't make me trade,
And a flashy, dashy mashie—
Ah, the hazards it has played!
I possess a meaty midiron
And a syncopating spoon,
Plus a dapper, dandy driver
That is like a day in June.
But that was ere the winter
Had descended o'er the lea.
It stalked upon my home, and, O!
The difference to me!

For the clubs I found this morning
Were at rest beneath a trunk,
After all my prim precautions
Just a mellow mound o' junk!
I always lose in winter
My olden bag of tricks,
My stance and grip and putting—
And now I've lost my sticks!
So I must hie and find me
New driver, cleek, and swing,
New follow-through and mashie—
In fact, new everything!

So sings the radio muse!
Now, then, let's have another:

THE LITTLE BROWN PIPE.

The little brown pipe is covered with dust,
But tempting and true it lies;
And the little tin package is red with rust,
And its contents withers and dries.
Time was when the little brown pipe was strong
And tobacco befogged the air;
And that was the time that I thought it wrong,
And kissed them and put them there.

Ah, I'd the aroma of Indic isles
And the breath of the sultan's urn,
And I basked in the glow of the lady's smiles—
But even tobacco worms turn.
O, the years are many, the years are long
Since they vanished in airy—No!
How vapid and vacant my sobbing song!
'Twas only a week ago!

And then there is that racket of getting up in the morning:

THE UP-AND-AT-'EM RISER.

A toast to the spirited riser,
Who carols the coming of dawn,
Who hops out of bed like a geyser
And gambols about on the lawn,
Who somersaults into the office
Abounding in pepper and mirth,
Who yodels a lay at the break of the day—
I think he's the salt of the earth!
(In a pig's eye, I do!)

With early matutinal vigor,
With morning alertness and vim,
With chipper and flourishing figure,
The world is a marble to him.
His zest to be up with the robins,
His 8 o'clock bustle and shove,
His gayety spry and the glint in his eye
Are the elements in him I love!
(Lykelle I do!)

Now me—I arise in a coma;
At breakfast I'm quite a debris.
I grope and depart from my home a
Compassionate figure to see.
It's not until nearly eleven
My energy gets under way—
So I love to have 'round a gazook with a bound
And a zest at the start of the day!
(Grrr! Let me at him!)

Richard Rodgers, Young Composer, on Air Tomorrow

Richard Rodgers, the twenty-six year old genius of musical comedy composition, assisted by an unusual group of vocal and instrumental artists, will be presented to the radio audience tomorrow night when the family party program will be devoted to the favorite songs of his most popular productions, including "Poor Little Ritz Girl," "Dearest Enemy," "Girl Friend," "Peggy Ann," "A Connecticut Yankee," "She's My Baby," and "Present Arms." W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, will carry the program.

The instrumental features will be furnished by Goldman's band, with Edwin Franko Goldman in charge, and by a combined concert, dance and novelty orchestra under the direction of Roderic Graham and Joe Green. Lewis James, tenor, and Olive Kline, famous soprano, who made her first appearance on the radio a week ago will be the soloists.

Mr. Rodgers was born in New York City in 1902, and since his early childhood has made a study of music. He graduated from Columbia university in 1923. While at Columbia he wrote the score for two of the "Varsity Shows," the only freshman to achieve this record.

Rodgers' first Broadway production, "Poor Little Ritz Girl," was produced when he was only seventeen. His activities for the professional stage then ceased until 1925, when he wrote the first "Garrick Gaieties."

Modern Girl Is Superior to Old, Judge's Decree

But Men of Butler Argue to the Contrary.

"RESOLVED, that the modern girl is superior to the girl of fifty years ago," was the subject of a debate between representatives of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. of Butler university. "Ma" Ferguson and "Peaches" Browning were cited as arguments. The men of Butler favored the old-fashioned girl who crocheted by the fireside. The girls won the judges' decision.

SIGNS of spring's cleanup, paint-up spirit are rife on every hand and our citizens are to be commended. Ed Sullivan, the dentist, who plies the forceps at 25 East Washington street, has done his iron hitching post with the horse's head alongside his residence at Ash and Poplar, Winnetka, in azure blue. It is the cynosure of all eyes and, as it's the only hitching post in the north shore suburb, Ed rightfully is proud of it. Naturally. E. L. Wedeles, the plain and fancy wholesale grocer, has finished the water tank on top his building at 312 North Dearborn street in battleship gray, making it one of the handsomest landmarks on either side the river. Royal Allen, the w. k. VICTIM OF SPEEDERS

THE giant hawk being held by Helen Kelly and Marion Lynch found himself supreme as he circled above the lagoon in Washington park and swooped down upon a fish. The hawk was master of the air and the fish was merely at home in the water. But in his greed to bury his catch, the hawk failed to take heed of speeding automobiles along the park drive and death came to him just as it had to the victim in his claws.

How to Get There—Crosstown lines to Madison street. West on Madison to Rockwell, 2600 west.

By The Aviation Editor.

THE final event of the All-Chicago Model airplane tournament, sponsored by THE TRIBUNE, will be held today in the 132d Infantry armory at Rockwell and Madison streets. The competition is a duration flight event for indoor tractor models.

More than 500 boys have entered in this event. Many of them are flying models in competition for the first time, while others are veterans at the game. But one thing is universal among the novices and veterans in the meet—all are out to win and all are keen students of the model game.

All Boydom Interested.

The indoor planes are the easiest of the models to build. They consist of a single stick for a fuselage, one large wing forward and a small elevator plane and rudder on the rear of the fuselage stick. These models are powered as all other types, with rubber strands, and are remarkably light in weight. Most of the indoor planes weigh around one and one-half ounces. They are built of balsa wood, rice paper, and bamboo and are put together with ambroid.

Magic Card for Politeness Goes to Store Clerk

South Sider Wins $50 for Her Courtesy.

By The Politeness Reporter.

THE doorman at the Regal theater agreed that the shining white building at 47th street and South Park way was, indeed, a new structure.

"The Savoy ballroom at the south end opened in November," he advised me. "The Regal theater, here, opened in February, and since then the other stores have started up."

The film being shown was about "a wife and mother who by one swift stroke became an outcast." The matinée audience, in holiday mood, was just going in. South Park way was wearing its rich summer green. Its width afforded a spacious view of blue sky. Business at the soda fountain in the new Walgreen drug store on the corner was rushing, and the clean-cut colored boy, in white cap and apron, was serving customers as though he enjoyed his task.

A huge perpendicular sign announced the location of the South Center Department store and toward it I wended my way.

The Lady in Charge.

"Good afternoon," smiled the woman near the door. "May I be of help?"

"Are you the floor walker?" I asked.

"No," she answered. "I'm in charge of the men's furnishings."

"I think I'll look around," I said.

"Sort of get acquainted," she nodded. "That would be a splendid thing to do. Everything in the store is new. We've only been open since the 17th of March. There's the three floors and the basement, and you can take the elevator to the top floor. The furniture is on the top floor, and it's a wonderful display. On the second floor is women's dresses, millinery, curtains——"

"You know all about the whole store," I interrupted.

"That's because I was here a week before it opened," the woman laughed. "I was here while they decorated. I know every niche and corner. And I take a trip around every once in a while now to keep posted."

* *

Her Life Work.

"You take as much interest as if it was your store," I ventured.

"Just as much," she assured. "I guess it's because I've clerked all my life. I was with Field's 15 years, and I was with H. P. W. and Fannie May."

"Then, of course, you're accustomed to meeting the public," I agreed. "Some people find it difficult."

"Not me," she nodded. "The more the merrier."

"You make me feel," I said, "as if I had entered a hospitable home."

"That's fine," she enthused, "because it means you'll tell your friends that when they want something in my

BOYDOM'S PRIZE JOB

THERE aren't many boys in Chicago who wouldn't just as soon be in Tom Lantry's shoes. Tom is bat boy for the Cubs. He's held the position for the last four years and travels with the team wherever it goes. Standing next to Tom, and arranging the "willows," is Edwin Hartig, assistant. Edwin knows the whims of the players, too.

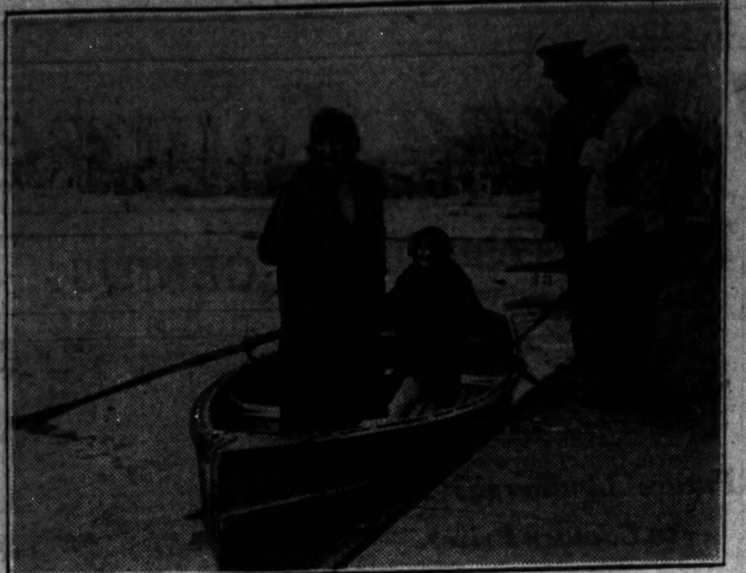
WOMAN TAKES THE HELM



THE good ship 84, with the Misses Sophie Sirkevitz and Marie Woodrich filling the roles of both crew and passenger list, is formally launched in the lagoon at Humboldt park. Sergt. Frederick Blank, of the Royal Northwest (side) mounted, and Boat Tender John Pagliugla do the honors in the absence of a rear admiral's daughter with a champagne bottle.

BARGAINING FOR BLOOMS

MAYBE it's for that little garden in the back yard, or perhaps to place on the window sill. Anyhow the potted plants being sold along market row, Randolph and Halsted streets, appeal to the passersby. The woman at the right, going home with her arms full, believes that in summer time there's nothing like having a bit of green about.

THE RABBIT VILLAGE

IT'S a happy life that the bunnies live in their corner of the zoo at Lincoln park. They have bungalow homes, a city hall, a flour mill, and a schoolhouse for their little bunnies—buildings exactly like the ones human beings erect for their use. Apparently there's nothing going on down town today, so the family in the foreground is staying at home to gossip about the neighbors.

How They Fly Across Oceans Explained Here

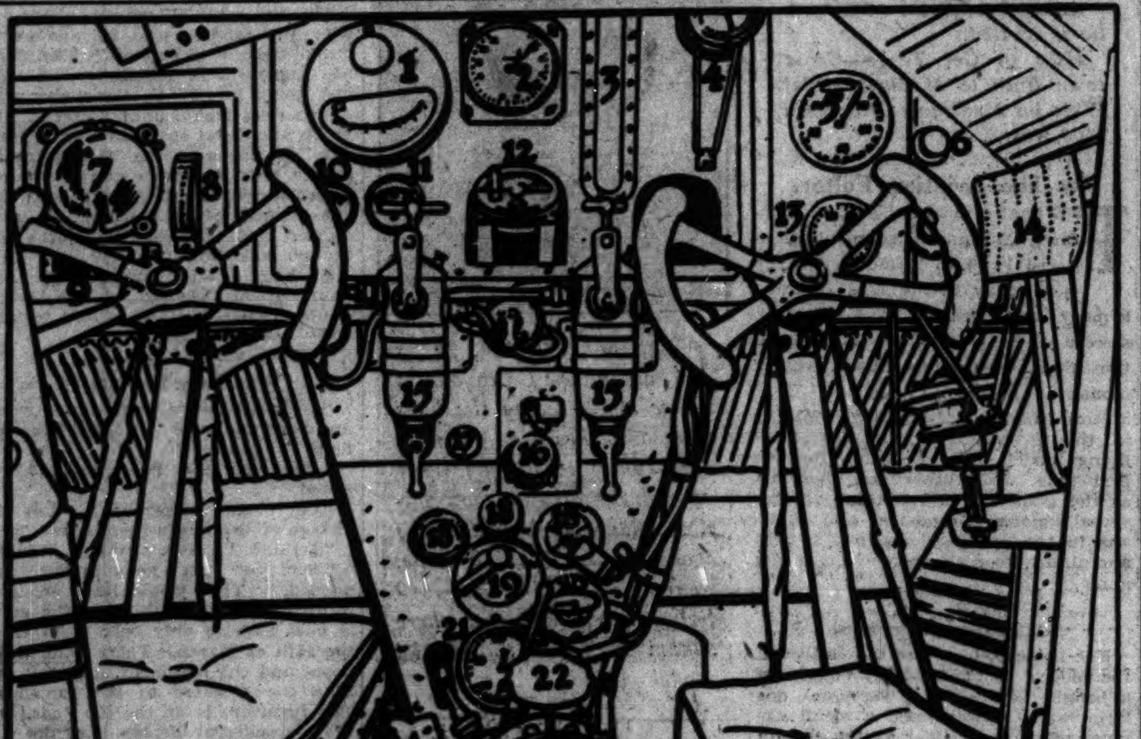
Mystery of Twenty-four Gadgets Is Solved.

SUPPOSE you suddenly woke up and found yourself flying an airplane across the ocean. Yes, you would have your worries. And not the least of these would be a board in front of you, covered with a weird, intricate array of dials, switches, and other gadgets. Each would have a meaning of its own and your life would depend on your being able to interpret and work them properly.

Of course you drive a car and are familiar with the instrument board on almost any old gas buggy. It doesn't do you much good now. You recognize scarcely one of those tricky thingumajigs on the control board of the plane. You stare at them helplessly, as if at some fantastic kind of puzzle.

A lot of work a day people, even if they haven't experienced any nightmare like that, have gazed wonderingly at pictures of the spread of instruments with which the long distance aviator finds his way. The latest ocean spanning bird, the Bremen, has a particularly complete, up to date assemblage of dooflickers on its control board, the mechanical organs of sense by which Koehl, von Huenefeld and Fitzmaurice found their way across the trackless ocean. Look at it and see how much sense you can make of it. Not much! And you may wonder what they could possibly do with all that machinery. Yet every gadget has its place in the scheme of things aerial.

THOSE TRICKY THINGAMAJIGS



THE almost innumerable gadgets on the control board of the modern airplane show at a glance the momentary conditions of direction, speed, altitude, equilibrium, oil supply, ignition, and other factors of vital importance to aviators. But to the average layman they appear to be a hopeless maze or some new and fantastic kind of a puzzle.

* *

Inside Information.

Here, briefly is what they are all about:

No. 1. Ammeter. This is pretty much like the one on your car. It gives you the rate of charge and discharge of your batteries so that you won't take any chance of said batteries going dead.

No. 2. Tachometer. This tells the rate of rotation of the propeller, the number of revolutions per minute. It is comforting to glance at it and see that the old prop is turning around properly and you are making steady progress through the air.

No. 3. Oil Gauge. Tells you how much lubricating oil you have. Your automobile experience has given you plenty of understanding of what happens when your oil runs out. You burn out your bearings and generally put your motor on the bum. Very undesirable in an airplane.

No. 4. Barometer, for high altitudes. Gives air pressure and height at which you are flying. Another instrument registers for low altitudes.

The Aerial Speedometer.

No. 5. Air speed indicator. It tells you how fast you are progressing through the air. That, of course, is not necessarily your real speed. Winds may be holding you back. There is no instrument to show your your ground speed. Over land you can get some idea by looking below, but over water there is only the monotonous face of the sea, which is one of the nervous things about ocean flying.

No. 6. Primer. Same as in automobiles. You give it a push to shoot gas into the motor when it isn't hitting just right.

No. 7. The barometer, for low altitudes.

No. 8. Rate of climb indicator. In a fog you might not know where you were going up or down, or on a level. It indicates whether the plane is tilted with reference to nose and tail—a simple device on the principle of the ordinary carpenter's level.

No. 9. Lateral inclination indicator. This is a similar scale, but laid over on its side. It tells whether the plane is level with reference to the two wing tips, whether it is leaning over on one wing.

No. 10. Oil gauge. Another instrument that registers how much lubricating oil you have left. In case one goes out of order the other works.

No. 11. Thermometer. Gives the temperature of the lubricating oil.

A Marvel of Mechanics.

No. 12. Earth inductor compass, that new marvel in the way of mechanical sense organs. You set it for the direction in which you wish to fly, and whenever you deviate from that direction the needle shifts. One trick about the mechanism is that if the plane should swing completely around 180 degrees and you did not notice it, the compass would seem quite normal. In reality, of couse, it would be working backward. This is said to have been what happened on one of the flights of Mrs. Grayson, the one in which her plane turned back. The machine turned around without anybody noticing the behavior of the compass, with the result that the aviators found themselves flying in the direction opposite that which they had intended. Our plane also has a magnetic compass, seen below chart and right hand control.

No. 13. Altimeter. This tells you how high you are.

No. 14. Chart, which is almost like a map for the trans-Atlantic aviator. It gives him his hourly course. Before he starts he lays out his route and sets down, in terms of hours of flight, the direction in which he is to head from hour to hour. In the actual flight he follows this chart. He flies in the direction indicated during each hour indicated, making allowances as well as he can for side winds which drift him from his course. The detection of side winds has always been one of the important problems of aviation. One of the best ways is the use of smoke bombs—the aviators of the Bremen used them.

Two Strainers.

No. 15. Gas strainers and cut-offs. One for each gas tank. The Bremen carried two. The fuel oil passes through these strainers and is cleared of any extraneous matter that may be in it, and the aviator can shut off either tank at will.

No. 16. Gas throttle. This is what you use to give her the gun. It is just like the hand throttle on the steering wheel of your car.

No. 17. Air throttle, as on automobiles. You use it to make the mixture richer or leaner.

No. 18. Automatic gas gauge. It is a complicated device for registering how much fuel you have. There are two gas gauges, for safety's sake.

No. 19. Ignition switch, which throws on the motor.

No. 20. Tank switch, with which you change from one gas tank to another.

No. 21. Pneumatic gas gauge.

No. 22. Gas pump, used in case the automatic pump fails.

No. 23. Grease gun, for shooting lubricant into the heavier moving parts.

No. 24. Booster, a device for speeding up the magneto.

No Stick in It.

The controls are dual. They look something like automobile steering wheels. The "stick" of ordinary planes, which is merely a rod that you push around to steer the plane, is not used on the big machines. In the present type of control you turn the wheel to steer right or left, and push the wheel and bar backward or forward to go up or down.

The pilots are inclosed in the complicated cockpit up to their necks. Their heads protrude above, so they can have a good look ahead and over the sides.

Now go ahead. You have just awakened and found yourself flying an airplane across the ocean. Now you know what all that junk on the control board is for. Be sure that you don't go wrong with any of those gadgets, or it is liable to be the last mistake you will ever make.

Parliament in Iceland Nearly 1,000 Years Old

REYKJAVIK, Iceland.—(AP)—The "mother of parliaments" is generally understood to be the English parliament, but if age counts the palm goes to the Icelandic alting, which is to celebrate its tenth centenary in 1930.

The alting celebration will be of a national character. Many families in Iceland can trace their ancestors back to the first legislators of the Saga isle. The vikings who settled there understood the necessity of law and order, and it was from Iceland that the so-called Norse law went to Scotland.

The alting was instituted in 930 on the plain of Thingvalla, and the story of the Ting is being written by Benedict Sveinsson, the president of the lower house. He is assisted by a bevy of historians appointed by the government.

The festivities in connection with the jubilee will be held on the historic spot at Thingvalla, a well nigh ideal setting, giving the visitors a view of the beautiful scenery of Iceland.

A large foreign invasion is expected on this occasion. Icelandic-Americans will form a great body of these visitors. Many thousands are living in the United States and in Canada and style themselves "West-Icelanders."

IT IS from the cupola of Old College, the first building erected on Evanston campus, that the giant candle of purple wax is to be lighted every May 16 at Northwestern university. At the same hour, alumni of the university, scattered throughout the world, will light smaller purple candles. Should Old College, erected in 1855, be torn down, the cupola and candle will be preserved for candle lighting night ceremonies.

One Out of Seven German Unions Goes onto Rocks

BERLIN.—(AP)—Every seventh German marriage ends in the divorce court, according to latest statistics. Up to the war it was one in 200, since when divorce figures have risen rapidly, mostly as a consequence of ill assorted "war" matings.

The marriage market, however, is busier than ever, and matrimonial knots are tied light heartedly. Berlin civil registry offices were so overrun between Easter and Whitsun with people anxious to get married that there was a delay of seven weeks for the necessary documents to be made out.

The average ages of the partners are also lower. Before the war it was 30 for the bridegroom and 24 for the bride; now it is 27 and 22, respectively, although there are many boy and girl marriages also. Cases of youths of 18 wedding girls of 15 are not uncommon.

The American "companionate" marriage idea was hotly discussed some time ago. Some writers were in favor of giving it a fair tryout, but there was much criticism on the part of the religious section of the community.

They Still Drink Lindy Cocktails in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY.—(AP)—Lindbergh's name continues to adorn at least one, perhaps more, of the Mexico City saloons that tore down their former signs and relabeled their places in honor of the famous flyer when he was here last December.

It reads: "Lindbergh Cantina. Saloon. Barroom. Drinks."

Also, a "Lindbergh cocktail" was invented during the visit of that renowned but abstemious young man. It had quite a vogue, despite its devastating qualities.

The Mexicans were determined to honor Lindbergh to the utmost, even if it involved gulping liquid dynamite. Of course, some of the native drinks had given them pretty good training.

Anyhow the Lindbergh cocktails were taken bravely. You can still get one if you can stand it. It consists of a shake of a little of everything on the shelves.

The island is situated in Lincoln park, between Fullerton parkway and Diversey parkway, on the outer drive.

LAST OF HIS TRIBE

JOSEPH HAND has come to dust off the wooden Indian which has stood in front of the cigar store at 1526 North Clark street since 1886. There was a time when the symbol was a common sight, but in late years it has vanished from American life, along with its living brethren. Snowshoe Celebrates His Wife's Birthday

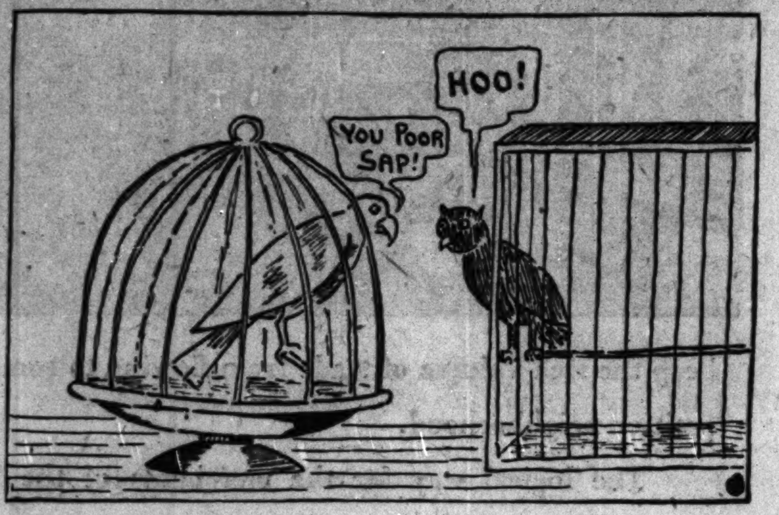
But the Pets He Buys for Her Put On a Peripatetic Petting Party

By Snowshoe Al.



YOU POOR SAP!
HOO!

YESTERDAY afternoon I was parked on the back porch, smoking a bum cigar, when down the alley comes my friend McConnell, the famous Sash and Door peddler. Mr. McConnell was driving the six cylinder coffee grinder which he insists is an automobile. The guy that made that machine certainly started out to manufacture a cement mixer, but changed his mind before the job was finished. Mac crawled out of the benzine chariot and sat down beside me. The boy was sure perspiring.

"What's the idea of loafing on the back porch?" says he.

"O, I was just sitting here thinking," says I. "You see, this morning just before my wife went down town she reminded me that today was her birthday. I was thinking maybe I should buy her something."

"It's a terrible hot day," says he, wiping some more perspiration off his map. Then he gazed at me in a most appealing manner. "Excuse me for mentioning the fact," says he, "but you smell like beer!"

"Yeh, I just drank a quart," says I, yawning. Mr. McConnell moaned in a most pitiful manner and then registered anticipation by running his tongue all over the front of his head in a wide circle.

"D'yuh know where we can buy some more?" asks this hombre.

"I do not," says I, so this bozo heaves a flock of dismal sighs and then registers despair by hanging his tongue over the front of his shirt. "[illegible]," I repeats, "I don't know where you can buy any, but you can have some for nothing if you go in the kitchen. There's sixteen more quart bottles in the icebox."

"Why, you @$@$@$@$@$@$@!!!" says he, crawling weakly through the door. I crawled in right behind him and we lapped up Pretzel Water until our ribs began to float. Then we slid out the back door and walked down the alley.

"What kind of a birthday present—hic—was you thinking of buying for—hic—your quarrel partner?" inquires Mr. McConnell.

"I've often heard her mention that she would like a white kitten with a pink ribbon around its neck," says me.

The Beasts and the Birds.

We went to a pet shop in the neighborhood and looked in the window, but the guy evidently only had white kittens with blue ribbons on their necks, so we moved on. We finds another animal factory about a mile further down the street. Well, folks, the proprietor of this dump was positively intoxicated. He had a bottle of home brew in each hand, and he gave three rousing cheers when we entered his wigwam.

"Have you got a white kitten with a pink ribbon on its neck?" asks me.

"No," says he, "but I've got a black kitten with a pink ribbon. I also got a white kitten which ain't got no ribbon at all."

"Neither of 'em will do," says I; "I guess I'll buy a dog instead." So I picks a flea incubator which is supposed to be a Boston terrier, although he looks more like a sick soup bone. Then we makes a great discovery. We discover we could take the pink ribbon off the black meow and put it on the white meow. We was amazed at our own cleverness; in fact, all three of us shook hands. So I also bought the white kitten.

"Gimme a bird," says Mac; "a big, costly bird."

"Well," says the owner, "I have some nice canaries—"

"I don't want none of these little things!" howls Mr. McConnell; "slip me something nice an' big! Gimme that parrot!"

The guy stuck the parrot in a large wooden cage and handed him to Mac. Mac handed him to me.

"What's the idea?" howls me.

"Give him to your wife with my compliments," says Mac. Then he turns to the proprietor and says: "This guy is one of my best friends, and today is his wife's birthday. Any wife of his is a friend of mine, which is the reason I bought her this parrot—"

* *

Two Little Love Birds.

"What!" yells the intoxicated owner; "is this his wife's birthday? Well, you sure are a regular guy to buy her that nice parrot! You're a swell—hic—friend! I shall now enter into the—hic—spirit of things an' send that young lady—hic—a present myself."

Well, damn if he didn't reach up on a shelf and bring down a goofy looking hoot owl! He stuck him in another wooden cage and handed him to me.

"I'm not sure my wife would care for a hoot owl," says me, rather [illegible]. A moment later I was sorry I spoke. A hurt look appeared in the proprietor's eyes. His huge frame shook with suppressed sobs. Then he hung his head, and several large tears rolled off his chin.

"I meant well," he sniffed. "Of course, he ain't worth much, but, after all, it ain't the—hic—value of a thing—it's the spirit in which it is—hic—given. Sniff, sniff."

"I didn't mean to hurt your feelings," says I; "in fact, the wife will probably like him, because he's so different. I'll take him, but I don't known where I'm going to keep all these things—we already own a canary bird and a turtle."

"Gimme a pair of lovebirds!" yells Mr. McConnell, who was still in a delirious buying fever. "I just remembered that my girl likes lovebirds. I think she's already got a pair, but this will make a foursome."

Believe me, we had a helluva time getting all that live stock over to my apartment, but we did it! We put the parrot's cage and the hoot owl's bungalow side by side on the dining room table. We put the kitten in the bedroom and the Boston soup bone in the kitchen. Then Mr. McConnell did a foolish thing. He dumped his two lovebirds into my canary's cage. Caruso (that's our canary's name—we call him Caruso because he don't sing any more) didn't like the idea of sharing his home with this pair of affectionate poultry, and he began to act real peeved.

"Hey," says I, "what's the idea of dumping your Romeo & Juliet in with my Caruso?"

"O," says Mac, "I just wanted to see how my birds are going to look in a large cage."

"$@$@$@$@$@$@$@$@$!!!!" says the parrot.

"Did you hear him?" grins Mac. "Wasn't that cute?"

"Yeh, my wife is going to love that guy," sneers me; "he's wonderful!"

"Wonderful, wonderful!" squawks the parrot; "wonderful, wonderful!"

"HOO! HOO!" says the hoot owl. "HOO!"

"Not you, you flat faced $@$@$@!" says Mr. Parrot.

The Racketeers.

Just then we heard a terrible racket in the bedroom. It seems that the Boston flea incubator has wandered out of the kitchen and has located the kitten. The battle started under the bed and ended in the clothes closet. We arrived just in time to be too late, so we took $6 worth of cat and dumped it in the garbage can.

All this racket inspired our canary and filled him with a lust for battle, so he decided to mop up the lovebirds which now shared his kitchenette apartment. Mr. Caruso is no Walter Raleigh—he never was much on this courtesy stuff—and therefore he walloped the lady first. Little Miss Juliet folded up like an accordion and passed out. Little Romeo flopped wildly around the cage, looking for a hole marked "exit." He didn't find one, so it was just too bad! We put the two lovebirds in the garbage can with the kitten.

"Won't the janitor be surprised when he takes the lid off that can tomorrow morning?" grins Mr. McConnell.

In the meantime the Boston pup was looking around for more trouble. He found it. Little Hercules (that's the name of my pet turtle) crawled out from under the davenport and yawned. Mr. Pup barked joyfully, leaped into the air, and landed with his forepaws on the young gentleman's shell.

Now, Hercules is naturally a peaceful guy, but he hates to have anybody lean heavily on his roof, so he whirled suddenly and snapped. Believe me, we didn't name him Hercules for nothing! He can chew a flatiron into pulp. Mr. Pup squealed, tore through the back door, ran down the alley, and disappeared around a corner with Mr. Hercules still hanging gleefully to his nose.

"Well," says I, "I'm glad they decided to finish the battle some other place, because I don't believe we could have got the pup into the garbage can anyhow."

"$@$@$@$@$@$@@!" squawks the parrot in the dining room.

"HOO! HOO!" yelps the hoot owl; "HOO!"

"You, you flat-faced $@$@$@$@!" remarks Mr. Parrot.

Mr. Owl blinked his dreamy eyes several times. Then he stuck one of his sharp talons through the bars of Mr. Parrot's cage and slipped him a beautiful wallop in the back of the neck. Then, just to prove how versatile he was, he presented the talkative boy with a couple uppercuts and several right hooks.

"Yes, sir," grins Mr. McConnell, as he dumped the parrot in the garbage can, "the janitor is gonna get a large surprise tomorrow morning!"

* *

Who's Whose?

A few minutes later my wife came home, so we told her the hoot owl was her birthday present.

"I didn't say it was my birthday, you dumb bum," says her, "I said it was my mother's birthday."

"I must have misunderstood you," says I. "Well, give him to her."

"HOO!" says the hoot owl.

"You!" says I, "you flat faced $@$@$@$@!"

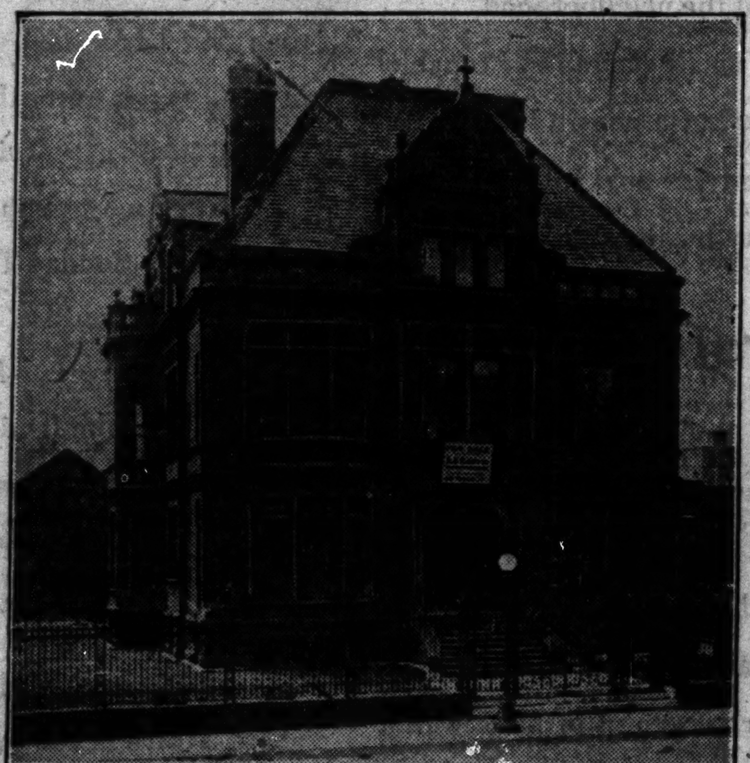
FAMOUS HOMES



THE Chicago residence of John W. Gates, daring financier, still stands at 2944 Michigan avenue. Mr. Gates' "betcha-a-million" activities kept him much of the time in New York, where he and Mrs. Gates, formerly Delorra R. Baker, resided at the Waldorf-Astoria, but during the 'nineties this was the place they really called home. The "for sale" sign above the door hints of further changes in a changing world.

Several Services.

Some three weeks ago I bought a pair of shoes. After one week's wear I thought the shoes not so comfortable as they had been, but as I could not afford to throw them away, I continued wearing them. Finally, in great discomfort, I went to the store where I purchased them, and asked if anything could be done for me. A polite floorman ushered me to a seat, saying a Mr. A. would take care of me.

On hearing what my complaint was Mr. A. promptly measured my foot, and put on another pair of shoes. I asked if they would allow me anything at all on the other pair, whereupon I was informed it was an even exchange. I was surprised, and pleased, of course. Who would not be? And so I walked out shod in new comfort. But after walking around the block a few times, I realized that despite another fit, something was not just right, and thought it took much courage, I again went back to the store. Instead of seeing disgust or ill humor registered on the face of the man who had just waited on me, I saw that he was ready to give me attention in the same courteous manner as before. Another pair was put on my feet, and when I asked to have a heel pad put in, it was done. When I asked what I owed, I surely thought I would have to pay the price of a new pair, plus extras. But the answer was as before—nothing. I sat stunned for a moment, and again asked the price—this time opening my purse. Again the same answer—nothing.

I could find no words to express my thanks. Never have I met with such courtesy. I am still wondering if it can be true, but on looking down at my feet there are the new shoes.

At no time did I expect to get something for nothing, and I cannot understand how any firm can afford to give it. Suffice it to say, I shall always be thankful for this service, and refer others to this store. F. J.

Coat Replaced.

I entered a leading men's store in the loop three years ago and bought a winter overcoat for $50. A year's wear proved disastrous; cuffs and collars were a sight, and pockets were badly worn.

I took the coat back, complained to the head clerk who, much to my surprise, within a half hour's time, saw that I had a brand new garment!

And what a coat, this time! I have worn it to work every day through two of Chicago's winters and it will easily see me through another.

The store has my constant patronage and that of many friends through the splendid consideration given me.

Newest French Stamps to Help Retire Bonds

PARIS.—(AP)—Stamp collectors and the public will get an additional chance to help the French government retire some more bonds through the issuance of a new special stamp. It is being sold at all postoffices until June 1, and the government's advertising urges all collectors to buy early to avoid the rush.

The new stamp will sell for 10 francs, or 40 cents, with a postal value of 6 cents. The other 34 cents will go to a national amortization fund, which has the job of reducing the national debt by buying in bonds and accepting gifts from the public.

A whole series of ordinary stamps, surcharged, already is sold by all postoffices. The surcharge of from one-half franc to 2 cents goes to the fund. Many millions of francs have been raised in that way, much of it from stamp collectors.

Offer Prize for Scheme to End Street Noises

BERLIN.—(AP)—Germany is starting a war against street voices by opening a competition for the best scheme to abolish the nerve-racking clatter and din of the big cities.

Naturally, street noises are mostly caused by wheeled traffic. Grinding of street cars around curves, jolting of badly sprung vehicles, banging of garbage cans on pavements, and noisy exhausts from old motors are all on the blacklist, as well as street criers and the deafening chorus of motor horns generally.

All these noises are measurable by an instrument called the Backhausen sound meter. Traffic experts claim that most street accidents are attributable to the nerve-destroying racket which is making city life hideous.

Under the auspices of the Association of German Engineers a prize of $200 is offered for the best solution.

Magic Card for Politeness Goes to Store Clerk

South Sider Wins $50 for Her Courtesy.

line to come and see me. I intend to be clerking here the next 50 years."

"I'll go on through the store at your suggestion," I said.

"You'll be repaid. I'll point out the way to the elevator. And I wish you'd take a look at our offices."

Up to the Top.

I left the woman who had charge of the men's furnishings, wondering if it were possible that she had been aware I was The Politeness Reporter. No, the magic card was hidden deep in my inside pocket. But had the woman known my identity she could not have put forth more effort to be interested in my behalf. It was almost as if I had entered with the magic card displayed like a tag on tag day.

I took the elevator to the furniture department. Then I came on down the various floors.

The woman demonstrating the electric washer told me, of all the 167 varieties, she thought the machine beside here was the best on the market.

"I know what it is to wash without one and what it means to wash with one," she explained.

Also I learned about goldfish from the display in the basement.

"Yes," agreed the saleswoman, "they do seem to be popular these days. They're real pets and take so little care."

There was a long tank of water filled with several varieties of fish, and a red light lending a glow to the pool. The saleswoman pointed out the fantails and the shubunkins, and the Japanese nymphs as they swam by.

* *

And Down Again.

Customers came, and I went back to the first floor to see if the saleswoman at the men's furnishings had changed during my absence. She met me with the same friendly smile.

"Now that you've been through the store, how do you like it?" she inquired.

"Everything was just as you said," I agreed.

I waited until she had finished with a customer. Then I said:

"If you're here the next 50 years, do you suppose you'll keep as good natured?"

"If I find my good nature failing, I won't let anybody know it," she laughed. "I've been clerking now for—I'll tell you the year I was born. And I started working early." Her tone became serious. "My father died when I was just a tot. We lived out on the northwest side then. I was going to school at Walnut and Kedzie. I'd like to have stayed on. We all feel that way when we look back. Three dollars a week at the time meant a lot to the family. But I was going to tell you the year I was born."

"Not if you don't want to," I hedged. "There's a belief that women don't like to tell their ages."

"I was born in 1880."

"What's your recipe for seeming twenty years younger?" I gasped.

"Work," she replied—"work and keeping interested in something besides myself. And there's another thing. It's that I don't look upon my job as just being here for a day."

* *

The Card Appears.

"It's all very wonderful," I meditated. "I wish I had a store and it was full of clerks striving as hard as you to please. But I'm simply The Politeness Reporter."

"Honest!"

I went ahead and wrote her name and address on the magic card—Mrs. Lottie Babeuf, 5604 South Albany avenue.

She wanted Mr. Weil, the department buyer, to know about the magic card, and Mr. Dennis, the superintendent.

"She's told me all about the store," I said to Mr. Dennis.

"And my age, too," laughed Mrs. Babeuf.

A Dress at a Cut Rate.

Two years ago late in the spring I happened to come across a sale of sample dresses at $10. Only one in the lot interested me—a beautiful blue-violet all wool model. I knew it to be an unusual opportunity so I bought it in spite of the fact that the cool weather was almost over.

I certainly did feel pleased when my sister arrived from New York wearing the same style in black. She was telling me how much she liked it and that she had only paid $32.75 for it. But she had made her purchase early in the season.

Mine has been slightly altered since and is still admired. This surely was a good buy. And at a saving of $20.75.

C. W. E.

At a Dollar Sale.

Recently a department store advertised a dollar sale. I got there early and picked up a dark blue serge Peter Pan dress marked $5.95, a light blue jersey dress trimmed with black velvet marked $5.95, one rose jersey blouse and one apple green jersey blouse marked at $3.50 each. All were size 14 and not soiled. I got them for $1 each—$18.90 worth of goods for $4. I'll say that was some bargain.

S. G.

A Lucky Find.

When furnishing my summer cottage, I went to a second hand store and there found a chest of four drawers that I could use to great advantage in one of the bedrooms. The price was $1.50.

After getting it home the next day I set about to clean it up before I painted it. I pulled out one of the lower drawers and was wiping it out when I noticed the bottom part had slightly warped away from the back of the drawer, leaving quite a long crack. Seeing a tiny piece of metal I proceeded to pry it out.

Imagine my surprise on finding it to be a $2.50 gold piece.

I think I got a bargain, don't you?

PROSPERITY awaits the merchants who sell to the "cities within the city!"

WITHIN the last generation Chicago has risen to a position of dominance as the center of the vast trade empire of the middle west. As the city has grown to this proud point, Chicago's neighborhoods have developed from sparsely settled districts to populous, thriving communities of major commercial importance.

Today these neighborhoods are cities in themselves. They are "cities within the city," equal in population, buying power and business possibilities to the most prosperous of the smaller cities of the country.

A neighborhood of 110,000 people! . . . . .

Compare, for example, the district of Edgewater with South Bend, the motor metropolis of northern Indiana. In the narrow strip of land along the lake that comprises Edgewater live almost 27,000 families—more than 110,000 people! This population is greater than that of the entire city of South Bend! These people are above average in buying power—in the rents they pay, in the number and quality and variety of things they buy. They are all concentrated within a small area, in convenient shopping distance of the merchants of the neighborhood.

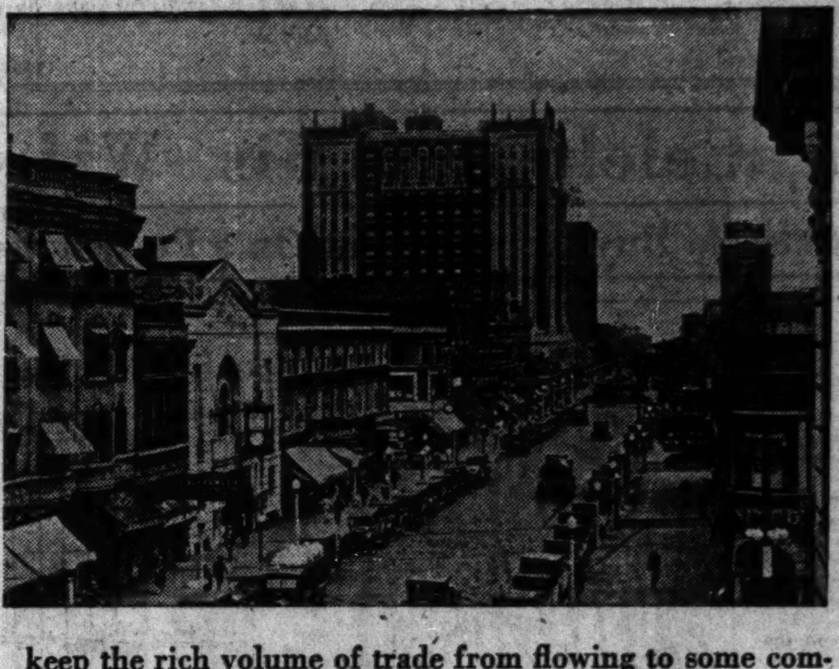
That is Edgewater. Not a small community capable only of supporting a few shops, but a city in itself, with thousands upon thousands of buyers able to bring prosperity to a thriving, modern city business district.

Metropolitan profit possibilities . . . . .

Every neighborhood in the city is in the same position as Edgewater—some to a greater, some to a lesser degree. Merchants who have thought of their communities as restricted territories containing only a few hundreds of customers must enlarge their viewpoint to succeed in a big way. They must see their neighborhoods as actual cities and themselves as metropolitan merchants with opportunities for profit equal to those of any big city retailer.

Make them come true!

Of course, it is not possible to change this group of potential buyers into actual purchasers without effort. No merchant in a city of 100,000 people can get business without going after it. But it can be obtained—and must be to keep the rich volume of trade from flowing to some competitive neighborhood.



WILSON AVENUE Looking East From Broadway

The logical way for the merchants of the "cities within the city" to realize on the big business possibilities their neighborhoods have to offer is to advertise. And the most effective, economical medium to use is the Metropolitan Section of The Sunday Tribune.

A proud record of selling success . . . . . .

No newspaper in the country can exceed The Tribune as a sales influence. The success of scores of large advertisers year after year has proved that. And in the short time that has passed since the Metropolitan Section was instituted, the stores that have used it have known the increased prosperity Tribune advertising brings.

In the most populous and wealthy neighborhoods of the city The Sunday Tribune has an almost complete coverage of the families. The Metropolitan Section reaches all of these buyers. Edgewater retailers can reach more than 93% of the families of the neighborhood, and 200,000 more living within convenient trading distance. Merchants elsewhere enjoy equal opportunity.

Share in it during 1928! . . .

This unusual advertising opportunity is yours for about a third of the cost of full Sunday Tribune coverage. This low cost enables you to use Tribune selling power aggressively—gives you access to the full trading possibilities of your entire territory.

Ask a Tribune man to call and explain how you can profit by selling to the "cities within the city." Phone Superior 0100 NOW!

She Takes Over His Business—and Builds It Up

Wife Succeeds Her Invalid Husband at the Helm.

By Marion Reagan.

SOME day someone is going to be honest about honest poverty and expose it for the highly unsatisfactory thing it is, as anybody who has ever enjoyed it will attest. Of course, "enjoy" is the wrong verb, since there is no enjoyment in it and small comfort except for the rather dubious comfort vouchsafed by religionists who say it is the wicked that flourish like the green bay tree and that the rich man will enter the kingdom of heaven only with the greatest difficulty.

Since Biblical times a halo has surrounded indigence which not even this materialistic age has been able to dissipate. Anybody starting an idealistic enterprise, for instance, is sure to be given credit for his idealism so long as the enterprise is a failure financially. If it begins to make money, then the ideals are questioned, for, according to the popular notion, you cannot serve two masters. You can't make money and keep your ideals, too.

A man on a northbound bus the other day was trying to comfort his small daughter, who was gazing longingly at the opulence displayed along Lake Shore drive. He replied to her question of, "Gee, dad, don't you wish we were rich?" with the old one about money not being everything. He hinted that money indeed was nothing at all. "Uneasy lie the heads that wear the chic hats, my dear; be dowdy and you'll be sure to be virtuous," was his comforting advice, which undoubtedly contains a great deal of truth, particularly in the latter clause, but it is far from being the whole story.

Indeed, money is held in such disrepute that few will admit, even though the major portion of their time is spent in its accumulation, that its pursuit is one of their primary interests in life. Women particularly shy before such an accusation. They will give a thousand reasons for taking up this or that occupation, but almost never will they say their main interest in the business is the money it brings them.

Her Husband's Helper.

But not so in the case of Mrs. Marion Winship. She admits that it was wanting money that took her into business, that the love of making it keeps her there, and that the hope of making a great deal some day eggs her on. She is not numbered among the city's richest women, nor even among the near-rich. She lives in an unpretentious apartment at 447 Fullerton parkway. The car she drives is not of the de luxe class, but, considering that she has been in business only three years and that in those three years she has had to be head of the house as well as of the business and nurse to an invalid husband, her present prosperity is not to be sneezed at. She is in the manufacturing business, making cabinets out of sheet metal.

Married at 17, she had no training either in business or in any profession before she became Mrs. Winship. The wedding bells, as a matter of fact, were rung in while the school bells were still clanging, and the high school education which Cupid ruined was continued after marriage by private study. All that was in New York and a long time ago. Mrs. Winship won't tell how long ago, and there is no reason why she should. Anybody with the courage to branch out into a brand new enterprise and take on the entire responsibility of it alone is young whether she was born in the nineteenth or the twentieth century. A near enough date of the wedding is 1907, when the newlyweds came to Chicago to build a fortune in the western city. They have lived here ever since, but because of ill health, the fortune they had in mind never got built, although they enjoyed a comfortable, even prosperity. Three years ago, Francis Winship's health completely failed and the bread winning was plainly up to his wife. Boldly, without a tremor, she set about establishing herself in the manufacturing business. All she knew about commerce she had learned from cooperating with her husband in his undertakings.

And on this point she has a word to say to wives. It is, that every woman should take an active interest in her husband's affairs, not only because she never knows when accident is going to throw her into his place but because such an interest makes for greater congeniality.

Through long years of battling with illness, she has a proper appreciation of the importance of health. Like Carlyle, she realizes that "the healthy know not of their health, but only the sick." Through caring for her husband in all the years of his illness she knows what a fragile thing health is and that on it everything else in life largely depends. She has learned also how necessary it is to have money and what a good thing in itself money is.

Just for Today.

Mrs. Winship is a tall, rather stoutish woman with the well known school girl complexion. Her hazel eyes sparkle when she smiles and have a fascinating way of changing color as the light strikes them. Her hair is a deep, dark brown, streaked with gray. She talks with the barest trace of an Eastern accent, and because her voice is low and resonant it is pleasing to listen to her. It is especially pleasing, and interesting, to hear her tell how she made a success of manufacturing when so many others have failed.

"If I have succeeded in my venture it is first because I have worked hard and second because of my philosophy of life which is entirely contained in the old hymn, 'Just for Today.' I try not to think beyond tomorrow unless I have to. Each day I start out with a definite plan of what I must accomplish that particular day. I don't allow myself to think of yesterday and what I should have done then or what I might do next week. It is today only that counts, and if you make each day's work right the total is bound to add up on the credit side in the long run."

She rides horseback for exercise and keeps house for diversion, but nine-tenths of her time is spent in hunting up new business.

SUCCESS

Mrs. Marion Winship, who "succeeded," in more ways than one, when her husband was taken ill and she was forced to take over his manufacturing business. And she did it without previous training in trade or profession.

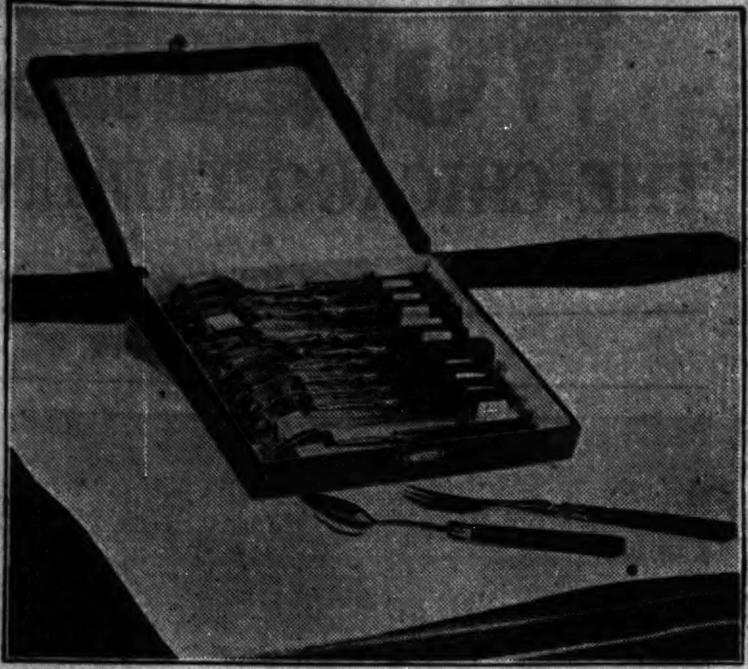
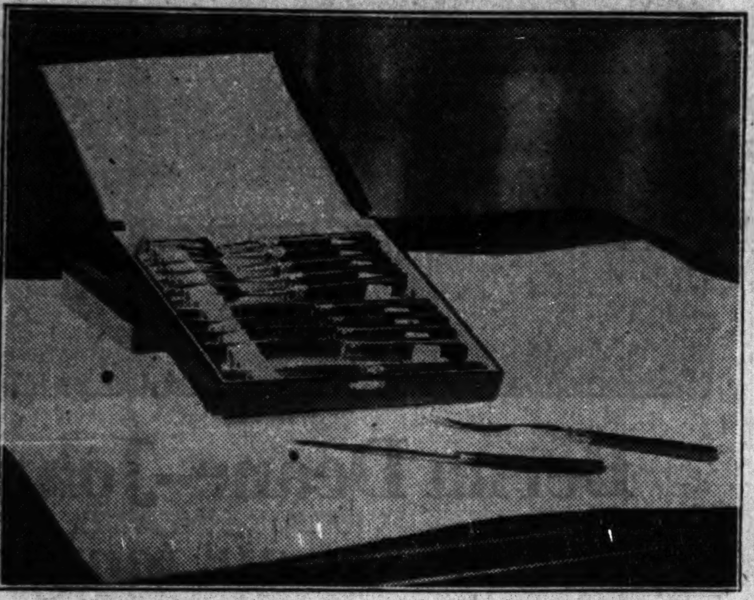
Odds and Ends from the Shopping Centers



A rather amusing way to serve dessert is with these spoons and forks of French gilt with colored handles. The colors can be had to match or contrast with the dishes. They are especially effective with crystal plates.



Knives and forks with the same colored handles may be used for fruit when it is served for dessert—which is not done often enough—and the stains of the juice will not make them black.

A coat of soft tan woolen, trimmed with beige fox, and a close fitting felt hat to match. Chic for all daytime wear.

Turk Officials Must Marry Native Women

ANGORA, Turkey.—(AP)—The Turkish government prohibits marriage of ambassadors or high government officials to foreign wives. The breaking of this rule entails dismissal, as in the recent case of a prominent officer of the aviation corps here who return from a mission abroad with a German mate. Infringement of the law has been winked at, however, in cases where the foreign wives are wealthy.

Just How Many Noted Authors Do You Know?

First Names Given; Guess the Last Names.

The average general reader carries in his head several hundred titles of books and plays, and as many names of authors. But to couple the various authors with their respective works, and do it correctly every time, is a test which few can pass without slipping.

Here are 100 titles of books and plays, to which are attached the first or baptismal names of their respective authors. You are to supply in each instance the missing family name.

Credit yourself with one for each author named correctly. A score of 50 may be regarded as passable, but 75 is more like it, and 90 or even 100 are by no means unthinkable.

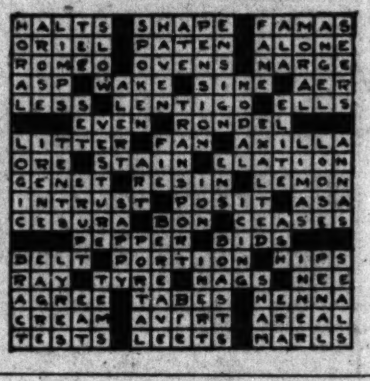
ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE



GOOD AUTHORITY.

Dora one morning refused to get up. When all the other means had failed to coax her out of bed, her uncle, a very distinguished man of great learning, was called.

"Why won't you get up, my child?" he asked.

"Why, Uncle Henry, didn't you tell me to do what the Bible says?"

"Yes certainly."

"Well, the Bible doesn't believe in early rising; it says it's a waste of time."

Now the uncle is something of an authority on the Bible, but he was not equal to Dora. For once in his life he was nonplussed.

"You listen then," went on the child in reply to his exclamation of astonishment; and opening her Bible she read the second verse of the 127th Psalm with great emphasis: "It is vain for you to rise up early."—Kansas City Star.

Bolivian Troops Have Shoes but Go Barefoot

LA PAZ, Bolivia.—(AP)—Shoe leather is not wasted when the Bolivian troops go on the march. The troopers remove their shoes and carry them in their belts. Some go barefoot; others use sandals. The Bolivian army is made up almost entirely of Indians, who are not accustomed to footgear.

Future Seaport Will Be Airport Also, Predicted

BERLIN.—(AP)—The seaports of the future will look greatly different from those of today. They will be air and seaports combined.

This is the opinion held by Dr. Adolf Rohrbach, constructor of the Rohrbach seaplanes, one of which is to start for America next autumn.

"Just as the seaports of the world underwent a big change with the invention of the steamboat, so, too, will they undergo profound rearrangements when trans-oceanic traffic through the air becomes an established fact," he told the Associated Press representative.

"There will, for instance, have to be space for emergency seaplanes sent out to assist trans-ocean planes in distress. It is conceivable that a big trans-ocean plane may have to go down on the water. Instead of keeping the passengers waiting, emergency planes will come to their rescue.

"There will have to be added to the equipment of seaports many things necessary for air navigation. Tanking facilities, repair shops, special dry docks for seaplanes, airdromes for land planes which can immediately take the arriving passenger into the interior of the country—these are some of the additions with which the seaports will be equipped."

'Head of House' Empty Phrase, Declares Court

Like Figurehead; Often Handsome, Merely Wood

HOW and then a state Supreme court leans out from its bower of legal verbiage and actually says something. This happened recently in Georgia when the learned gentlemen of the higher bench declared without even using Latin as an anesthetic that the American husband has become a mere figurehead.

It is hardly necessary to explain what a figurehead is. One sees them riding out in front of ships, where they take all the buffeting of the waves but have nothing at all to say as to which way the boat is going. Their heads, though often handsome, are practically always made out of wood.

This merry little metaphor sprouted from a verdict against a man whose wife is alleged to have driven an automobile into another gentleman, apparently under the impression that he was a garage.

Appeals to Higher Court.

The husband promptly appealed to the higher court, his contention being, roughly, that a man able to control his wife's driving belongs in a museum, not a damage suit, and that he was no more responsible for the casualty than was the mute, inglorious license number.

It is quite possible that some of the Supreme court judges' wives drive cars themselves. Anyway, the gentlemen in the black mother hubbards agreed with the husband, let him keep his $3,000, and were probably restrained with difficulty from voting him a bunch of daffodils.

"By sweeping changes in the law governing civil rights of married women, the doctrine of the merger of the civil existence of wife and husband has been practically swept away," said the decision. "While the husband is declared by statute to be the head of the family, he, like the king of England, is largely a figurehead. . . . Therefore a husband is no longer liable under our statutes for the independent torts of his wife not committed by his command or with his consent."

Decision Will Be Surprise.

Thus husbands have been classed at a bound with the great orders of invertebrates, and will doubtless be given room in natural history collections on the same shelf with some of the less assertive mollusks. To a vast number of married men the decision will hardly be a surprise. This process of devolution has been going on for the last fifty years, becoming more and more rapid with each new decade.

The stern Victorian father who carried thunderbolts into the nursery and was called "Sir" by his wife, is grandsire to millions of yesmen who can hardly call a bridge hand their own.

Not so very long ago a husband was held responsible for any crime a wife might commit if he happened to be nearby. As one of the British jurists said, "It is a legal presumption that a wife acts under the coercion or command, actual or implied, of her husband, and therefore is excused from punishment for offenses committed in his presence."

* *

Principle Is Reversed.

Today this perpetual coercion idea is enough to bring a vivid smile to the great stone face. In fact, the principle has really been reversed. Anybody who has watched a wife flag down one of her husband's coral-tinted stories, or heard her apologize for the way he played the dummy, knows that the average wife feels responsible for all the drawing room crimes of her consort.

There doesn't seem to be such a thing as a balance of power between the sexes. Sometimes well adjusted couples find such a balance, but a look down the long files of history shows that it doesn't apply in society as a whole. The struggle to dominate is as old as the rock layers of the Pliocene era. Women like to rule as much as men do, and keeping the girls off the household throne has always been a task that required strenuous measures. Give them an upper hand and their reputation for sweet acquiescence fades out with the speed of a 10 cents store turquoise.

Henpecked Cavemen.

Look at the poor caveman, for instance. Cartoonists usually picture him as fervently caressing his better half with the midriff of an oak tree. As a matter of fact, say many anthropologists, millions of prehistoric men were so henpecked that they looked upon an argument with a saber toothed tiger as a positive recreation.

Judging from the horror of woman rule that men have had ever since, those early suffragettes must have thrown a fear into them that went clear down to the lowest cellar of the subconscious.

After the fall of the matriarch men used a number of different methods for keeping their wives out of power. Among the less tidy races brass knuckles and bowstrings were the favorite recipes. Some nations found that the only safe way was to keep the ladies shut up behind portals so that they couldn't get together and match samples of grievances. Others let them come and go with more freedom, but gave husbands the right to sell them into slavery if they rated anything less than 100 per cent in deportment. Also, it was customary to marry them off before they had a chance to look around the world and ask too many questions.

Keeping Girls in Order.

Later on more subtle ways were found for keeping the girls in order. When it became a little crude to lock wives in their houses, somebody hit on the happy idea of shutting them in by sentimentalizing the rôle of homekeeper. The highest achievement, however, was that venerable legal growth known as the English common law. Under its provisions a wife had no more chance of anything resembling freedom than Mussolini has of getting a laurel wreath from the Mafia.

Husbands who have a hidden and unused sceptre up their sleeves made a great mistake in not having been born at least fifty years ago. Nowadays the married man who tries to wear a crown around his bald spot is usually startled by seeing his wife pack her trunk, draw out her savings account and fare forth to conduct a profitable tete-a-tete with a typewriter or an adding machine. If you think this could have happened before the common law was modified, you don't know the predicament of the unhappy crinolined sisters.

Job Was No Escape.

According to the old English code a wife had no more personal property than a salt mackerel. She didn't own even the ivory satin gown she was married in or the smelling salts bottle she used when recovering from the vapors. Marriage, according to the law, involved "an absolute gift to the husband of all the goods, personal chattels and estate which the wife was actually possessed of at the time of marriage and such other goods as might come to her during marriage."

This meant that a husband could, if he wished, scatter his wife's money among the night blooming primroses or give it by will to a nest of his own relatives. If he chose to present her family jewels to a lady of gossamer reputation, there was nothing the wife could do about it except have a good cry among the lavender-scented pillow slips.

Escape by means of a job was no escape at all for the mid-Victorian wife. In the first place there were almost no jobs. A lady could become a governess, perhaps, or one of those unhappy shawl carriers known vaguely as "companions." In the second place, even if she did find a position, her husband had a perfect right to appear on pay day and walk off with the stipend. If she left home, she had no legal authority even to take her clothes.

Changes in Divorce.

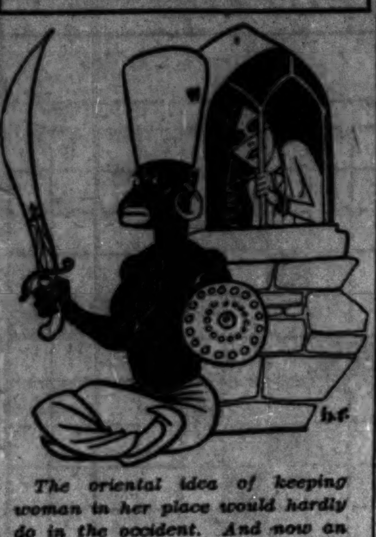
In return for everything his spouse inherited or earned, the husband was supposed to provide her with the necessities of life. The law, however, had a highly Spartan idea as to what was necessary. Boiled down, a husband's responsibility amounted to little more than keeping his wife out of the workhouse.

Divorce in the mid-Victorian age was not the ever-ready poultice for domestic hurts that it is today. A decree fifty years ago was likely to cost at least $1,000. Since a married woman could own no money and had no right even to her cameo brooch, the problem of raising the price was enough to stagger a court magician.

Besides, the law's idea of cruelty centered only around great physical violence. It was not "cruel" to forbid a wife to see her family, to deprive her of access to her children, or even to place a lady of light renown at the head of the table.

No, the crinolined ladies were not to be envied either in England or in America, where the common law formed the basis of nearly all the state codes. It was the age of bellowing husbands—the time when wives were pallid asteroids circling around the more resplendent planets.

BAD NEWS



The oriental idea of keeping woman in her place would hardly do in the occident. And now an American tribunal has decreed that the head of the house is that in name only.

500 Boys on Tiptoe for Air Contest Today

Thrillers Are Due in Plane Tourney Finals.

ited to these tiny planes. From hand launching, such as will be the case in today's competition, a number of the machines have remained in the air for more than three minutes. The record is 3 minutes 28 2-10 seconds and is held by Irving Johnson of the Illinois Model Aero club. Johnson will compete in today's events in the senior class.

Many of the entrants today are boys from the parks and playgrounds of the city. The South Parks of Chicago have sponsored airplane building and air tournaments for the last four years. This system will have more than 150 boys in the competition. The board of education playgrounds adopted the model building three months ago when the All-Chicago tournament sponsored by THE TRIBUNE was announced, and since that time much work in this line has been accomplished, with the result that about 100 of the entrants in today's meet will be board of education playground boys.

When the playgrounds took up model building, directors at the various grounds accepted an invitation from the south parks to follow their plan of building planes, and B. C. Friedman, director of handicraft in the south parks, and V. K. Brown, superintendent of recreation, aided the city workers in organization work and getting the boys started in building planes.

Starts at 10 a. m.

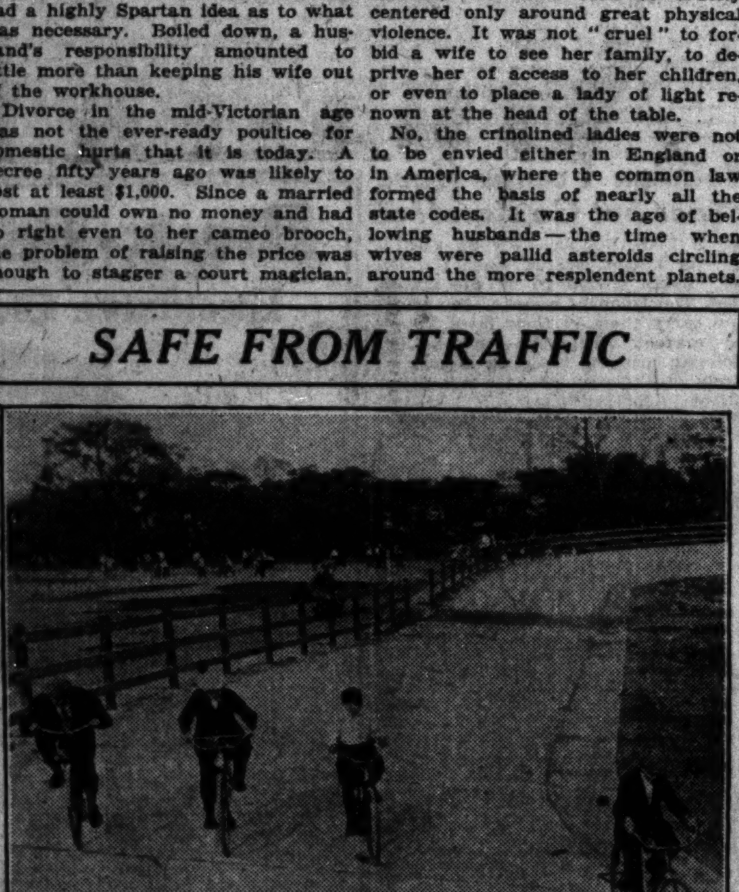
Interest in this model building has increased in the playgrounds to such an extent that Nicholas Malloy, assistant director of the board of education system, has announced that model building now will be a part of the regular activities. Even the girls of the playgrounds want to build models, Mr. Malloy said, and classes for them may be started.

High schools of the city also will be represented in the indoor meet. Harrison, Tilden Tech, Lane Tech, and Crane, have entries in the meet, while the Illinois Model Aero club has several boys entered.

Competition in today's event will start at 10 a. m. The armory will be open until 5 o'clock for competition and a corps of officials will be on hand all day to run off the meet.

No admission is charged. The public is invited to attend. All expenses are borne by THE TRIBUNE.

SAFE FROM TRAFFIC



THE bicycle track in Humboldt park is one place these days where a boy can pedal to his heart's content without danger of being run down by higher powered vehicles. Raymond Eidnkas seems to have the better of this race with Frank Palzin, Joe Gaclan and Earl Affolter, but then this may be only the first lap of an all afternoon session.

Critics Demand Quick Death of Canned Music

PARIS.—(AP)—Something must be done to head off canned music, say the terribly shocked musical critics who contemplate the speedy abolition of the human element in orchestras.

It is the recent excitement over machine-played violins, the perfection of phonographs and the construction of mechanical orchestras for motion picture houses that has stirred the classic ire of the judges of the press.

A commission of censorship is proposed by Pierre Maudru, one of the protestors, to keep out of schools and public places any devices that do not conform to reasonably high musical standards.

He is particularly bitter over the efforts of some movie managers to cut expenses by using phonographs with loud speaker attachments, with speed-regulating control exercised by the projection operator, disregarding the fact that phonograph music to be true in tone must run at a predetermined speed. He fears for the musical knowledge and taste of a generation that is raised on machine-made music.

Historic Havana Church Must Pay a Museum Tax

HAVANA, Cuba.—(AP)—The Havana city government has decreed that Columbus cathedral, once the reputed resting place of the bones of Christopher Columbus, shall be known on city tax records as a museum.

Mecca of the majority of tourists, the famous cathedral, situated in old Havana and now surrounded by modern business life, passes from the roster of houses of worship because, officials say, a charge has been made to all who go within its ancient walls.

Under the Cuban law admission fees automatically classify properties as amusement places or museums. Thus Columbus cathedral must stand its share of community expense by paying a fee to the civil government.

Denials have been entered by the bishop of the church, who claims all fees go to guides and not to the church, but Havana is firm, and the church will be known as a museum.

Indianapolis Auto Race on Air Wednesday

Thirty-five Stations to Take Broadcast.

For the first time in its history, the Indianapolis motor speed classic on Memorial day, next Wednesday, will be broadcast over a national network. Arrangements have been made to broadcast an eye-witness story of the last hour of the race and the thrilling finish. Graham McNamee, veteran N. B. C. announcer, will be at the microphone for the motor race broadcast, and thirty-five radio stations will be included in the race broadcast group, according to plans.

The finish of the race is expected to go on the air at approximately 3:10 p. m., Chicago daylight saving time. W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, will be one of the stations on the chain.

Famous Drivers to Race.

The entries in the sixteenth annual international sweepstakes, to give the race its full title, include Peter de Paola, holder of the track record; Cliff Durant, Jimmy Hill, Ira Hall, Cliff Woodbury, Babe Stapp, George Souders and other stars of the motor racing world. Marmon, Duesenberg, Stutz, Cozette, Miller, Green, and Bugatti are among the famous makes of racing cars to be on the track.

There are said to be two important features to the race this year. One is the keen rivalry between the drivers of front wheel drive cars, and the men with the more conventional rear wheel drive speedsters.

Expect New Record.

The existing speed record, an average of 101.13 miles per hour for the five hundred miles, is expected to be shattered this year, according to the race executives. Speed trials of cars already entered in the race indicate greater speed than ever before, the executives said. Pete de Paolo, who drives this year, holds the present record, made in 1925 in a Duesenberg.

The Indianapolis track is two and a half miles around. The announcer will be stationed at a high point where he can watch the entire course and from there will describe the race. At the finish of the classic he will move down to the finish line and will give to the world the names of the drivers as fast as they pass the finish line.

W-G-N Takes Listeners Back to Gettysburg on Memorial Day

As a feature of its Memorial day program, W-G-N is to present a special half hour program, with its sequence laid in civil war days, that will graphically portray three famous incidents of the time, the battle of Gettysburg, Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and the surrender of Lee at Appomattox.

"Atmospheric" music and continuity will be blended into a dramatic thirty minutes that will bring back every detail of these three scenes. While the announcer unfolds the story, alive with America's most thrilling moments, Lincoln will again walk somberly to the rostrum on Gettysburg battle field, listeners will thrill as Pickett's men charge across Cemetery Ridge, and Grant, twisting a cigar endlessly between his teeth, hands back Robert E. Lee's sword.

Special music for this program, tunes from the civil war days, and melodies the boys in blue hummed along the line of march, are being brought out of oblivion by Henry Selinger, program director of W-G-N, and Alfred G. Wathall, the station's arranger. They are being fitted into the continuity, so that the music will carry the drama of each incident re lated to its highest peak.

W-G-N to Broadcast Gen. Robert E. Lee Program on Tuesday

With its program devoted to a dramatization of events in the life of Robert E. Lee, W-G-N will present a program from New York Tuesday night which will be in the nature of a tribute to the great southern commander.

The famous scene at Appomattox, between Lee and Grant; the day that Lee, refusing to accept the command of the federal armies, turned his face toward his native state of Virginia, and other incidents in the career of the south's greatest figure, will be portrayed.

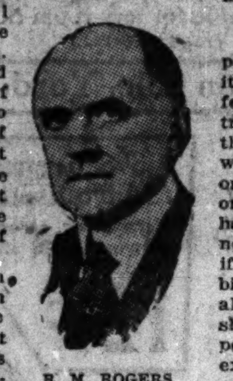
Lessons in Auction Bridge

BY R. M. ROGERS

ARTICLE 10—OVERBIDDING.

The holding necessary for an original bid of one has been given and it has also been stated that all bids of one are for information. It can be added that all bids of one subsequent to an original bid of one should impart the same definite information that is shown by the original bid of one.



R. M. ROGERS.

A bid of one in the third position or a bid of one fourth hand, first and second hands having passed, requires greater strength than a bid of one by first or second hand with this specific exception—to wit: If first hand or second hand makes a bid the partner of the bidder being third or fourth hand as the case may be, does not require for a bid of one the strength required of that position because the partner has already shown by his bid that he possesses a number of tricks that otherwise would have to be assumed.

For example, when first hand bids, he assumes that his partner has three tricks in support of his bid although he doesn't know it. If first hand passes and second hand also, third hand in making a bid must assume that his partner, first hand, has only two tricks. If however, first hand has made a bid, we'll say of one club and third hand can make a bid of one heart, it isn't necessary for third hand to have five tricks in order to be conventional because he knows from the first hand bid that the latter must have three tricks, possibly more in support, of his bid of one heart because first hand has said by his original bid that he had two quick tricks. As first hand will now be the supporting partner, his two quick tricks are to be estimated as four actual tricks in the play of the hand so that third hand can bid with only four tricks instead of the conventional five that he would be required to possess if first hand had passed.

The science of bidding requires that each partner shall pursue the bidding on the basis of the actual number of tricks that can be counted as held by himself and partner and not on how many cards he holds in the suit that is being bid.

When it becomes necessary for a player to bid two over a preceding bid, it must generally be considered a defensive bid and indicates only three tricks in the bidder's hand. These three tricks may be in a six card suit without any quick tricks in the hand or it may be in a five card suit with one and a half quick tricks in the hand, and this is something the partner must keep in mind, particularly if he is going to assist the bid. In bidding and supporting partner's bid, always stick to the number of tricks shown, unless you are bidding for a penalty, which should not be sought except on a rubber game, where, if opponents can go game, they could secure a bonus that would be heavier than the loss you would incur by overbidding. It is often possible to determine from the bidding at the table that an opponent cannot go game, and if so, it is much better bridge to prevent this than to overbid your own hand.

Never overlook that a bid of two over a no trump on the right is not a defensive bid but shows five tricks in the hand or one more than would be required for an original bid, and the player who hasn't five tricks should pass. Neither should it be overlooked that if fourth hand makes a bid over a no trump on his left, the purpose of it is not a request for support by his partner but only to indicate that if the no trump bidder proceeds, fourth hand wants his partner to lead to him the suit he has bid.

There is perhaps no better place than right here to call attention to the average distribution of the suits in making up a hand of thirteen cards. A small percentage of the hand say about 8 per cent are what are known as "freaks," that is with one or two singletons or void of a suit. A little over 20 per cent of the hands consist of two five card suits or three four card suits or a six card suit. About 70 per cent of the hands fall under the designation of normal hands and consist of:

A—Two four card suits, a two and three card suit.

B—One five card suit, one four card suit with two two card suits.

C—One five card suit with two three card suits and one two card suit.

D—A four three three three distribution.

A and C are usually no trump bids if anything, while B is fitted for a suit bid.

A study of these distributions will show that normal side suits of a bidder will permit his trumping the third round unless he hold a "freak" which would permit trumping the second round and frequently the first round. Against "freak" suit bids the opponent's play must be to make the bidder open the side suits himself or he will find himself setting up tricks in the dummy.

Below is given an illustration of progressive bidding, and the proper opening lead.

The Bidding.

S.	W.	N.	E.
P.	1 C.	Dble.	P.
2 S.	3 C.	3 S.	P.
P.	P.

West opens the K of clubs and north and south can make only nine tricks.

A good many people would think that south ought to open the bidding by bidding the spade suit, but south has not the two quick tricks necessary to make a truthful bid of one, nor the ace, king, queen at the top to make a truthful bid of two, and to make a bid of three is a hazard as he has seven sure losers. He can, of course, assume that his partner has the average three tricks which, with six tricks in his own hand, would make a total of nine or enough to make good a bid of three, but such a bid would be too much of a hazard and perhaps interfere with a better bid for the game.

This is a hand where if partner cannot make a bid, there is no possibility of going game, hence he passes. As a matter of fact, if west will open the bidding north will take some action that will make it possible for south to show his spade suit and convey absolute information to his partner that he hasn't the top or he would have made a bid at first opportunity.

East of course has only one probable trick and must therefore refuse to support west's bid unless the bidding reaches the fourth round. West can't bid over three, however, without his partner's support.

G. A. R. Veterans Will Be Guests Tonight at Sunday Evening Club

Veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, who, for twenty-one years, have been guests of honor of the Sunday Evening club's Decoration day service, will be present at the Orchestra hall service tonight, the last program of the present season of the club, although as one of the staunch old commanders expressed it, "we are few in number and becoming feeble." The loyal band hopes, however, that listeners over WMAQ, who broadcast the club, will hear a few strains of "Dixie" from the remnants of the file and drum corps of the boys of '61.

Benjamin F. Affleck, president of the Union League club, and representatives of the American Legion, Advertising post, will be on the program. Fred B. Smith, who has been a key man in many important religious and patriotic movements since his outstanding success with the men and religion forward movement in 1911, will be the speaker on the subject, "Fundamental Patriotism."

Dr. Ludvig Hektoen at WMAQ Tuesday

Dr. Ludvig Hektoen, one of the leading pathologists of the United States and a member of the staff of the University of Chicago, will present an intimate word picture of medical personalities in Chicago's past at 7:10 Tuesday night from WMAQ.

"RADIO CONSCIOUS."

A person who has suddenly become a fan is now politely described as one who is "radio conscious."

Plan Extensive Use of Radio in 3 Ocean Flights

Navy Stations to Stand By to Give Aid.

Washington, D. C., May 26.—(AP)—Leaders in European and American aeronautics are becoming convinced that radio is an almost indispensable safeguard in transoceanic flying.

Preparations are being made to utilize all available radio facilities in three proposed flights over the Atlantic by French, English and Spanish aviators. Commander de Fregate Sable, French naval attaché here, is making arrangements with the navy for extensive communication with the French flying boat on its dash from the Azores to New York this month.

Navy to Stand By.

Piloted by Capt. Paris of the French navy, the ship will carry a relief pilot a radio operator and complete wireless equipment with a range of 800 to 1,000 miles. The French aviation officials consider radio direction finding and weather reports a factor of the utmost importance in long distance flights, Commander Sable says. The flying boat, painted white with huge black seagulls on each side, will be easy to identify, he said.

All radio traffic and compass stations of the navy on the Atlantic coast will be instructed to stand ready to provide the plane with weather reports and other information. During the first ten minutes of each hour the radio compass stations will be devoted exclusively to the service of the flying boat. Operating on 600 meters, these stations will listen for messages, take bearings on the plane and furnish positions to the plane.

R. C. A. to Coöperate.

The weather bureau is planning to give all necessary data and the navy has requested ship and shore stations of the Radio Corporation of America to coöperate.

Navy station commanders have been notified to give similar service to Capt. Frank T. Courtney in his flight from southern England to Halifax. His flying boat will be equipped with a Marconi sending and receiving set operating on 600 meters, and he may carry a direction finder with a range of from 550 to 1,550 meters.

The Spanish hydroplane, which will attempt to hop across the Atlantic in a globe circling flight, will be equipped with radio telegraph, telephone, and compass. The Spanish flyers plan to start late in August.

Allen McQuhae to Give First of New Kent Series Tonight

Allen McQuhae, the Irish tenor who sang the summer series of Atwater Kent concerts two years ago, will broadcast the first of his summer concerts under the same auspices tonight over W-G-N, The Chicago Tribune station on the Drake hotel.

Believing that a radio concert should be arranged with the broadest popular appeal, Mr. McQuhae will sing the lilting lyrics and ballads for which he is noted, including "Absent," "Roses of Picardy," "Little Mary Cassidy," "Tomorrow," "Trees," "I Wonder," and "Molly Brannigan."

"Song writers have unfortunately come under the spell of the dance enthusiasts," he said. "The jazz mad crowd of youngsters throughout the country, forgetting that the great music loving population of America is middle aged.

"The steady increase in radio concerts by the world's greatest opera and concert stars, and the constant improvement in broadcasting generally are marking a swing back to the kind of songs that has gone down through the ages, the old folk songs ballads, and popular lyrics."

Inside the Loud Speaker

BY QUIN A. RYAN.

In the spring the young announcer's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of composing verses. Number one:

THE GOLFING PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

With frowning eye and warning
I have taught my familee
That my golfing tools and baggage
Are invaluable to me.
That the poodle may dissever
All the oriental rugs,
Or the guests may play at soccer
With the bric-a-brac and jugs;
They are free to wreak destruction
In the manner all their own
On the chattels, house, and garden—
But to let my clubs alone!

I've a sassy, classy brassie
Which you couldn't make me trade,
And a flashy, dashy mashie—
Ah, the hazards it has played!
I possess a meaty midiron
And a syncopating spoon,
Plus a dapper, dandy driver
That is like a day in June.
But that was ere the winter
Had descended o'er the lea.
It stalked upon my home, and, O!
The difference to me!

For the clubs I found this morning
Were at rest beneath a trunk,
After all my prim precautions
Just a mellow mound o' junk!
I always lose in winter
My olden bag of tricks,
My stance and grip and putting—
And now I've lost my sticks!
So I must hie and find me
New driver, cleek, and swing,
New follow-through and mashie—
In fact, new everything!

So sings the radio muse!
Now, then, let's have another:

THE LITTLE BROWN PIPE.

The little brown pipe is covered with dust,
But tempting and true it lies;
And the little tin package is red with rust,
And its contents withers and dries.
Time was when the little brown pipe was strong
And tobacco befogged the air;
And that was the time that I thought it wrong,
And kissed them and put them there.

Ah, I'd the aroma of Indic isles
And the breath of the sultan's urn,
And I basked in the glow of the lady's smiles—
But even tobacco worms turn.
O, the years are many, the years are long
Since they vanished in airy—No!
How vapid and vacant my sobbing song!
'Twas only a week ago!

And then there is that racket of getting up in the morning:

THE UP-AND-AT-'EM RISER.

A toast to the spirited riser,
Who carols the coming of dawn,
Who hops out of bed like a geyser
And gambols about on the lawn,
Who somersaults into the office
Abounding in pepper and mirth,
Who yodels a lay at the break of the day—
I think he's the salt of the earth!
(In a pig's eye, I do!)

With early matutinal vigor,
With morning alertness and vim,
With chipper and flourishing figure,
The world is a marble to him.
His zest to be up with the robins,
His 8 o'clock bustle and shove,
His gayety spry and the glint in his eye
Are the elements in him I love!
(Lykelle I do!)

Now me—I arise in a coma;
At breakfast I'm quite a debris.
I grope and depart from my home a
Compassionate figure to see.
It's not until nearly eleven
My energy gets under way—
So I love to have 'round a gazook with a bound
And a zest at the start of the day!
(Grrr! Let me at him!)

Richard Rodgers, Young Composer, on Air Tomorrow

Richard Rodgers, the twenty-six year old genius of musical comedy composition, assisted by an unusual group of vocal and instrumental artists, will be presented to the radio audience tomorrow night when the family party program will be devoted to the favorite songs of his most popular productions, including "Poor Little Ritz Girl," "Dearest Enemy," "Girl Friend," "Peggy Ann," "A Connecticut Yankee," "She's My Baby," and "Present Arms." W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, will carry the program.

The instrumental features will be furnished by Goldman's band, with Edwin Franko Goldman in charge, and by a combined concert, dance and novelty orchestra under the direction of Roderic Graham and Joe Green. Lewis James, tenor, and Olive Kline, famous soprano, who made her first appearance on the radio a week ago, will be the soloists.

Mr. Rodgers was born in New York City in 1902, and since his early childhood has made a study of music. He graduated from Columbia university in 1923. While at Columbia he wrote the score for two of the "Varsity Shows," the only freshman to achieve this record.

Rodgers' first Broadway production, "Poor Little Ritz Girl," was produced when he was only seventeen. His activities for the professional stage then ceased until 1925, when he wrote the first "Garrick Gaieties."

TALKING AND LISTENING YOUR WAY TO LANGUAGE MASTERY!

"How can it be done?" was the question asked by thousands of men and women before the famous Berlitz Conversational Method showed them it COULD be done. How? Think back—how did you learn English? By hearing it spoken and speaking it, of course. If you learned English that way, why not any other language? There's your answer. That's the secret of the Berlitz Conversational Method. Learning NATURALLY, and without speaking a word of English in classrooms. Mastery in months instead of years! Fascinating, interesting lessons. Rapid progress, easy mastery. A free demonstration lesson in French, Spanish, German, Italian, Portuguese or Russian awaits your convenience.

Simply call, write or 'phone Harrison 0392 for an appointment.

We prepare for all language examinations.

THE TERRITORY—Well paying, and exclusively yours. Every concern employing five or more people is a prospect. You call only on top executives.

THE CO-OPERATION—Most complete you've ever received.

THE PAY—Liberal commission, paid weekly. First year's earnings should be $8,000. After that, up to $20,000 annually.

THE FUTURE—The right showing gives you excellent opportunity, in time, for promotion to a substantial executive position.

Can you show a consistent record in selling advertising, books, securities, service, posters, office equipment?

If you can, then our 300 salesmen—many of whom have been with us since this business was established 10 years ago—will tell you this is the opportunity you've always dreamed about.

Show us you are a real, high grade, honest-to-goodness, proved salesman, and we'll show you a proposition you'll want to hook up to permanently.

Write fully, giving a complete history of your sales experience. Address A K 206, Tribune.

A SPECIALTY SALESMAN.

I am looking for a young man over 28 and under 38 preferably, whom I can train to represent my organization in a Central West territory.

One who has poise and can command attention and respect in talking to big men.

This job ought to pay a minimum of $8,000 the first year.

An exclusive territory will be given under contract to the right man who can qualify.

Remember, no quick cleanup here, but opportunity which you will immediately recognize after talking it over with me.

Our business has grown so rapidly in the last 2 years that it has been necessary to promote several salesmen to executive positions and it is these vacancies we desire to fill.

We are interested in securing a man who is through shopping around for a position and is looking for an opportunity to make a lifetime connection and this is a permanent business and the renewal business in any territory we have is worth considerable money each year.

The man whom we select will be given intensive training to fit him for the position, during which time we will teach him every phase of our business.

Please phone Mr. J. O. Wolvin at Superior 0835, at which time we will make an appointment for a personal interview in the event that you can interest us over the phone.

ASK MR. GROSVENOR HOW MUCH MONEY HE IS MAKING.

Mr. Grosvenor was a carpenter. Work wasn't steady. He made good wages when working, but was out of a job half the time. Some weeks he made $45; some weeks he made nothing.

On Jan. 14, 1926, he came with us, and for the entire year he averaged over $100 per week, or more than twice the largest week's pay he had every previously drawn.

For 1927 his earnings with us increased 17% over the previous year to an average of almost $125 per week. In March of this year we paid him $737.96.

Come in and meet this man. Or meet Mr. P., a former machinist, now making well over $5,000 per year, or Mr. J., an engineer, now in the $10,000 class, or Mr. P., who once drove a taxicab and in two years with us bought a home and a motor car.

Meet Mr. H., with us five years and now managing his own branch, Mr. W. S., who averaged a hundred a week the first twenty months with us and now operates his own division office, or Mr. F., who jumped into a $7,500 job with us four months from the day he joined this organization.

There are men who sell over the phone and get twenty dollars per week. There are men who sell behind a counter for twenty-five dollars. There are men calling on and selling a regular trade who make fifty dollars weekly, but there are hundreds of men in our organization who average twenty dollars a day month after month.

In this one branch twenty-six men made over $75 each last week. Just regular, everyday, plain average men, who learned how to sell from us and are able to provide for their families in a way never before possible.

We believe we can take any man from 25 to 45, of reasonable intelligence, with or without previous sales experience, and place him in a position to make at least one hundred dollars per week, if he will do as we tell him and will work. Earnings will start immediately. No investment is required, the work is pleasant, but not easy, and the opportunity for advancement and permanancy is the best in Chicago.

If you want to make that much money come in Monday morning at 10 o'clock and ask for Mr. Gallagher. If out of town, write for address of nearest office.

REAL ESTATE LOANS.

SECOND MORTGAGE LOANS

Had it ever occurred to you that you have no choice with respect to the payment of taxes on your property? The bill comes in—there may be justification for an appeal, but by and large you have no control over the amount of your taxes.

You do have control, however, over the cost of managing your property, including financing charges. Would it not seem reasonable that you keep the financing costs down as low as any other management expense which comes under your control? You may skimp on coal or paint or even repairs. There is a way of skimping, so to speak, on the charges attached to your second mortgage loan.

This bank is agent for a substantial fund devoted entirely to the interest of property owners and aiding them in keeping down the cost of property ownership. With plenty of money, with a board of trustees second to none, with an operating staff well grounded and experienced in all the turns and twists of real estate financing, with terms and other conditions designed to meet the home owner's convenience, we believe the plan offered through this institution to be far ahead of any other second mortgage arrangement offered to Chicago property owners.

The rates have already been reduced three times. We charge, in addition to 6% accruing interest, a commission which works out as follows:

$35 for one year.
$65 for two years.
$90 for three years.

This beautiful green duco car has the rumble seat built in at the factory. It is equipped with front and rear double bar bumpers, spare tire, two Fyrac spotlights, Gabriel snubbers, electric clock, electric cigar lighter, automatic windshield wiper, etc.

Illness on the part of the owner, who is one of our customers who purchased it new in November of 1927, makes it necessary for him to have cash and he has requested us to sell his car for which he paid over $900, for $495.

We can arrange terms as low as $195 down on the classiest two passenger rumble seat car we have ever sold. We will give our own new car guarantee with it.

LINCOLN

Why Lincolns are Available for from $1,500 Up

Possessed of the means to gratify every taste, many Lincoln owners replace their cars from time to time with other Lincolns of different body type or finish. In most cases, the cars turned in have had comparatively little use, and have been cared for by chauffeurs whose principal duty was to keep them in perfect condition. Their intrinsic worth is perhaps as great as when they left the factory, yet their resale prices bear slight resemblance to the original cost.

Before the AUTHORIZED LINCOLN DEALERS offer these cars for resale they are carefully gone over by mechanics of special Lincoln training. The engines are adjusted to the nicety of a fine watch movement. Parts that show wear are replaced. The finish, if necessary, is completely done over. The upholstery is made like new.

As a result, reconditioned Lincolns will stand the most critical examination and will give their new owners many thousand miles of superior motoring service. Yet they may be purchased for the price of a new car of ordinary or indifferent quality.

An AUTHORIZED DEALER nearby will give you full facts pertaining to the reconditioned Lincolns on his floor, together with details of terms, guarantee and service. You may place full confidence in what he tells you. His trustworthiness equals that of the Lincoln itself.
